DICTATORSHIP

From all sides admiration is voiced for the Right Hon. Philip Snowden, the chancellor, who stands unterrified by the expressions of a certain radical wing of Labor. Snowden is strong because like Sir Galahad "his heart is pure", and he has no reason to fear because his action is dictated by sound conviction. Labor which attacks Snowden attacks its friend —to attack him is a bitter admission of weakness on the part of the assailants.

Here was a man the picture of physical weakness, supported by two canes delivering the emergency budget, the repercussions of which were heard round the world—a titantic utterance. He stood his ground as firmly as ever any dictator did for the dictator he deserves in the best thought of the British people represented in the national cabinet. A man so weak that the next day he had to stay in bed while the argument went on over his great budget, plays a heroic role.

It was a time for the hero. The testing time found MacDonald, Snowden and others of the Labor party true to the best instincts of the race, just as it found the Conservatives and Liberals true to the ideal British character when the country's basis is at stake. Henderson, the leader of the Labor members in the House, himself is a proof of this statement.

The situation has developed a practical dictatorship with the proposal of government by order-in-council for a short period of time while the country is getting her house in order. Of course the dictatorship is not Mussolinilike; does not rest in the man MacDonald or Snowden, Baldwin or others, but in the cabinet formed for emergency purposes as essentially as any war cabinet could be.

In some of the press abroad there seems the view that dictatorship is in reality more likely in a reformed democrat than in a Tory or Liberal. Mussolini was once a radical socialist, says the Montreal Star, citing the cases of Stalin, the champion of the people against the Czar and of Robespierre, a member of the Convention in the hectic opening days of the French revolution. The Star explains this phenomenon in this way, "When a democrat is convinced that he is divinely right, and that nothing short of dictatorial powers will get the right done, he has none of the historic fears that restrain your true Tory when it is proposed to him to override the people." But if there is overriding it is at the will of the people's representatives for a brief period of time in a great crisis.

DEPRESSION THOUGHTS

Are people and nations going to learn the sad lessons of the depression? Or will they be the people of old, indulge themselves freely in the next years of plenty and then face famine or shorter rations in the years to follow?

Surely the lessons to save and practice economy have been firmly enough impressed upon every mind!

What an unlearned the lesson to be observed from past depressions is that they do pass away and prosperity succeeds. The scrubs is that the people know of past depressions but know a great deal about the present one which they see all around them.

Probably no one has yet determined just what are all the causes back of the present situation as manufacturers did not have foresight enough to see that the day of "overproduction" was at hand when in the United States was producing three times the average consumption of shoes and boots, so economists likewise can be expected to see far ahead. They can see but darkly though they do catch a glimpse of the light.

The present depression has hit the man in the country, the man in the city, the rich and poor. The man who thought himself the last word of wisdom has been found as demolished god or oracle, whom nobody listens to and rightly so and out of the ruins of many hopes slaughtered in the crash of commodity prices and the slump of share quotations, will come quite a new worldly wise generation which may for a time use a little more caution than their fathers did in the great days of 1926-1929, and then forget.

The financial revolution in which many upsets are happening and new kings of finance will arise, throwing the important branches of money business off their thrones. Never in the history of the world as in the boom days up to a few years ago were so many financial experts offering the way to make millions. The mighty have been thrown from their seat as has always been the case and as it always will be throughout the world of time.

The grievous part of this is that there is actual physical suffering, there is actual worry—as all are caught in one fell swoop of the financial and economic whirlwind.

It is almost a safe bet with all the experience of overproduction, overproduction may occur again, or what is called overproduction, because men have not learned to take one another into their confidence. Like the race of armaments, the race for expansion of business provides itself with food and also dynamite to blow itself almost to smithereens when the spark is advanced.

Will some one come forth and tell how to have a world of plenty and also that of machinery makes production so much more easy why it ought not to be more easy for men and women to live, instead of plenty making life miserable for the many.

THE NAME OF LOVE

By Alice Michaelis

Men have taken the name of love in vain,
As a moon-like glow that can wax and wane;
They have lost the knowledge that love must be Unchanged, through time and eternity.
Though life is merciful, kind and pure.
As quick in forgiveness as strong to endure
They have bargained for terms and striven to prove
The right to reason and barter in love.

But love through the ages is still the same,
Not the flower of a day or a shining name,
For when love the door of a life walks through
That life in an instant is shaped anew;
The things that were sordid and mean depart
And a glamour glows in the happy heart;
Ah, love means pity and power and pain,
And it enters into life in vain!

NURSES' HOME in Brockville is a fine building, one of the many memorials which wealthy citizens of that place have erected out of love for the old home town and to preserve the memory of some beloved relative, now on the other shore. The building is as it should be close to the General Hospital and connected therewith by a tunnel so that the nurses can pass from building to building in any kind of weather without getting wet or chilled. Looked to be a good idea and worthy of emulation in Belleville. Hint—Some philanthropic citizens of this city might donate a tunnel.

THE PANNING that one Gar Wood wealthy speed boat racer of Michigan, is getting from the press of the United States for his action in spoiling the international race for the Harmsworth trophy because he couldn't win it himself, is refreshing. The word "Yankee" is often used as a term synonymous with trickery and the ancient methods of the horse trader, even by citizens of the Land of Uncle Sam themselves, particularly in the South where the word "Yankee" is hissed rather than spoken, in some sections. However, the real sports of the United States including all the prominent sport writers have nothing but contempt for Gar Wood's action and do not hesitate to tell him so in terms as easy to understand—all of which takes a heap of bitterness out of the affair for Canadians when they know that Gar Wood is condemned by his own countrymen. "Yankee Trickery", therefore but just defines a mental aberration which had its genesis there. Like Bret Harte's "heathen Chinee", "For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the Heathen Chinee is peculiar," particularly, Bret found, in the wily Celestials' manner of playing the great American game of poker.

SHANNONVILLE WORLD FAIR abandoned its age-old practice of holding the fall exhibition on Saturday, substituting a Wednesday in the hope of better patronage. For the past few years most fairs have been seeking to shift dates and make other changes in an effort to promote better financial returns. If it is there are too many fall fairs, or is the fault in the management? Reports from both Toronto and Ottawa give mental circles indicate that changes are about to be made in the matter of government financial encouragement to agricultural exhibitions. The Dominion Government is said to favor "District" fairs and if this idea is carried out no doubt Belleville Fair would benefit, being the centre of one of the largest and best agricultural districts in Canada. In fact, Belleville Fair has long since shed its swaddling clothes and assumed district proportions, reaching out for the pinnacle of exhibition greatness of a Central Ontario Exhibition as visioned by the late Tom P. Power, through whose vision and aggressiveness the beautiful Recreation Grounds which house the Belleville Fair were made possible.

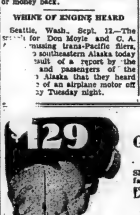
THE TRADER.

The farmer, the fisherman, the hunter, and all others who seek to supply their own wants directly, must trade with one another at least in an incidental way. But such trade is a mere swapping of daily services to meet today's needs. Then comes the man who sees the possibility of exchange as a special means of production. To exchange he must know where goods are to be had and where they may be sold. He stores in plenty to be ready for times and places of dearth. He interprets neighbors to one another through their products and their needs. He creates new demands and the means to meet them, and in so doing enlarges the circle of neighbors. He introduces standards of measure and so makes easy the domination of justice as a principle of the business of the day. His every invention makes a dozen or a thousand, or other inventions possible. His store becomes a meeting place, and allthereby a Royal Exchange. And, where the parties to an exchange cannot meet, he fulfils demand, or accepts supply meantime, and keeps tally. His tally ultimately takes form, or forms—it becomes, on one side, a coinage, with the hunt to follow and, on the other, a system of accounting that is capable of recording the transactions of the whole trading world.

The extended demand for products which his services create leads on to division of labor, to the multiplication of trade and to experiment in new goods. Out of this as a system of scientific research with all that it implies in education and literature. He commands Columbus to discover continents and sends his emissaries to the uttermost confines of every land, and to carry them new and the goods in which they trade and the messages they must send he calls upon wizard of invention to provide means of transportation everywhere.

And, if the trader continues to honor his calling, his calling and himself, the selfseekers who use his name to mask their thievish game of chance and speculation are set aside.

The love of fair bargaining blossoms and fruits in service, so that friend and enemy alike become helpers, become loved and honored men. And the highest ambition finds itself expressed in the words whereever we will be known among you, let him be your servant".—Ottawa Citizen.



Piles Go Quick

Without Salves or Cutting

Itching, bleeding, protruding piles are caused by bad circulation of the blood in the affected parts. The parts become weak, flabby, almost dead. Only an internal remedy can remove the cause. That's why salves, suppositories and cutting fail. Dr. Leonhardt's prescription, HEM-ROID, succeeds because it removes congestion, restores circulation, heals and strengthens the diseased parts. HEM-ROID has such a wonderful record of quickly ending even the worst cases of piles that J. S. McKeown's Drug Store says one bottle of HEM-ROID Tablets must cost your pile agony or money back.

WALKERS' CLUB TO BE FORMED

Meeting to Be Held in 'Y' On Tuesday for that Purpose

On Tuesday evening at 7:30 a group of young men will meet at the Y.M.C.A. with the object of forming a walkers club in order to promote speed walking in this vicinity. Already a number of local boys are interested in this special activity and several of these, who have competed in handicap events give promise of making a name for themselves in the heel and toe competitions. Several local enthusiasts, who competed in the Belleville Fair Handicap 2 mile events are continuing in their training with the intention of entering the ten mile grind, which is staged annually by the Guelph Cross Country Run and Road Race Association in their handicapping programme.

Local walkers will be given the advantage of coaching by Mr. Walkerson formally a teammate of the famous George Goulding and at present in possession of innumerable trophies won by him, while campaigning with his teammate "George". Some of the fruits of Walker Jackson's fine work were seen at the Belleville Fair Meet, where one of his pupils won the 2 mile handicap event.

Already a course of from one to ten miles has been marked out over the Foxboro Highway and prospective walkers who attend Tuesday's meeting are advised to have their uniforms along with them as an initial workout will most likely be indulged in later in the evening.

UNITED CHURCH WILL ASK SPECIFIED SELF-SACRIFICE

Rev. Dr. E. H. Oliver, Moderator, Makes Appeal

LAY CONFERENCE

Rev Robert Laird Advocates Ten P.C. Cut in All Departments

The call to service, sacrifice and prayer was the predominating spirit of the earnest and eloquent addresses which were delivered by certain leaders in the United Church of Canada to the laymen of the Bay of Quinte Conference at the Saturday afternoon sessions of the laymen's assembly at Albert College. The summons to the church to stand united in its strength of God given power and faith; to create and put into operation, means by which the great work of the church shall be carried on in the present days of distress and perplexity and to the manifestation of ardent loyalty on the part of each member, was insistent and appealing. Very pathetic details were given of conditions affecting the spiritual and social life of fellow citizens, even in the many stricken areas of Eastern Ontario. Assistance—great assistance is needed. The appeal was urgent—all for the true spirit of the summons to service is well expressed in Whittier's words: "Oh, brother man, fold to thy heart thy brother; where pity dwells, the peace of God is there."

Moderator Speaks

The principal speakers at the afternoon conference were Rev. Dr. Edmund H. Oliver, principal of St. Andrew's College, Saskatoon, and Moderator of the General Council of the United Church in Canada and Rev. Dr. Robert Laird, Toronto, Secretary of the United Church in Canada.

"The United Church in Canada," Dr. Oliver said, "possesses a great spiritual opportunity. It has a great task committed to it, in the accomplishment of which many groups of workers are engaged but of all these, no group is greater in consecration to service than the active laymen of the church whom he felt honored and happy to address. The committee had requested him to speak on the condition of the church in Western Canada. Last year he had appointed for aid to keep open the western churches. It was hoped and prayer that during his second term of office, it would not be necessary to speak of western Canada's difficulties—but the improvement hoped for had not come. Many parts of that great country, especially the provinces of Saskatchewan are sore stricken; conditions are deplorable. "I love the west," said Dr. Oliver, "and I assure you it is not agreeable to expose the poverty and suffering of her people." To some casual observers, passing through on trains; conditions only seated in observation cars and not knowing, perhaps, the history of the coming into existence of these vast prairies, the country is very uninteresting. "I have often heard them say: 'Oh, isn't it how flat, how uninteresting, big place it is,' but the blazing arc of roof is where the sun comes down to the very edges and you are intimate with the sky. No place else except the sea, is this view possible. A fact not understood by children in the west, who have never seen that vast ocean, so I pity those who have never seen a western sunset." Dr. Oliver has been in the east for some little time engaged in his work as moderator and will be here for several months. In that time, he said, a feeling of homesickness for the prairie comes over him. "I can pray better there," he confided "better," he confided "under its stars and northern lights."

But alas, to the country which he loves so well, which has been so productive in years past, providing wheat in great quantities to feed many people there has come desolation in many areas. For periods varying in some sections from three, four and five years, the hail has visited to destroy the land; no rain—it passed over the "just and the unjust, blazing sun and withering wind baked thousands of acres of land. Ed Sheran, in Southern Saskatchewan, a hurricane has dried great acreage; the soil was blown away like fine dust—like talcum powder. In one school house 210 pounds of fine dirt was removed from the floor—people breathed this. Owing to lack of water, cattle had to be shot. Fifteen hundred cattle, staggering from thirst, were shipped from Assiniboi and many of them died before a few stations were passed. No gardens, not even a carrot grew. The land, which once led in wheat production, a land of great elevators—a land of desolation. There are 128 municipalities suffering in Saskatchewan. "I don't think they could suffer more" said Dr. Oliver, "except upon the Rock." Many people are wearing overcoats to hide their nakedness.

Poverty Exists

Poverty exists in many places such as is duplicated only in the slums of London. An implement collector called on a farmer for money and was shown by the farmers wife, one dozen jars of Gopher meat, which she had prepared for winter use. Food is urgently needed. Car loads of potatoes should be sent from districts where they are plentiful, "to our stricken brothers in the west." Dr. Oliver told of one very small congregation which, in good times had given $2100.00 to the church's maintenance fund [illegible] can not support a manse. [illegible] place, a manse [illegible] ed it by hand, [illegible] ker, a member [illegible] loan [illegible] boy [illegible] Church [illegible] ecutive [illegible] tion [illegible] sed [illegible] enough out [illegible] get another cow [illegible] of the desolation [illegible]ern areas was alarming.

Dr. Oliver, "it frightened So changed—no green a tree [illegible]owing, the earth baked by the sun and whipped out by the wind. One minister getting very meagre support received a call at $2200.00 a year but refused to leave his people. Dr. Oliver visited this minister and commended his great sacrifice.

"You are needed. I told him." said Dr. Oliver, "the church needs you—it is bleeding and will not let you starve." "Now what are we going to do?"

Beyond Control

"The Provincial Treasurer of Saskatchewan, an old pupil of mine, said that the situation is beyond the control of the province and called it a national calamity. I call it God's opportunity and the church's chance—God's Voice calling us. The situation is a challenge to the church; a call to brotherhood—to new birth—a summons to the 'Desert Road.' It is a time of great difficulties but the church must triumph. Courage and sacrifice are needed: it is no time for finch-[illegible] on the part of the United Church of Canada—it is going to respond to its task—it is going to fight all the time. United Church stand on thy feet—and we have a great United Church—I have seen it in action and it has great devotion. We are being called now to make a nobler and more Christ-like church

Dr. Laird Speaks

"What are we to do?" asked Dr. Laird, "it is clear that action is called for. I like that saying of Edward Hale's:

"Look up not down,
Look forward not backward.
Look out and not in
And lend a hand."

"Practical service is called for now —not words only. Look out and see what is needed "and lend a hand"—that is the answer."

"In 1931 the needs of the prairie provinces are much greater. Economic conditions in Canada and throughout the world have not improved. The congregations in the prairie provinces normally gave $520,000.00 annually to the Missionary and Maintenance Fund. It is estimated that they will not give more this year than $300,000.00: that is a loss of $220,000.00. The Home Mission Secretary estimates that from $85,000.00 to $100,000.00 will be needed for additional grants-in-aid for aid to former self-supporting charges. "Courage, faith and sacrifice must be multiplied," said Dr. Laird, "if the United Church is to achieve victory this year. Nothing is impossible if God be with us."

Challenge Extraordinary

"In the light of the grave and yet glorious responsibilities and opportunities given by God to the United Church, the Moderator is issuing a challenge extraordinary to the ministers, members and adherents of the church. This challenge has been endorsed by the sub-executive of the General Council and accepted already by many ministers together with the following recommendations.

In addition to regular givings—offices of the church, appointed by general council and pastoral charge, the colleges of the church to give 10 per cent. of their salaries for one year from July 1, 1931.

Ministers with salaries from $2000.00 and up and manse, to give 10 per cent. of their salaries for one year from July 1, 1931.

Field Secretaries and Superintendents of Missions to give 10 per cent. of their salaries for nine months from July 1, 1931.

Sunday Schools are to seek to make an extra contribution, averaging at least $1.00 per scholar.

How to Be Given

1.—It is recommended that they be given to the missionary and maintenance fund, to maintain the whole work of the church, including the special needs of the Prairie Provinces.

2.—Those who so desire may designate their gifts in whole or in part to maintain the ministers and keep open the churches in the affected areas.

3.—The stronger churches will be invited to adopt for one year, one or more of the pastoral charges in the distressed areas, to the extent of the additional amount required for the support of the minister and the work, including where ever possible, the shortage in the normal givings of that charge to the Missionary and Maintenance funds.

4.—A unit plan of contribution will be announced at a later date

National Relief Committee

While the primary duty of the church is to supply the people in the destitute areas with the services of the church, a National Committee has been formed to secure and distribute clothing for which there is a very great need. Communications containing full information have been sent to each minister; to the Presidents of the Women's Missionary Societies; to the Presidents of the Women's Missionary Associations or Ladies Aid Societies throughout Ontario, Quebec, the Maritime Provinces and British Columbia.

The railways will ship free of charge only to the Relief Committee in Saskatchewan. "All kinds of clothing is needed," said Dr. Laird. "There is nothing in the homes for babies when they arrive."

Through the generous co-operation of the ministers and people of the United Church in Ontario and Quebec, the sum of $1,220,289.50 was contributed to the Missionary and Maintenance fund in 1930 as compared with $1,045,228.00 in 1929, an increase of $85,807.50. All pledges to the ministers of Southern Saskatchewan were redeemed.

The dependence of the Prairie Provinces upon the Missionary and Maintenance funds in 1930 reached a total of $544,000.00 which is approximately one-fifth of the total amount contributed to the Missionary and Maintenance fund in 1930.

"God is in this work," said Dr. Laird, "and it must go on. We dare not close the churches; people are kneeling and need leadership —strong men to go in and out among them and to point out the right way. Let us summon up our full forces—let us go forward to save this situation and enter upon a richer experience which will tend to bather our lives and establish righteousness among all our people and races."

The Conference

This was the fourth annual Laymen's Conference held in the Bay of Quinte Conference. About two hundred delegates were present. Mr. H. W. Ackerman, who is chairman of the Ontario Conference Missionary and Maintenance Fund committee, conducted the afternoon session in a pleasing and capable manner. Dr. Bishop, the Principal of Albert College, in a brief but interesting and happy address, welcomed the laymen to the college and gave them the free dom of the buildings.

Rev. T. P. Perry, Lindsay, the president of the Bay of quinte General Conference, conducted the devotional exercises and in a short inspiring address stressed the great necessity of the Church relying upon God. If it is to present a full gospel in these trying times.

"The church purposes to bring within the family of God all the spiritually destitute, homeless and even hostile masses; to reclaim the virgin soil of childhood and youth; to redeem the most remote souls and to bring into amity all nations.

Prayer in the evening session community singing was enjoyed by all those present. The members sat on the steps in front of the Assembly Hall and the singing was led by the Rev. Mr. Steed, missionary from Ceylon, Africa.

The evening session was opened by the chairman, Mr. W. Ross Strike, secretary of the Lay Association. Mr. Strike moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. H. Ackerman for the wonderful banquet that he had tendered the delegates present. He also thanked Dr. Baker for the address he had given and the officers in making the meetings such a success. Mr. Strike pointed out that the United Church had some of the greatest leaders in Canada, and said that the Laymen of the Bay of Quinte District to get behind such leaders and help them in their great work in the church. He went on to say that the work of the United Church had been a little more heavily upon the church and perhaps after they had their association operating property they could take in the women members. "Each church should have their own Lay Association," said Mr. Strike. "But," he pointed out, "the laymen must take more responsibility if the project is to be a success."

Duplex Envelopes

Mr. Strike then spoke a few words on the advantages of the Duplex envelope system. He explained the idea and urged the churches to introduce the system as soon as possible. He went on to say that the Lay Association must try to maintain the rural churches and nevertheless if they expected to keep the rural districts intact. He then said and he thought that the United Church in Canada should be concentrated on Farm Movements.

Striker stated that the Lay Associa- tion of this district should bear a little more heavily upon the church and perhaps after they had their could introduce the Lay Association ritual to their individual members."

He pointed out. "Not only must they the laymen give more freely to the church, but the pastors also must help promote these associations."

Rev. Mr. Striker. "Every Lay Association must try to maintain the rural churches and nevertheless if they expected to keep the rural districts intact. He then said and he thought that the United Church in Canada should be concentrated on Farm Movements.

UNITED CHURCH WILL ASK SPECIFIED SELF-SACRIFICE

Rev. Dr. E. H. Oliver, Moderator, Makes Appeal

LAY CONFERENCE

Rev Robert Laird Advocates Ten P.C. Cut in All Departments

The call to service, sacrifice and prayer was the predominating spirit of the earnest and eloquent addresses which were delivered by prominent leaders in the United Church of Canada to the laymen of the Bay of Quinte Conference at the Saturday afternoon sessions of the laymen's assembly at Albert College. The summons to the church to stand united in the strength of God given power and faith; to enter into their prayer closet, means by which the great work of the church shall be carried on in the present time of distress and perplexity and to the manifestation of ardent loyalty on the part of each member, was most urgent and appealing. Very pathetic details were given of conditions affecting the spiritual and physical life of fellow church members in the make-up of some areas of western Canada. Assistance — great assistance is needed. The appeal was urgent—all felt it—the true spirit of the summons to service is well expressed in Whittier's words: "Oh, brother man fold to thy heart thy brother; where pity dwells, the peace of God is there."

Moderator Speaks

The principal speakers at the afternoon conference were Rev. Dr. Edmund H. Oliver, principal of St. Andrew's College, Saskatoon, and Moderator of the General Council of the United Church in Canada and Rev. Dr. Robert Laird, Toronto, Treasurer of the United Church in Canada.

"The United Church in Canada," Dr. Oliver said, "possesses a great spiritual opportunity. It has a great task culminated to it, in the accomplishment of which many groups of workers are engaged but of all these, no group is greater in consecration to service than the active laymen of the church whom he felt honored and happy to address. The committee had requested him to speak on the condition of the church in Western Canada. Last year he had appealed for aid to keep open the west-ern churches. It had been his hope and prayer that during his second term of office, it would not be necessary to speak of western Canada's difficulties—but the improvement hoped for had not come. Many parts of that great country, especially the province of Saskatchewan are sore stricken; conditions are deplorable. "I love the west," said Dr. Oliver, "and I assure you it is not agreeable to expose the poverty and suffering of the people." To some casual observers, passing through on trains, comfortably seated in observation cars and not knowing, perhaps, the history of the coming into existence of these vast prairies, the country is very uninteresting. "I have often heard them say, 'How dull, how flat, how unattractive.' The one place I live than the prairie; its road is where the eye can look down to the very edges and you are intimate with the sky. No place else except the sea, is this view possible. As you feel sorry for children in the west, who have never seen fruit trees in the blossom, so I pity those who have never seen a western summer. Dr. Oliver has been in the east for some little time engaged in his work as Moderator and will be here for several months to come. At times, he said, he felt sad homesick for the prairie comes over him. "I can pray better there—as mediate better," he confided "under its stars and northern lights."

But alas, to the country which he loves so well, which has been so productive in years past, providing wheat in great quantities to feed many people there has come desolation in many areas. For periods varying in some sections from three, four and five years, the sky has driven its people from the land; no rain—it passed over "just and unjust" blasting sun and withering wind baked the sands of many of land. At Estevan, in Southern Saskatchewan, a hurricane had done great damage; the soil was blown away like fine dust—like talcum powder. In one school those 210 pounds of fine dirt was removed from the floor—people breathed this. Owing to lack of water, eattle had to be shot. Fifteen hundred cattle, staggering from thirst, were shipped from Asquith and many of them died before a few stallions were passed. No gardens, not even a carrot grew. The land, which once led in wheat production, a land of great elevators—now a land of desolation. There are 126 municipalities suffering in Saskatchewan—I don't think they could suffer more" said Dr. Oliver, "except upon the Rack." Many people are wearing overcoats to hide their nakedness.

Poverty Exists

Poverty exists in many places, such as is duplicated only in the slums of London. An implement collector called on a farmer for money and was shown by the farmer's wife, one dozen jars of Gopher meat, which she had prepared for winter use. Food is urgently needed. Car loads of potatoes should be sent from districts where they are plentiful, to our stricken brothers in the west." Dr. Oliver told of one very small congregation which, in good times, had given $2150.00 to the church's general maintenance fund but now can not support a minister. In one instance, a family living off one cow lost it by lightning. The local banker, a member of the church, could not loan money—on security—to buy another cow. The United Church minister, who was receiving yer plimited support from outside sources, provided enough out of his pittance to get another cow. The first view of the desolation in the stricken areas was alarming." said Dr. Oliver, "so frightened me." So changed—not even a reed growing, the earth baked by the sun and whipped out by the wind. One minister getting very meagre support received a call at $2200.00 a year but has refused to leave his people. Dr. Oliver visited the minister and commended his great sacrifice.

"You are needed. I told him," said Dr. Oliver, "the church needs you—it is behind you and will not let you starve." "Now what are we going to do?"

Beyond Control

The Provincial Treasurer of Saskatchewan, an old pupil of mine, said that the situation is beyond the control of the province and called it a national calamity. I call it God's opportunity and the church's chance—God's Voice calling us. The situation is a challenge to the church; a call to brotherhood—to new birth—a summons to "Desert Road." It is a time of great difficulties but the church must triumph. Courage and sacrifice are needed; it is no time for flinching on the part of the United Church of Canada—it is going to respond to its task—it is going to faith all the time. United Church stand on thy feet—and we have a great United Church—I have seen it in action and it has great devotion. We are being called now to make a nobler and more Christ-like church

Dr. Laird Speaks

"What are we to do?" said Dr. Laird, "it is clear that action is called for. I like that saying of Edward Hale's:

"Look up not down.
Look forward not backward.
Look out and not in
And lend a hand."

"Practical service is called for now —not words only. Look out and see what is needed—and lend a hand"—that is the answer."

"In 1931 the needs of the prairie provinces are much greater. Economic conditions in Canada and throughout the world have not improved. The congregations in the prairie provinces normally give $320,000.00 annually to the Missionary and Maintenance Fund. It is estimated that they will not give more this year than $200,000.00; that is a loss of $226,000.00. The Home Mission Secretary estimates that from $85,000.00 to $100,000.00 will be needed for additional grants and for aid to formed self-supporting charges. Courage, faith and sacrifice must be multiplied," said Dr. Laird, "if the United Church is to achieve victory this year. Nothing is impossible if God be with us."

Challenge Extraordinary

"In the light of the grave and yet glorious responsibility and opportunities given by God to the United Church, the Moderator is issuing a challenge extraordinary that all ministers, members and adherents of the church

GIBBARDS WIN FIRST GAME IN SEMI-FINAL PLAYOFFS, DEFEATING NORTH BAY 9-8

Napanee Defeated North Bay 9-8 in Interesting Game. The Winners Came from Behind to Win and on the Play Looked the Better Team. Fraser Outpitched Rading Although Later Had Twelve Strikeouts But The Issue Was Minimized By Lusty Clouting of Winners. Ab. Young Card and Bentley Were Heavy Stickers for Napanee.

Not going anywhere in particular excepting to provide amusement for the players of the Gibbard Furniture Company of Napanee, the baseball team of that town is now and then piles and doing things and there is a probability, that a Provincial championship will come to this prosperous little town, providing the team continues to serve up the class of ball they have been displaying for the last few months. On Saturday in the semi final round of the Intermediate O.B.A. playdowns Gibbards of Napanee defeated North Bay 9 to 8 in the first game of a three game series, the second game to be played in North Bay on Wednesday and the third game if necessary at Barrie on Friday. A great deal of the success of the team is credited to Ernie Gibbard, manager of the team, and Walter Cerow, coach of the Belleville Nationals, but now showing the boys down east how to get the best out of a ball team. The town is solidly behind the team as over 900 admissions will testify that being the crowd present on Saturday.

Last Reputation

North Bay landed in Napanee with a reputation of being a real ball club but they left town later in the evening knowing, they had met a ball club and believing they would have a hard time taking them into camp. So intent were they on winning the pastime they sent their best hurler to the mound, Walter Cerow countering with his best bet, Doug Fraser, and Fraser was in the game, when it finished Red Rading had been taken to the showers. Fraser should have won further out than he did excepting for a poor defense in the early frames. He had but one weak innings, when four runs were scored on two hits and two walks and after that he was in complete control of the situation. Kinsley at second base did not play as he should have but a certain number of his lapses could be laid to nervousness. The whole team was shaken with fear as this was their first adventure into a real playoff, but the nervousness soon left and they were the hard team to beat in the later frames.

Rading Whiffs Twelve

Rading showed plenty of stuff and he was helped along by the Napanee team taking outs at bad balls. He struck out twelve before he retired and walked three and his successor, Wright covered creditably for his process, while Fraser was only able to make seven whiffs the atmosphere. Napanee inserted their sixteen hits, where they did the most good of the day and Bentley secured off Fraser's delivery, only one was real damaging, that being a double with the bases loaded by Saunders, the second sacker of the visitors. Napanee fielded more brilliantly, especially in the pinches and they knocked off a double play, that was neatly executed. This Napanee team can sure bush them and the long drives aided masterfully in the win. Card on third beat blasted a triple, while Bentley did the same and two doubles, one by Bentley and one by Young were in the right spot. Incidently Ab Young played a useful game. He fielded perfectly at the first cushion and had four hits in five times up to land all the hitters.

Card Is Smart

Young Card played a smart game at the twilight corner. He fielded sensationally and had three hits and a number of chances without a slip. The outfield did not have much to do as Fraser had the hitters from North Bay hog tied with a baffling hook and change of pace. It was ably handled by Dave Slinn, but the lively little catcher could not get into the hit column, but Kinsley made the first play, but came his way, he would have seen set for the afternoon. He fielded the second ball, that was pitched, and had plenty of time to throw the runner out but simply threw it over Young's head and never again in the afternoon did he settle. North Bay showed a fine combination around the keystone sack. Fitzgerald, Saunders, and the pitcher working a quick throw, that nearly caught some of the Napanee base runners flat footed. Booth at third base looked like a ball player and played like one with Turner at first being the weak sister of the infield. The outfield gained work was sloppy, better fielding would have kept hits to smaller proportions.

Trappers Ahead Once

North Bay secured a run in the first and second innings without the semblance of a hit, the infield of Napanee being shaky. Napanee took a two run rally in the first innings but in the fourth the Trappers came through with four counters and it looked to be all over but the shouting. However the Napanees team went to work and came within one of tieing the score with a three run rally. They secured another and then added three more to go well in the lead but the Northerners fought back and came within one of tieing the game up. On the play, Napanee deserved their win and looked the better team but whether they can play before a hostile crowd, such as they will encounter in the north is another question. Mead likely Walter Cerow will use Fred Bentley in the game on Wednesday saving Fraser for the third game if necessary. The box Score.

Current Sport

By The Observer

In reference to Saturday's game, North Bay at Gibbard's one saw a typical intermediate game. There was good, bad and indifferent baseball played during the nine innings. Gibbard's athletics thawed their infield a fright, but in spite of defect, when they overcame a fear run disabilities that looked like in the teeth inning. Gibbards have got a better team than North Bay in the hunt toward the intermediate championship. Of course that does not mean to say that they will eliminate the "Northerners."

But we would say that Gibbards should win the series from North Bay. The main reason being that the "Northerners" have not got a pitcher that can go the route. At least that is his impression they left with the baseball critics who were present.

But one must hand them credit for being sportsmen in the ninth inning but in the fourth the Trappers came through with four counters and it looked to be all over but the shouting. However the Napanees team went to work and came within one of tieing the score with a three run rally. 404 MILES HR. SPEED IS MADE

Flight-Lieut. Stainforth Averages Speed of 386.1 Miles

Calshot, England, Sept. 14.—Flight Lieut. G. H. Stainforth, his lanky body crouched over the controls of a bullet-like seaplane, flashed over the water Sunday at 404 miles an hour, faster than any man had ever travelled before.

Stainforth's supermarine Rolls-Royce S-6 plane, so small that its pontoons look like claws on a bird, set a world record of 388.1 miles an hour for the best four of six successive runs over the straight-away course of three kilometers, or about 1.86 miles, to climax Great Britain's unchallenged lists for retention of the Schneider cup trophy.

Trophy Retained

The trophy was officially retained, however, when Flight Lieut. J. H. Boothman, flying an S-6b plane through the same marathon, completed the flight around the 350-kilometre triangular course at a record speed of 340.8 miles an hour. His speed of 363.1 miles an hour on the first lap was a record that he covered the entire seven laps of the 31-mile course in 36 minutes, 32.12 seconds.

On the first two laps he broke the 100-kilometre (62.1 miles) record, averaging 342.2 miles an hour and he also broke the 50 kilometre record for closed circuit flying.

RACE IS CLOSE IN INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

(By the Associated Press)

With the end of the season only a week away the Rochester Red Wings, champions for the last three years, again have established their way into the lead in the International League's hot pennant fight.

A double triumph over the Buffalo Bisons yesterday, 19-0 and 13-1, coupled with the defeat of the Newark Bears at Baltimore, sent the Red Wings into first place by a one game margin. Baltimore trails Rochester by three games and is virtually out of the running. Here's how the leaders stand:

	Won	Lost
Rochester	86	66
Newark	85	66
Baltimore	91	69

Newark still holds the edge on both its rivals in the all important running for second money. They today were that the pennant might not be decided until the closing games of the campaign next Sunday.

COCHET PLAYS TAG WITH MONTY BAGS

For a time it has looked sure that the former Lyon's ball boy, Henri Cochet, would join Bill Tilden and the rest of the pro. tennis troupe, thus removing from Davis Cup and international amateur play the world's greatest single star of present time. Cochet is not only a great. He is a super great. And his name dominated the 1931 story of tennis for many years passed has been of which is that United States did championships at Wimbledon; that England did nobly in getting into the final of the Davis Cup contest and that France is still supreme among the nations—thanks to Henri Cochet. The French supremacy has extended from 1927 and it is interesting to note that the one human domination of the tennis world is a one-man variety. The United States had her Bill Tilden from 1920-1927. If Cochet does succumb to Jack Curley's professional ball, (and mayhap he has definitely given Curley the go-by by sailing home) then it is difficult to predict where the next world's great will come from—England or the United States. To my mind the choice will be between two men, Fred Perry and Ellsworth Vines. Certainly Cochet picks Perry and Tilden, Vines.

Yesterday's Stars

Rogers Hornsby and Guy Bush, Cubs—Former won first game with the Braves with pinch home run with the bases filled in the 11th; latter turned in second no-hit game of the season to win nightcap 8-1.

Paul Derringer and Bill Hallahan, Cardinals—Held Philadelphia to fifteen hits in double header each chalked up 17th victory of the season.

Glenn Wright, Robins—His ninth inning double against Pirates drove in tying and winning runs.

Larry Benton, Reds—Held Giants to five hits to win 1-0.

Bill Terry, Giants—Clouted two triples and two double, drove in four runs and scored five against the Reds in second game.

Alvin Crowder, Senators— Held Indians to six hits, collected three himself to win 7-1.

Vernon Gomez and Vony Lamott, Yankees—Former held Tigers to 11 hits and struck out ten. In 12-inning first game; latter stole home with winning run, 3-1.

Lou Gehrig, Yankees—Hit 43rd homer with one on to beat Tigers in second game.

Lake Appling, White Sox— His double in seventh drove in winning run against Red Sox.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

None knew when. But a week later, just before sunset, horsemen galloped up to certain desert and foothill ranches and, calling softly, "Tonight, amigo," swiftly swung away. At the summons men armed themselves and saddled their swiftest horses. They rode silently, talking little, watchful, alert. Many of them in a sense were already of El Coyote's men, for they had ridden with his band, and helped them, although no one of those who headed southward that night beneath the silent and ever-looked-into-the-border's face.

Not for long years had the border country seen such an array as met that evening at the "Casitas Azul" ranch. It was impressive, for barely a hundred men had gathered there, but each grim-faced one of them was well chosen. Each had good reason to take the chance of adventure in men. Each had grown to follow any leader who would end it. A varied throng, swarthy, tall, short, blond, with here and there a wind-tanned American rancher—as it was the border country, and deep Mexico. If any of them held by a common bond and in the eyes of each the steadfast gaze of steadfast "no."

Crowning him—the patio of the cantina, they squatted about or leaned against the adobe walls, and as they waited in the darkness, the lips of their cigarettes glowed red. Perhaps for half an hour they waited, then from down the hard-packed road came the sound of horses' feet, and a masked rider reined his way among them.

A rancher standing on tiptoe whispered hoarsely, "Is it El Coyote? " he whispered.

"Quiet, amigo," another answered. "El Coyote does not come tonight. This man brings his message. For the love of God, be still and listen there."

The masked rider circled about the patio, bending a careful scrutiny upon all he passed. At last farther end he stopped and faced them. In the dim light one saw that the jaw was square and clean shaven and that beneath the sombrero clustered thick locks of grizzled hair. Several among the crowd nodded. "It is the lieutenant of El Coyote"—and for a moment the little patio rang with the usual shouts of welcome to the man of the border outlaw's band.

When he spoke his clear voice, in contrast to the grizzled hair, held something of the quality of youth, and the hardiness of youth, too.

"Compañeros," he began, "you whom El Coyote trusts he has called together. There are many among you who are already of our band. We have ridden together and together we have held back the invasions of the gringo. Many of you I know well. We have shared dangers. But it is better that I speak to strangers all. It may be that among you are also men of Mexican blood. If there be, take back our message of defiance to your leader, and remember that with such as you come no parleys.

"Tonight to all of you I bring a message from El Coyote. It would have my say these words: Men of the border, you came here to lead free, happy lives. You came to Mexicans and to live in peace and in peace do we give children grow up among you. What has that hope of gringo been worth? How much has life itself been worth since the horse men of Morelos have come down out of the mountains? Throughout the border there are also many piles of ashes that once were homes. I see a grave here and over mon who were once our friends. And all because Morelos would have this land. Today the government, under Obregon, is at war with Coyote's men. Tomorrow it sends troops against El Coyote and his men. Tomorrow the border men are nothing, for if all the country-side arises and stands behind El Coyote in his fights for him, he will no longer be an outlaw in the eyes of the national government, but will become what today he really is—a patriot and a friend. Already many have joined him.

"The trails are dark a little while before he strikes. Compañeros, if you have red blood in your veins, ride here tonight will follow him in this last great fight of all. Too long we have been fearful. We have let the rough hail-heartedly. We have only resisted when we should have attacked. We have been weak where we should have been strong. We have been divided where we should have been one.

"Bueno," cried one from the crowd. "We speak straight-words, amigo. Tell us what El Coyote will do."

"Fight," called the clear, unbridling voice. "At a certain time El Coyote's banner shall ride at the head and rides against the power of Morelos. All that can be mustered will ride with him against him. It is the people of the border against Morelos and his satellites.

"Pass that word among you to those who are not present. Be ready. Look to your rifles and the bullets in your belts. You will be told tomorrow; it may be a year from tomorrow; it may be a day. But it will be when El Coyote thinks best, but that night we strike, and the next morning silence falls over a land of all this land, or we will have won peace and freedom for the border people.

Gathering volume in the darkness the clear voice made its last appeal. "What is life worth, in a land where we must pay permission only, where our and are burned and our women taken by the conquerors, it is not worth this cigarette that I throw away. But I see a different life. I see this valley dotted with farms. I see it as a land of men who hold up their heads and are free men though. We can have that at a price, amigos. It is like price of a cigarette, but for some it may be the price of death. Which among you will not pay it?"

Silence followed. Then from across the patio a voice in the darkness spoke. "Amigo, Americano, we ary, must we fight them?"

"Once," the lieutenant learn a united people are behind El Coyote, they will embrace, for they have no quarrel with the people of Mexico. And now, Pedro, you, Gan is come among us that you know. He has come to learn if you are ready. Americano," the voice rang out, "what answer do you give now to El Coyote?"

the first to introduce such a plan to their members. Mr. Striker then read his remarks by paying tribute to Dr. Oliver and the great work that he has accomplished.

President Gives Address

President Clifford Sifton then addressed the meeting on the subject of "The Lay Association and Its Work," introducing "A Model Lay Association Meeting." Rev. Sifton pointed out that there was need for such an organization in the United Church of Canada. "Each congregation must have a definite object in view," he said, "and it is through this proposed organization for Lay Association ritual that we have to accomplish our end." The new ritual was then thoroughly gone over by the delegates present and after considerable discussion it was adopted and the committee in charge were commended for their efforts. The ritual itself gives each Lay Association some definite plan whereby they can all work with the same object in view.

Rev. Mr. Steed, missionary on Quirlough from Africa, then addressed the meeting for a few minutes on the great work that the United Church was doing in Africa. He pointed out that the Methodist Church had now been in Africa for over fifty years. Just last summer they had celebrated the African 50 year jubilee and the speaker was one that will never be forgotten. Mr. Steed informed them overall. He told the delegates that it was the influence of the Christian Church that had brought Africa from their savage state to the fine conditions that prevail there at present. He pictured the conditions of Central Africa fifty years ago and then told them of the conditions of today. "Their national life is 100 per cent. better today than it was then," he said.

"Chaulikes is the main thing that had to be taught to the natives," he explained. And it was through the Gospel of Jesus Christ that the change had been wrought, he claimed. The United Church has schools, three modern workmanship is taught to the natives but at present they have not enough finances to carry on the great work that has been started. As a matter of fact they had to close one of the schools this summer. "Send a hand to help the Word of God carry on the great work in Africa" were the closing remarks of Rev. Mr. Steed.

Shows Views

An illustrated address by the Rev. R. J. Scott on the Marine Work of the United Church on the British Columbia coast was the closing talk. Rev. Mr. Scott showed slides of the territory that he was working in. His work is in the communities of the fishermen, logger, settler and lighthouse keepers.

The views were scenes from Vancouver up the coast to Prince Rupert, also he showed some views of the work in Queen Charlotte Islands. He explained the many difficulties that one got experience out on the west coast but he pointed satisfied that some good work was being done by the United Church.

The meeting closed with devotional exercises.

PAY CUT IN NAVY DISRUPTS MANOEUVRES

Application of New Rates of Pay in Navy Under Snowden Budget Stirs Dissatisfaction in Squadron

First Intimation is Given In Statement Issued

SHIPS INVOLVED

Squadron at Present On Scottish Coast Ready For Manoeuvres

London, Sept. 15 (AP)— Unrest in some sections of the navy personnel because of pay cuts recommended in the economy programme was reported in an admiralty statement today. As a consequence the Atlantic fleet exercises have been suspended and the ships recalled to port pending an investigation.

The pay of officers and enlisted men in the British Navy would be cut under Chancellor of the Exchequer Rt. Hon. Philip Snowden's new emergency budget slightly less that of the army, the London police, London's school teachers, and all civil servants from the Premier down through the House of Commons and all the Government offices.

Rare Instance

Dissatisfaction of the kind indicated by today's statement is rare. The most recent serious trouble with enlisted personnel occurred last January when thirty seamen aboard the London, a modern battleship, were court martialled for mutiny. They had refused to work when their officers cancelled a week end shore leave. Four men eventually were sentenced to brief periods of detention, and three officers were retired on half pay.

The Admiralty statement said: "The senior officer of the Atlantic fleet has reported that promulgation of reduced rates of naval pay has led to unrest among a section of the lower ratings."

"As a consequence of this he has deemed it desirable to suspend the organization of exercises for the present and to recall the ships to harbor while those concerned are made fully representations of hardship occasioned by certain of the rates of pay in order that these may be reported for the consideration of the Board of Admiralty."

In Cromarty Firth

The bulk of the Atlantic fleet is at present lying off Invergordon in Cromarty Firth in Northeastern Scotland.

The senior officer of the fleet referred to in the official statement is Rear-Admiral Wilfred Tomkinson.

The statement came as a great surprise to the public which has not had the faintest hint that any difficulty was developing over the cuts in pay proposed in the Snowden budget.

The admiralty officials stood on the public announcement and further information was immediately available.

Cut's Proposed

Among the ships at Invergordon are the Rodney, one of the largest battleships in the world; the big battle cruiser Hood, the battleships Valiant, Warspite and Malaya; the battle cruiser Repulse, and several cruisers Dorsetshire, Norfolk and York.

The cuts proposed in the navy pay have not been made public in detail, but as a government white paper issued last Thursday after Mr. Snowden's budget speech, said:

"The new rates of pay introduced in 1925 for the lower deck and the ranks of officers, were not then regarded as fixing any permanent level. The 1925 rates will now be applied to all personnel."

The fleet manoeuvres were to have begun next Tuesday in the North Sea. The schedule included attacks by destroyers, submarines and aeroplanes and there were to have been night operations-in various kinds of weather.

Trenton Buys Hydro Plant Grants Gas Franchise

Ratepayers and property owners of Trenton approved the purchase of the local Hydro system and also the giving of a franchise to the Ontario Shore Gas Company of Oshawa, Monday, September 14th, when a plebiscite was taken. The vote recorded was not large, only about 25 per cent of the ratepayers registering their franchise, according to information reported from H. J. O'Rourke, town clerk of Trenton.

The voters were asked to approve of the purchase of power from the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission and also that the municipality of the local Hydro be put under the control of the Public Utilities Commission now incorporated in that town and to both of these questions the vote gave assent.

The vote to grant a franchise to the Ontario Shore Gas Company of Oshawa was carried by a vote of 784 for and 314 against while the vote to purchase the local hydro system was carried 338 for and 97 against. Whether power should be purchased from the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario was carried by a vote of 347 for and 62 against. On the question, whether the Public Utilities Commission now incorporated in Trenton should control the affairs of the local system, the voters approved by a vote of 889 for and 122 against.

By the vote recorded for the franchise to be extended to the gas company, work of a preliminary nature in extending the gas mains in Trenton may be started this fall and will be completed to a certain amount of work for the unemployed. The Hydro plant at Trenton is in first class condition and it is understood considerable improvements will be made in the near future.

HALF INCH OF RAIN FALLS IN NIGHT STORM

Effect of Miniature Cloud burst in This District

STREETS FLOODED

Rainfall of Great Benefit to Pastures in District

This city was the centre of one of the heaviest electrical storms early today, that has visited this district this year and Bonnie was slowly coming to hand of the damage wrought. The storm was accompanied by heavy rainfall, in some cases amounting to reports of a miniature cloudburst, the streets of the city running inches deep with the water and the storm sewers being unable to take away the water that came in the meantime, the result being that many streets are in need of cleaning today, caused from the deposit of mud. The electrical disturbance lasted for more than two hours and at times was quite close, in fact some trees were struck by the lightning in the city.

Heavy in North

Apparently the storm was heaviest in the northern areas and to the west of Belleville. The storm started in the southwest and swung to the east, the greatest, later downpouring being coarse, coming back to the north of Belleville and burning itself out in the northern portions of Prince Edward County. The rain accompanying the storm could be estimated value to the farmer as it is needed to put the land what ground in condition. The rain will also put the ground into condition for fall ploughing, in the many cases it being unwieldy and lumpy due to lack of moisture. The wells will be filled up which will be a boon to those localities that have had poor and other livestock. The wells in the country districts have been nearly empty from lack of rain.

The rain had a bleating effect on the temperature. Today it was fresh and cool with promises of more and to follow. The mercury dropped considerably from Tuesday.

Electric Shock Fatal Five Hours' Efforts to Revive Workman Fail

John Wesley Munro Was Engaged at Sub-Station

2200 VOLTS

Young Man Seen To Sag in Belt and Heard Moan

John Wesley Munro, 34, was electrocuted at the Bell Telephone sub-station of the local Hydro system on Monday afternoon shortly after three o'clock when he received a shock of 2200 volts, but he was not pronounced dead until after eight o'clock of the same evening by Dr. W. W. Boyce and Dr. R. W. Tennant, as every effort was made to revive the victim by artificial respiration and oxygen. The body was taken to the Funeral Home of the Belleville Burial Board, where Dr. W. W. Boyce, coroner of the district, ordered an inquest. The jury empanelled convened this afternoon and after preliminary evidence was taken the hearing was adjourned for one week.

At Sub-Station

The victim with his father, John Munro, 412 Dundas street, of the local Hydro system for many years, and Clarence Cook was engaged at the Reid Street Hydro sub-station on Tuesday putting in a new circuit from the poles to the station. At the time the deceased was wearing his safety belt, which probably prevented serious injury had he fallen to the ground, when he got the shock he received. What actually happened has not been fully determined but as the thigh men were working, young Munro was seen to sag in his belt and later started to moan. It is believed the victim touched a "short" but how the "short" caused it will be the subject of the investigation to be held before the inquest is completed.

Accident is Witnessed

C. Gummo, who was in charge of one of the gangs working at the sub, saw the situation and he with others immediately swung into action. The young man was lowered from the pole in a stiffened condition, while other employees rushed for the equipment for first aid resuscitation. Dr. R. W. Tennent was early on the scene later being joined by Dr. G. S. Crook and Dr. W. W. Boyce. Those who assisted in the resuscitation attempt of the deceased were Frank Chapman, Frank Jones, Frank Culligan, Michael Murphy, William Colby, A. E. Hubbard, Clayton Hubbard, Gregory Brown, Harry Broughton, William Phillips, C. Hubbard, Carl Hanna, chairman of the local Hydro system, W. R. Bowerman and Clarence Cook. O. H. Scott, manager of the local Hydro system, superintended the operations and stayed on the scene until all hope was gone.

Morbid Curiosity

Morbid curiosity brought a large number to the scene and it was necessary to rope off the vicinity of the men in their operations. The victim was laid on the ground with plenty of wraps under him and then placed around him, while his head was covered by the coat of one of the men. The motions of artificial breathing were continued for over an hour. At no time did the men complain of shock, and worked until it was seen that death had overtaken the young man. Communication was established with Mr. F. Conley, of the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission and he ordered the men not to cease until rigor mortis had developed on to and that the employees carried out to the end.

It is believed the young man on the scene that death ensued shortly after the men received the

Rawdon Residence Burns Barn Struck by Bolt

Rawdon. Sept. 15 Special Correspondence—The frame dwelling of Mr. Arthur Phillips, situated on the 1st concession of Rawdon was destroyed by fire Tuesday afternoon, shortly after four o'clock. Mrs. Phillips was cooking peaches and in the course of her duties smelt smoke. Thinking nothing she was greeted by a pall of heavy smoke issuing from the chimney. Before the blaze broke out and the house was burned. It was possible with the help of neighbors to save some of the furniture in the downstairs part of the house while the fruit was taken from the cellar. The loss will be $12,000, partially covered by insurance.

Mr. Harold Johnson, a neighbor, has kindly loaned the Phillips' the use of one half of his house and to-day the family is comfortably housed. No decision has been made as to whether or not the house will be rebuilt.

Championships May Be Made International

Deetroit, Sept. 15.—Opening the second day's session of its three-day convention, the National Boxing Association of the United States was prepared today to consider placing world championships on an international basis.

Under the plan, an international championship committee would be formed, consisting of one member each from the International Boxing Union, the British Boxing Board of Control and the United States Association, to be official custodian of world titles.

Labor Believes Conservatives Have Prevailed on Government

TRADE BALANCE

London, Sept. 15 (C P Cable)— The Laborite opposition believes the Conservative faction of the National Government has prevailed on the rest of the Cabinet to dissolve parliament next week and hold a general election on Oct. 15, in which the main issue would be a protectionist tariff.

But the protectionist press believes the pronouncement by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, of a cabinet sub-committee to investigate Britain's adverse trade balance, presages postponement of a general election without any appeal to the electorate.

In any event, the question of a

HUNTING SEASON OPENS

Local sinnpods were early on the scene today in their favorite marsh when the duck season officially opened. From all reports the ducks are not as plentiful this year as in previous years but probably to the scarcity of water in the Western portions. The local shot gun experts expect to get their quota today and from the gun shot reports heard in the lower marshes of the Bay of Quinte the boys are fulfilling expectations.

"Flowers for you, Mr. Dowling," said the nurse as she brought in the box. Dowling smiled and, opening the card which accompanied them, read:

"Better luck next time."

He gasped and fell back. A few hours later he djed.

Twin Dowagers, 91 Today Celebrate Their Birthday

(By Thomas T. Champion, Canadian Press staff writer)

London, Sept. 15 (CP cable) — A fragrant record is attained by the twin sisters, the Dowager Countess of Lytton and the Dowager Lady Loch, who celebrated their 91st birthday anniversary today. They are the daughters of Edward Villiers, brother of the fourth Earl of Clarendon.

Edith Villiers, at the age of 23, married Baron Lytton, son of the novelist, statesman and author, in 1864. The bride was later a Lady of the Bedchamber to Queen Victoria and then Queen Alexandra. Her husband received an Earldom after being successively Minister to Lisbon, Viceroy of India and Ambassador to Paris.

Meanwhile Elizabeth Villiers, the younger twin sister, the Dowager Lady Loch, married Henry Brougham Loch when she was 21. Her husband, after suffering cruel experiences as a prisoner in China, received the governorship of the Isle of Man and later became Governor of Victoria and High Commissioner in South Africa. He was finally raised to the peerage.

The Dowager Countess of Lytton has been a widow since 1891, while Lady Loch lost her husband in 1900.

The funeral of the late Harold O. Fisher, who died in Christie St. Hospital, Toronto, was held from the home of his father-in-law, Mr. W. W. The funeral was held under military direction and the "Last Post" was sounded by the Bugler as the deceased was laid to rest. The many beautiful floral tributes and the largely attended funeral only went to show the high esteem in which the deceased was held by those who knew him. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Fisher of Post Hill, Ontario East, were present from Toronto attended the funeral. The bearers were R. Trelor, A.- Kerr, N. Cliplen, R. Jones of Toronto; H. BULLETIN BOARD

SHOT 300-POUND BEAR

James Gordenier, a resident of Marmora Township, on Saturday last between Twin and Thompson Lakes encountered a bear which he eventually killed. The animal weighed upwards of 300 pounds. Gordenier says he had several thrilling adventures with bears. Three years ago while chasing a bear of each sex and a cub, the latter sprang at him from the height of a tree and a real battle ranged before the animal left the danger zone in which the other two were killed.

MADOC TWP. FAIR

Madoc Township School Fair which was held at Remington was well attended and a good time had by every way. The day was ideal and the exhibits many more than upon any previous year. There was cooking, flowers and vegetables in abundance and the products on the different tables which were arranged under the sheds, which were grew previously to the Remington congregational church, were owned by the school section, seemed almost to be vieing for first place. The showing of apples, corn and potatoes seemed to indicate that the dry summer had not so materially affected the quality of fruits.

The list of prizes was well ahead of other years. There were several cash prizes and also calves which gave evidence of the interest being taken by not only the boys but one calf was managed and led about by a young lady.

The school parade was a hundred per cent larger than a year ago and the banners and uniforms showed much work and interest. The races were well shared and much enjoyed by both young and old.

ATTEND CONVENTION

George F. Cole, president of the Kiwanis Club, Ernie Finkle and Ross Hunter, members of the club, are in Windsor to attend the district convention. They will represent the Belleville Club at the convention and will no doubt bring back an interesting report. Had it not been for the Kiwanis Karnival being held in the same week as the convention a larger number of the members would have made the journey to the City of the Straits.

CAR MISSING

Monday night J. Barron, Sidney, reported to the city police that his car had been taken from where he had parked it on Bridge Street near the old Griffin theatre. It is a Chevrolet coach, 1927 model, dark green color and with broken right rear glass. License number DH-629.

V. O. N. AT KARNIVAL

One of the interesting exhibits at the Kiwanis Karnival was that of the Victorian Order of Nurses. The display showed two layettes, one for the modern baby and one that was worn by the babes of long ago. Neat simple garments have taken the place of voluminous dresses and petticoats in which the infant of twenty and thirty years ago was swathed. A christening gown sixty years old excited comment. This dress had a yoke of intricate hand tucking and a skirt that measured a yard and a half in length. The bonnet also contained a number of interesting and instructive posters on public health and Victorian Order work.

POLICE COURT

The police court yesterday afternoon held by Magistrate Mikel at the court house had a busy session. Three men were convicted of consuming liquor in places other than their homes and were fined. The fine and costs in each case amounted to $26.50.

Another man accused was convicted of having liquor in a place other than his dwelling and was fined one hundred dollars and costs.

A woman from Point Anne had her husband charged with non-support and an order was made by the magistrate for the payment of thirty dollars a month. A woman from the northern part of the county who had been arrested on the charge of bigamy, through her counsel, A. R. Collins, K.C., secured an order for bail.

WORK ON GAS TANKS START

Work was started yesterday on the two new gasoline tanks that are to be erected on the Imperial Oil property situated on South Front Street. The tanks are each 50 feet in diameter and stand 43 feet high. When completed they will hold approximately 700,000 gallons of gasoline. Manager Jack Leachman, of the local Imperial Oil office, informed the press this morning that the work would employ about 20 labourers for a period of at least six weeks. When completed these tanks will be the largest tanks in this district. The Imperial Oil Company intend shipping their gas and oil in by boat next season. This is the reason for building the tanks on Belleville's harbour.

ARM BROKEN IN FALL

In some unexplainable manner Monday evening Billie Gauthier, the thirteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Carmichael, Cannifton, slipped or tripped over a small obstacle in the rear yard of their home and sustained a compound fracture of the arm immediately above the right wrist. It was a very painful break, one bone being crushed into the joint, the other, however, was a clean break. The little chap is feeling easier today but will not be very sorry for a few days. Dr. Robertson adjusted the fractures shortly after the accident.

IMPROVE WATER SERVICE

On Wednesday from eight a.m. until twelve noon, water will be turned off in both the East and the North Front Street, by the department in the operation of providing an extra protection to the people of that portion of the city. The service in that part of Belleville will be improved by the installation of a new 8-inch valve.

SEVEN LIVES CLAIMED

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 15 (CP)—The explosion at the Atlantic Refining Company's new $900,000 gasoline recovery still at Point Breeze last Saturday never knew a day but others lay critically injured in St. Agnes hospital. Twenty men were recovering in their hospital beds.

GRANTS YEAR'S SUSPENSION

Washington, D.C., Sept. 15.—The United States has agreed to a year's suspension of payments on account of the $9,000,000 due United States from the Allied Governments of the mixed claims commission.

tariff, whether it be mainly for protection or for revenue purposes, has become the dominant question at the moment, especially following the Imperial Conference recently in session at the moment, especially following the Imperial Conference recently in session at the moment, especially following the Imperial Conference recently in session yesterday of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce was devoted to a plea for the free trade movement, in favor of restriction of imports.

Trade Balance

The chairman of the sub-committee on the trade balance was interpreted in some quarters as an indication that the Government cabinet has decided to adopt a tariff policy, and that countries may retaliation as a remedy for the country's economic difficulties.

Neither the composition of the committee nor the terms of reference have been made known, it understood in the lobbies that it is to consist of two members each from each party, with Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, a free trade protectionist, and president of The Board of Trade as the Conservative representative.

The Daily Mail declared there is a strong opinion in parliament for a general tariff of 20 per cent on all classes of foreign imports ultimately be adopted without an electoral appeal to the country.

Election Coming

On the other hand, the Daily Herald, now the chief opposition organ, contends that a tariff can not be imposed until the dominions has been consulted, and think that a general election will be held in the very near future. "The Tory faction headed by Mr. Neville Chamberlain," said the Daily Herald, "which is working for an election, has carried the day. Plans are being made by the Tories for dissolution next week and polling on Oct. 15."

The House of Commons last night gave second reading to the government's economy bill, authorizing the government to withhold the axe on expenditures by the Order-in-Council method, by a vote of 316 to 253, a government majority of 57. The bill, which will help the government effect savings of $250,000,000 in expenditures, enters its final stage.

The vote came after two days of bitter debate, especially on the proposal to cut the dole payments of 10 per cent. and make corresponding decreases in salaries and social services.

Rt. Hon. George Lansbury, former First Commissioner of Works, reiterated the charges of other members of the old Labor Cabinet that Rt. Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, had "capitulated to the money lenders."

MAYOR OPENS KARNIVAL

attending the district convention in Windsor.

Armouries Decorated

The Armouries were never more beautiful for any of the previous Karnivals than the one, which opened on Monday night. The color scheme of the stage in white, yellow and black set the whole layout off and many compliments were heard of the arrangement. The booths occupied by the exhibitors at the Karnival were better arranged than in previous years, a great deal of time being spent on the interior decorations. The booths themselves received an extra coat of whitewash, which lent to the picture and the crowd thoroughly enjoyed their first evening.

In introducing Jim Worship Mayor George A. Reid, the vice-president A. D. Cumming, stated that the Karnival was not held for glory or publicity for the Kiwanis Club but was held as a means of raising money in order that the work which the Kiwanis Club has set out to do, could be accomplished. The speaker thanked the City for past favors that have been shown to the club by the citizens and residents of the district. He thanked the Kiwanian Queen for the help they had given and all who in any way had contributed this year or in the years past to the success of the Karnival. Mayor Reid received a rousing cheer when he thanked the Kiwanis club for the privilege of opening the Karnival.

Declares Karnival Open

"There is no question of the club that knows better than I this year that the being done by this organization and I would ask all to be as generous as possible to make it a success" said His Worship.

"The money realized at this Karnival will be spent in the district for the helping of some needy boy or girl. The work done by the club is not a seasonable one, but a work that is carried on the year round. The club is composed of the best citizens of Belleville and they give of their time and ability to further the cause. The work the club is doing in connection with the Victorian Order of Nurses is sufficient to commend it to the support of every patriotan and I know the sizeable cheque that will come to the Kiwanis Club each month. The Karnival committee have put on a splendid entertainment for every night of the week and in declaring the Karnival officially open I hope that both the patrons and the Karnival Committee will be able to enjoy it."

Fine Entertainment

For the entertainment of the guests, the Style Show, always a popular feature of the Karnival was given, and set a higher standard than in previous years. Miss Burgess of Toronto, as master of ceremonies, kept the program moving at a lively pace and had time to tell a few jokes on the side. The singing, baritone, harmony boys, who nightly broadcast over the air from a local studio, sang a few hits with songs. The dancing act which followed was well received and also executed the intricate steps in perfect harmony.

Hardman a Thriller

Providing thrills for everyone, Mr. H. E. T. Hardman, "The Canadian Hercules" worked from bars with his hands, drove spikes into boards with his palms and all kinds of feats of strength and endurance during last evening's vaudeville programme at the Kiwanis Karnival. Beginning with an exhibition of muscular control, that called into play all the muscles of the upper part of the body, Mr. Hardman showed his superb muscular development. This part of the programme, which appeared to be effortless was really the most exhausting. Using his open hand as a hammer, Mr. Hardman drove a six inch spike into a two inch block of wood and then pushed one through the plank. He broke a spike with his hands, bent a short six inch spinner bar into the shape of a horseshoe and finally curled a seven foot bar so that the three separate coils.

As the climax to his act Mr. Hardman lay with his bare shoulder resting on the points of four 1-2 inches through a block of wood, balanced a 700 lb. anvil on a board on his chest and remained calm, while two lusty Belleville men pounded the anvil with twelve pound hammers. Incidentally the welders of the hammer broke the board under the anvil but the audience is still wondering how Mr. Hardman's chest remained whole. No one is thinking of practising the trick in their spare time. The Kiwanis will be changed nightly

Fun and Dancing

After the completion of the vaudeville programme, the patrons journeyed to the lower end of the Armouries, where fun and frolic held forth. Some, particularly the younger people, chose the dance hall and enjoyed the dancing to Charlie Dorey's orchestra. The Karnival will play four nights in the week, with the concessionaires on hand the boards on the other two. The committee to be commended is lucky to have his money on hand the first night as being what has ever been offered and a large crowd was seen enjoying the games and entertainment. The Karnival is naturally came in for the biggest play. Hope there be both and a fair business and some young girl is going to be much happy at the end of the week for the chest is well worth the purchase at less one ticket. Near the close of the evening's entertainment, the door prize a $5.00 gold piece was drawn for and George Hunter, 23 Pare Road, was the lucky ticket holder. The lucky ticket was sold by Belleville men pounded the anvil with twelve pound hammers. Incidentally the welders of the hammer broke the board under the anvil but the audience is still wondering how Mr. Hardman's chest remained whole. ROTARY CLUBS VISITED BY DIS. GOVERNOR

Local Club Had Splendid Turnout to Meet District Rotary Head

SPOKE HERE

Complimented Members For Interest in Crippled Children's Work

Belleville Rotary Club was visited Monday by Charles E. Willoz, District Governor of the 29th Rotary District. Mr. Willoz, who is Dominion Importing Chemist at Niagara Falls, Ont., is making official visits to the clubs in his district and is accompanied on his tour by Mrs. Willoz. Governor Willoz met the officers of the club in special session and complimented them upon the vitality of the club and the high peak of efficiency reached as was revealed by reports presented. Afterwards he addressed the members of the club at Hotel Quinte on the "Past, Present and Future of Rotary", directing a few sharp shafts of satire at professional humorists and wisecrackers who sought to belittle the work of service clubs such as Rotary.

Telling the rapid growth of Rotary from that meeting called by Paul Harris in Chicago twenty-six years ago, from which went forth —that small timid traveller known as Rotary which was to take root in sixty-seven countries and the recipient of the good in the cause of international peace and many other avenues which could never have been even remotely dreamed of by its original sponsors.

Governor Willoz discussed many problems peculiar to Rotary in an optimistic manner and complimented the local club on its progressiveness and community spirit as manifested in its various activities, particularly in crippled children work. As an example of his assertion that Rotary enthusiasm was not waning but growing even greater he cited one of the smallest and youngest clubs in the district, eighteen months old, 1600 population, which has just put over a $23,000 swimming pool project with eighty per cent of the cost provided for.

Death and Destruction In Wake of Storm

Algiers, Algeria, Sept. 15.—(AP)—Twenty-two persons are reported to have been killed or injured and heavy damage inflicted on crops and railroads in a storm that ravaged the departments of Algiers and Oran Sunday.

A water pipe burst at Souma and eight natives were killed. Seven others were caught by a flood at Boukira and drowned as the water rose to a height of six feet in the European quarter. A muddy torrent flowed into the reservoir and polluted 60,000 gallons of wine.

A gaming table, formerly the property of the famous Monte Carlo Pepys, has been found. It was designed for chess and backgammon.

WORK AMONG NATIVES TOLD

Rev. A. E. Haley Here On Furlough From Mission Field

When one has been for some years, thousands of miles away from one's country, relatives and friends, laboring as a missionary among the natives of Portuguese East Africa, it is a great joy to get home on furlough; to enter into the life of the family again, to tell of former days and to rest. All this is greatly enjoyed but eventually, the desire to get back to the work in which the heart is interested, asserts itself, and the call must be obeyed. So it is with Rev. A. E. Haley and Mrs. Haley who have for some time been visiting Mrs. Haley's sister, Mrs. W. E. Knox, 48 Chatham Street, Belleville. Mr. and Mrs. Haley went last to East Africa as missionaries of the Free Methodist Church in 1905. They returned there until 1914 when they obtained leave and passed over seas in Canada and the United States. In 1918 they returned to East Africa and came home again in 1929. They leave Wednesday for Prescott and before long will be actively engaged in the work they love.

"The Interior is not in East Africa" both Mr. and Mrs. Haley assert. "We have shored for so long among these native people that we do not feel content away from them. It has been a wonderful happiness to be with friends again but we will be very happy to be back at our work."

The two children Mr and Mrs. Haley state are very quick to learn. In Portuguese East Africa, the government does not encourage anything in the nature of any content but in South Africa the Government gives every encouragement to this work; in fact the native boys and girls are obtaining teachers certificates at much too early an age for the authorities to necessary to place an age limit at which certificates are granted.

Mr. and Mrs. Haley are leaving by the Ontario Limited this evening at school in Sarnia and one in Chicago. Mrs. Haley's original home was Wallaceburg, Ont. Mr. Haley was born at Breckenridge but lived most of his early life in Sarnia. The headquarters of the Free Methodist Church is in Chicago. There are not many congregations in the Prescott section, the closest being at Frankford.

Rev. R. J. Jacobs and Mrs. Jacobs, missionaries from the same field were in Belleville Monday to say good bye to their friends who are returning ahead of them. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs are camping at Verona in Frontenac county.

Y'S MEN HEAR REPORT READ

Tribute Paid to Newton Thompson, Past President

The Y's Men's Club, reopened Monday evening, after the summer vacation, with a supper meeting at the Y.M.C.A. President Al Walker occupied the chair, while Ted White and Alec Weir acting as Song Leader and Sergt-at-Arms. Albert Adams, a former club member, recently returned to the city, delighted the meeting with some original piano selections, while the main business was the consideration of the report of the Tenth International Convention, held recently at Cleveland, Ohio, which was presented by the club's delegate, George Pauley.

Held, as it was, at the same time as the Y.M.C.A. World conference, at which forty eight nations were represented, the Y's Men's convention was of unusual inspirational value to this service club, which is part of, and devoted to the ideals of the Y.M.C.A.

The delegate brought back a challenge to his club to line up with the splendid work being done throughout the world along the lines of Boys and Young Men's Work, World Outlook and Reliant Attitudes, which are the major objectives of the Y's Men's movement. Quotations from some of the outstanding speakers from China, Japan, Greece and other countries, illustrated the conflicting viewpoints and varying attitudes which must prevail in such a cosmopolitan organization, and particular interest was shown in the progress being made in the new countries which, after centuries of foreign domination secured self-government after the war. Representatives from Latvia, Esthonia, Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia exhibited a keen desire to co-operate with their fellow members in North America, and in was felt that such a convention could not fail to be an important contribution to the cause of International Relationships and World peace.

Tribute was paid to the work of retiring International President, Newton Thompson, of Belleville, who is succeeded by Richard H. McCleery of Washington, Iowa. Appreciation of the delegate's report was expressed by several members, and it is felt that the local club is on the way to higher achievements, and better service to the community, through the Y.M.C.A.

WEDDINGS

CAMPBELL—DOLAN

Carleton Place, Ont., Sept. 12.—Attended by a large assemblage of guests, a most fashionable and picturesque wedding was solemnized in St. James' Anglican Church, when Miss Jean E. Dolan, R.N., only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Dolan, Lake avenue, was united in holy matrimony with Mr. Hilliard A. Campbell of Brockville, formerly of Carleton Place, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Campbell, of Wellington, Ontario. Rev. G. G. Wright performed the ceremony, which was full choral.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attended by a matron of honor and one bridesmaid. The bridal procession was led by the ushers—Mr. E. H. Campbell of Wellington, Mr. M. G. Campbell, of Picton, brothers of the groom, and Mr. E. D. Gordon, of Ottawa. Next came the matron of honor, Mrs. R. G. Holmes of Winnipeg, and the bridesmaid, Miss Eva McNaughton, of Donovan, Sask., formerly of Carleton Place. Dr. R. E. McBroom, of Brockville, was the best man.

The slender young bride was an exquisite vision in a gown of eggshell point d'esprit. Made on long full lines and having a sash of lovely lace at the high waist line, the full skirt fell in graceful folds to the floor and was trimmed with four large tucks. She wore a bolero and full sleeved mitts. A wreath of orange blossoms encircled the bride's head and held in place the very beautiful silk point d'esprit and Carrickmacross lace veil, worn in Juliet cap style with clusters of orange blossoms on either side. Her satin slippers were of lavender, matching the embroidery in her gown and she carried an arm shower bouquet of Joanne Hill roses, lily-of-the-valley and maidenhair fern with lavender and gold ribbons.

The matron-of-honor and bridesmaid were most attractive and charming in their figured georgette gowns. Mrs. Holmes, the matron-of-honor, wore pale ash taffeta made both style with tight bodice.

Miss McNaughton, the bridesmaid, wore blue taffeta made on the same style as the matron-of-honor's gown.

During the signing of the register Mr. Jas. B. McLaren, K.C., sang "O Promise Me."

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents. The bride's table, in the dressing room Mrs. Dolan and Mrs. Campbell received with the bridal party and the guests. The bride, was lovely in a dainty chiffon gown of autumn tone, and pale pink silk crepe. The waist had a yoke of rose lace and the long flowing sleeves had insets of the lace. There were black velour hat with black and white plume, and a corsage of talisman roses and Mrs. Campbell, Wellington, mother of the groom, was becomingly gowned in black lace and satin, the shoes and gloves to match and wore a corsage of American Beauty roses.

Following the reception the bride and groom left on a motor trip to Montreal and Quebec City and the Saguenay. For travelling the bride wore a two piece tailored orange crepe back satin gown with brown shoes, and gloves and hat to match. She wore a brown fox fur, the gift of the groom, and a corsage of talisman roses. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Campbell will reside in Brockville.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Campbell, Mrs. Boyce Witse, Mrs. Ben Bishop, Wellington; Mr. and Mrs. Melville Campbell, Picton; Mr. and Mrs. Burton Elliott, Napanee.

WEATHER AGAIN

The weather is the abiding subject of conversation. It has been dealing with heat but on Sunday evening it provided something else to discuss—tempests and storms. Hot-weather is distressing and it leaves little kick in those who suffer with it, but the storm in its elemental terrors and its ragings is something inspiring, so different from the ordinary run of a boiling temperature.

Of course the sun which is able to beat down mercilessly with its rays is the most potent material force we know of, but by its very manner of approach through light, it is not the sensation that the wind and the lightning are. The sun drenches with its rays and we feel us nerves weakens with the heat; but the storm king acts so like an infuriated man or a beast that it is more striking. Most storms pass and are over while the sun still shines. The storm is but a little, very minute portion of the sun's energy in revolt for a brief hour or two.

FACING A SITUATION

The United Church meeting held here at the weekend brought to the attention of this conference the call for self-sacrifice for the good of the church and of the world. It brought a realization of the need of Western Canada and also a realization of the economic situation which exists today not only in the west but in the east and in every part of the world. As in the world at large the call in the church is for sacrifice.

THE PURITAN

A word, many a word of praise, for the Puritan, has been spoken on Sunday night in Christ Church by the rector, Rev. C. E. Clarke. After disposing of the harsher and darker elements in the character of the Puritanism Mr. Clarke turned to its glories, its sense of the immanence and presence of God, and its great sense of duty in the light of this life and of the world to come. He pointed out that this movement which began at the close of the sixteenth century and was at its height in the times of Cromwell, the dictator, seemed to be losing grip today when the trend seems away from the Puritanic. Yet the world can ill afford to lose the attitude of the Puritan to many things in life.

Puritanism produced some of the greatest men in English history and it produced the United States.

This was one of a series of sermons to be delivered on great religious movements. Mr. Clarke is able to show in his tolerant way how such movements have been a blessing to the race and to the church as it exists today.

A GIANT FALLEN

During his brief stay in Belleville as an owner of the hospital, Stanley Stasiak, colorful grappler known on both sides of the line, made himself known. His lifeless body terminated fatally or somewhat as a shock. Stasiak's perfect development, giant in strength and stature as he was, availed him naught against the lethal germ of infection which brought the great man low. It is the shock of realization that man after all is not so potent as people often think he is. In life we are surrounded by germs of all classes and most people manage to dodge them for a time. But sometimes even the great fall victims.

STANDING TRUE

"Come the world against us, England yet shall stand".

With these words Snowden drove home his budget argument the other day, citing the British downfall of all forces—the words of poetry—to clinch his argument.

Why do labor men, why do men of the world yet find a place for the words of the poet, which some seem to shun as if they signified weakness? Yet these words were the mainstay of any words that Snowden used.

After all the poet is the man who sees ahead of his time, he is the one who puts music into the drab phrases of other men and makes them live forever.

In a great moment, such as when Snowden was driving the nails into the planks of his platform of economy, taxing the lightehearted and fleet-footed who dance, the sports, the liquors, the salaries and earnings, and so on the words of the poet came to his mind and crowned his attempt. Life's great moments people become poetical and musical.

No one dare call Snowden weak or pusillanimous but he does not fear to quote the poet.

Britain is going to sell the R-100. As the Globe says, here's an opportunity to buy a dirigible at a low figure. But what individual will want this behemoth of air devices?

LOVERS OF BEAUTY
By Alina Michaelis

We who are lovers of beauty go
Down paths that the rest can never know;
Only for us the white stars bloom
Like lilies adrift on the sapphire gloom,
Only for us the rose's nod
Brings a thought of the tender hand of God.

Beyond other men we are strangely blessed
In our joy of the loveliness not possessed
In the bliss we gain from a twilight hour
Or the flash of the tossed foam's flying flower,
And we thrill to the whispering sounds that pass
With the wind's light step through the rippling grass.

Ours the secret joy that is keen and sweet
When red leaves drift down at the year's retreat,
And for us, an ecstasy ever new
With the scent of the meadow-lark, clear and true.
As we who are lovers of beauty wake
With a song in our hearts for the dawning's sake.

"YOU CAN'T BEAT OLD ENGLAND!

She don't look good till she gets in a hole, then watch her," remarks Will Rogers, the American philosopher, who points out that the British Government wasn't afraid to put an additional tax on big incomes. They forget politics when they are in a tight place." That will goes on to contrast Uncle Sam with John Bull as follows: "Republicans can't tax big incomes over here for they haven't got next year's campaign budget yet. Democrats still owe for their last three elections."

REMOVING BLIND BEGGARS from the streets and seeing that they are cared for in a self-respecting manner is one form of community work taken up by some service clubs in the United States. And yet some folks still ask the asinine question what good do the service clubs accomplish? The finest work accomplished by the service clubs is not published, which is one of the finest things about the work of the service clubs.

THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE passed through the Transportation building at the Canadian National Exhibition during the past two weeks and marvelled at the wonderful advance made in vehicles for transportation during the past fifty years as illustrated by ancient and modern vehicles placed on exhibit in the building, notably an ancient omnibus, the forerunner of the Toronto Street Railway, and the first motor bus, a Canadian omnibus, modelled to conform with rail transportation. The original omnibus with the high seat for the driver was used to convey passengers about Toronto before the days of the street cars on rails and the date on the ancient vehicles is 1878. Old timers recognized in the sides of the ancient vehicles the master craftsman's hand of James St. Charles, one of the first carriage manufacturers in Canada, and the most noted of his day and generation. These ancient vehicles shown at Toronto Exhibition were built in Belleville by the St. Charles Omnibus Company at the carriage factory of the firm which was famous from coast to coast for turning out high class vehicles, and made a specialty of hotel omnibuses. Mr. St. Charles was an exhibitor at Toronto Fair for many years, and personally travelled from coast to coast in the interest of the firm. St. Charles omnibuses were noted, among other things for having genuine oil paintings as an integral part of the decorative scheme, an artist being on the staff for that purpose and a clever one too. Thus the enterprise and progressiveness of James St. Charles, pioneer carriage manufacturer, carried the name and fame of Belleville throughout the land and in village, town and city where the traveller alighted from train or boat and was met with the cheery cry "Here you for the Revere House, Hotel Quinte, or what have you," he saw at the door of the bus swung open for him the message "Made by the St. Charles Omnibus Company, Belleville, Canada." It is a matter of pride to the family of the late James St. Charles that the St. Charles traditions founded by him are still being carried on and while conditions and styles have changed the business founded by James St. Charles is still carried on with vigor and a capacity for turning out anything in the vehicle line from a baby carriage to an automobile on short notice.

WORLD'S JUDGMENT

Kaye Don and Gar Wood—two rival sportsmen engaged in an international contest on which the eyes of the world momentarily were focused—have done something to clear the air. The Britisher evidently belonged to the old school of yesterday. The American seemingly imbibed the spirit of today. One imagined that victory must be achieved. The other was possessed of the notion that fair play must be spulated. Both "played the game according to their respective lights."

The world has given its judgment. Subtlety, smooth-working bluffage and sharp-play have been metaphorically conquered. Sportsmanship, silence, serenity and a desire to win. And to the credit of Uncle Sam be it said that the most refined, the most caustic, the most condemnatory comments of the world have been passed upon this thirst clash between ancient ideals and modern practices has come from his press and his people.—Toronto Globe.

LINDSAY AND THE TRUCKS

Lindsay people have been brought face to face with the effects of bus competition and the difficulties in the carrying of passengers and freight which the motor vehicles have made Lindsay their home, and have contributed largely to the prosperity of the municipalities in Ontario county town. Latterly there has been a growing feeling on the part of the population, with consequences felt by the business establishments and indicated in the civic revenues.

The railwaymen's organization desires that something be done about this, and, through its chairman, places before the Town Council a proposal that the Provincial Minister of Highways to take such action as is in his power to enforce that there is an equalized freight rate for trucks and railway companies, and a uniform standard fixed for passenger service based on mileage travelled, so that towns receive some revenue from the trucks which operate on the streets of the municipality."

This is a reasonable request, and may be followed by similar action on the part of other centres affected by the invasion of the bus. The attitude appears to be not so much hostility to bussing as such as a desire that their competition with the railways be conducted on a fairer basis. This has become a widespread problem for which the railway railway authorities have at least indicated a possible solution.

EMPLOYING THE DOLLAR

Coaxing in the countinghouse or main street, the dollar is capricious and restraining with almost invisible reluctance. Yet it is the most willing servant. Fire is the most feared and the most necessary. The dollar is the most wished for and the most necessary. Its unwilling dollars insist upon staying at home. Yet, when prosperously every necessity and luxury is to be had at the lowest prices in years, does the dollar refuse to go out into a world of opportunity and welcome await it?

In an advertisement signed by Robert Meighen, president, the Packard Motor Car Company declares that the "very root of our unemployment problem runs down to the unemployed dollar." It is clear that is afraid to venture forth —sometimes through fear of public opinion.

This thought may be new to thousands who have been training the dollar to stay with them until there is another in sight, urging it to extend its visit because they are not sure it will continue to be a regular caller. But to persons more fortunate than others the reference to public opinion will not seem far-fetched. Some noted French critic and author, recently commenting on certain difficulties on the part of the wealthy in their conditions of those who had felt more keenly the effects of business curtailment, M. Maurois pointed out that those who have suffered little in the crisis seem "incapable of having sympathy for him who has escaped the effects."

It would appear that in these observations of a most important cause for the dollar's idleness has been revealed. The calling of public attention to it should pave the way for its removal. Those who have felt the effects of current business difficulties and those who have not can take effective part in hastening the return of general prosperity.—G. S. Monitor.

BETTER VALUES AT HOME

What proportion of buyers really know values, say in the dry goods field? Are there not too many who are guided by price alone and fail to give due consideration to quality?

That would appear to be the reason for a great many of the purchases made in the United States border cities by Canadian residents.

The Sentinel-Review the other day alluded to one or two instances indicating that it was profitable to deal with the good stores of Woodstock and similar Ontario centres, rather than to seek seeming "bargains" in stores advertising in the city country or across the line. Merchants generally agree with this according to Dry Goods Review, which says the former, in discussing the matter, point out that much of the trouble is due to the fact that consumers really do not know values. The Review reports complaints by merchants who feel competition from United States stores, particularly in cases where the Canadian and United States cities are close enough to permit of large advertising campaigns by the Canadian dailies. In some cases these advertisements are misleading, the Dominion Day sales for Canadian customers. — Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

Missing Eighteen Months Is Believed Murdered

Montreal, Que., Sept. 14 (by Canadian Press)—Investigations made over the week end by Provincial Police of Ontario and Quebec, led the authorities to the belief that Louis Turcotte, missing since early in 1930 and believed dead, was killed on the Ontario side of the Interprovincial border and the body concealed near Hawkesbury.

A group of men, four of whom are held in Montreal, were arrested in connection with a series of robberies in the Province of Quebec. Recently police announced one of the men had confessed to killing Turcotte who had been missing eighteen months. Asking upon this story the police searched a spot which the confessed slayer said would reveal Turcotte's remains. Developments over the week end led the officers to believe they would find the body on the Ontario side and that the killing took place there.

British Government's Case Against Geen is Postponed

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 14—Hearing of the extradition case of the British government against Harry Geen, accused of participating with others in a stock swindle, which was expected to be continued in Federal court here today has been postponed indefinitely.

Arguments of Geen's counsel on points that the British authorities had failed to make out a case justifying his removal to London for trial, was to have been given today. Geen had a preliminary hearing three weeks ago and the case was adjourned until notes of testimony could be transcribed. The court clerk was informed today that the case had been postponed indefinitely by agreement of Geen's counsel and C. Planton, counsel for the British government.

Meanwhile, it was stated, Geen will be permitted to live in a hotel apartment under a two deputy guard.

United States Marshals.

Geen is accused of being implicated with John (Jake the Barber) Hodge, of Chicago, and several others in the exploitation of a $7,000,000 stock selling scheme.

SHE WORRIED ABOUT HER WEIGHT

"I started taking Kruschen Salts a month ago. I have lost 5 pounds in weight, and I feel as if I have lost 50 lbs. I am full of vigor, whereas before I was worried about my condition, as I was listless and worried over little things. But I am thankful to say that, were my troubles doubled, they would not worry me in the slightest to Kruschen."—Miss V. Lafferty.

Here's the recipe that banishes fat—one half teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning, for "it's the daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. Kruschen daily means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

Modify your diet, and take gentle exercise. The stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up, and the pure, fresh blood containing these six salts is carried to every part of the body, and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

Women's Interests in the Home

Today's Verse

A TOAST

These be the goods
To a prime man's wish;
A roof and a bed
And a savory dish;

A pipe on the shelf,
A pelt on the floor,
And a rout of ivy
Beside the door;

A field to reap
Or a forest to tend;
And a deep-brewed bowl
At the good day's end;

A lad or a lass
For to light his eyes,
And to dance in the star
His ducal buys;

A lusty friend
In the market-place—
A trust in God
For his day of grace;

And a woman's heart
Of gold, withal,
To his love and pride
When the late years fall.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Perhaps He's Shy

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl who has been deeply in love with a boy for over a year. I have known of him all my life but I have just met him recently. He brought me home from my girl friends house and said he would see me soon, haven't been out with him since. He speaks to me but, when my girl friend called him up to ask him if he knew me, he said he didn't. Will you please advise me what to do?

Lonesome Ann.

Cheer up, Lonesome Ann.—My impression is that the young man was too embarrassed to admit he knew you. Next time you see him, you might mildly twit him for dropping your acquaintance.

Tall Girls and Love

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Do you think tall girls have a chance in the game of love. I am really tall, but am called good looking and am liked and respected, of by all the boys and girls I know. Yet, Cupid seems to have missed me. I wonder if the shorter girls haven't a better chance, even if they are ugly? You know, boys usually like to feel bigger and superior to their girl friends. I am eighteen, so please don't think I'm silly.

B.N.

If you hold yourself well, and don't "slouch" along as if you were ashamed of yourself, I dont see any disadvantage in being tall. Here are some very tall women of fame and marked ability. Such beloved Mary Anderson, of the American stage, Emma Eames, the opera singer; the late Empress Elizabeth of Austria; and Elsie Robinson, brilliant journalist.

He Drinks and Gambles

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl 24 years old and have been going with a young man for four years. I love him and have done everything in my power for him. We have talked of getting married as soon as we had enough money. Well, we have less now than we've ever had.

He gambles and drinks sometimes. Each time he gets in a hole, I get him out. Now I am at the end of my rope. He doesn't love me; he doesn't seem to be able to show us those kind of me. What can I do to make me be happy? Could give him up? I hardly never be happy without him.

B.N.

If a man has these habits before marriage, doctor's general experience teach that he very seldom gives them up afterwards! And don't you think it would be a mistake to marry a man with such weakness unless he gave definite proofs of having turned over a new leaf?

KILLED IN HURRICANE

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

Dear Readers:

Here is an interesting item on cottons for winter. . .

Cottons are making a successful bid for year-round favor. Spongy weaves and bouclé effects in knitted textiles look like wool and are produced in a variety of designs, many of which suggest autumn by their themes of leaves, berries and fruits. Prints have been successfully applied to fabrics never before printed, and Persian shawl and Persian lace patterns are in evidence. Printed sateens, poplins, sponge and mesh are shown in the autumn colorings. Cotton tweeds offer this season a firmer texture, but are pliable and tailor admirably. Diagonal weaves in serge and twill effects are a new achievement, and rough and crepy textures are much the vogue. Velveteens are a high mode.

"Worth has designed a smart velveteen wrap in purple with a sleeve cape on the left side and on the right a waterfall cape. A long point, of pontillion in the back adds its unique touch to this interesting model. . .

"Magal had done a taupe velveteen suit trimmed with a vestee and half sleeves of flat fur. The coat sleeves end in a cap below the elbow and the fur sleeves extend upward from the wrist to join them. . .

"Max has designed a long white velveteen evening wrap, which closes straight down the front as far as the knees and then sweeps broadly away in a curved line, leaving exposed a broad portion of the frock, in front.

"Cotton corduroy, always accepted for sports costumes, has now entered a new sphere, being used in fiberribbed weaves for formal daytime coats. This material in the writer's opinion, has never been sufficiently employed for children's clothes. The reference is not to sturdy suits for well grown boys but the small-tot fashions of shorts and shirts and abbreviated frocks. These may be had in white and pastel shades, washes beautifully, is durable and picturesque.

"A cotton raincoat has achieved great popularity. It is made of waterproofed sunbestia, and may be had in white, light tan and green. Some models are made with capes and some without, but the garment is decidedly smart and particularly appropriate for fall and winter wear as it is somewhat heavier than oil silks and light rubberized silks."

Fashionably yours,
LUCILLE.

Muffin Magie

By Barbara B Brooks

Morning hardly seems to be the proper time to perform magic, does it? Usually wonders of the mystic art are accomplished in the middle of the night by the dim light of the fireflies, the moon and the stars. But muffin magic works better when inquisitive morning-glories peep in at your kitchen window to see what you are making for breakfast.

Muffin magic is very easy! The batter is taken from the refrigerator where the cool temperatures have retarded the action of the leavenings during the night. With a few deft turns of the hand, the batter is placed in buttered muffin pans. Then into the oven they go. The best part of magic, however, is not the preliminary performance of the artist, but what comes "out of the hat." Sometimes it is a fluffy white bunny; sometimes it is a squealing pig. In this case, when the oven door is opened, a pan of golden brown muffins greets the hungry audience.

The art is very simple when you have a refrigerator and the results will make you famous as the perfect breakfast hostess. A plate of hot, crusty muffins will complete any breakfast which you are planning, whether it be one in the middle of your cottage by the lake or breakfast luncheon for your lake rising guests or just a breakfast for the family.

Muffins

1-4 cup sugar; 1-4 cup shortening; 1 egg; 2 cups flour; 1-2 teaspoon salt; 4 teaspoons baking powder; 1 cup milk.

Cream the sugar and the shortening and add the well beaten egg. Sift the dry ingredients together and add to the first mixture alternately with the milk. Bake in well greased muffin pans in a hot oven (425 F.) for fifteen to twenty minutes.

Yield: 9 muffins.

Banana Muffins

2 tablespoons shortening; 1-4 cup sugar; 1 egg (well beaten); 1 cup milk; 2 1-4 cups bran flakes; 1 1-2 cups flour; 2 teaspoons baking powder; 1-2 teaspoon salt; 1-2 cup chopped banana.

Cream shortening and sugar; add egg, milk and bran flakes. Sift flour with baking powder and salt and add banana. Add to first mixture and stir only until flour disappears. Bake in greased muffin tins in a moderate oven (400 F.) 25 minutes.

Yield: 18 small muffins or 8 large muffins.

Bran Muffins

2 tablespoons shortening; 1-4 cup sugar; 1 egg (well beaten); 1 cup sour milk; 1 cup all-bran; 1 cup flour; 1 teaspoon baking powder; 1-2 teaspoon soda; 1-2 teaspoon salt.

Cream the shortening and sugar, add egg and sour milk. Add all-bran and let soak until most of the moisture is taken up. Sift flour with baking powder, soda and salt and add to first mixture, stirring only until flour disappears. Fill greased muffin tins two-thirds full and bake in a moderate oven (400 F.) for 20 to 25 minutes.

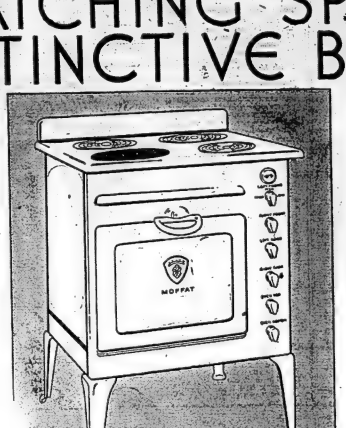
Yield: 18 large or 12 small muffins.

Note—If sweet milk is used instead of sour milk, omit the 1-2 teaspoon of soda. And use 2 teaspoons baking powder. Raisins or dates may be added. Sprinkle a small slice of apple, sprinkled with cinnamon and sugar placed on top of muffin batter before baking makes a delicious variation of the recipe.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Valled

In times past dishes were essential of women who appealed to them for help for beauty ills. Not so the modern medical man. He knows that a defect in looks preys on the mind, that a badly disfigured complexion puts a girl below self-consciousness and the ill-effect upon the nourishment of the body, recognition of worn tissues and the health of the mental nervous system. How a girl looks has a heap to do with how she feels.



Everybody seems to be pouring oil on troubled scalps. Good idea. Hair loves oil, thrives on it. Dandruff is loosened by oil and is removed by the shampoo, if friction is vigorous and rinsing prolonged.

Use one or more of mineral oil or castor oil and olive oil or olive and rubbing alcohol. Cosmetic chemists offer products of their own, all combined with these ingredients.

Give the laugh to lazy women who take to exercise but declare they don't go in for calesthenics because they are afraid of getting muscle lumpy. Even athletic women, those who go in for regular training, don't develop biceps or knotted calves. The truth is the whole statement has its teeth put on edge at the mention of regular exercise. Those who enjoy outdoor activities are doubly rewarded by perfect posture, royal carriage, grace of movement. They'll stay young until they die.

After bathing, spray the skin surface of the body with a delicate perfume. The warmth of the flesh diffuses the fragrance. Perfume lasts longer when applied to woolen fabrics and fur than when applied to silky materials or cottons.

CARDS REACH POWER PEAK FOR BIG SERIES

Have Won Ten of Their Last 11 Games and Look Impressive

WON TWO

Defeated Phillies Double Header, Getting 32 Hits For 23 Runs

(By Clyde Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer)

If ever a club reached the absolute peak of strength at exactly the right time, it is the St. Louis Cardinals. Right now, with the World Series a fortnight away, Cosby Street's nine appears just to be rounding its fullest power. The Red Birds look more impressive every day. In sweeping ten of their last eleven games, the National League champs have been hitting at their greatest clip of the year, fairly murdering any kind of pitching sent against them, and their own mound staff virtually has been unbeatable. Only one Card corner has failed to go the route in eleven starts and they have registered four shutouts, two of them by Sylvester Johnson.

Has Three Pointers

Evidently remembering too well what happened to his club in the 1930 series, when an array of timely wallops by Jimmy Foxx, Al Simmons et al, of the Athletics, beat all his strategy, Street has his men swinging from their backs in preparation for the coming classic. They have swinged plenty, at least, as they took their second doubleheader from the Phils in two days by scores of 12 to 5 and 15 to 8. Of the 32 hits collected by the Birds, eleven were of the extra base variety, including a couple of home runs and three doubles by Chick Hafey. Jim Bottomley, the rejuvenated first baseman, contributed two doubles and three singles to the party's attack. Every regular, outside of the battery, got at least one hit in both games. Although hit hard, neither Stout nor Ribeil had any difficulty going the route.

The leaders were credited with the day's only victories in the National League, rain causing postponement of a scheduled bill between Brooklyn and Pittsburg.

American League

The New York Yankees gave the day's feature exhibition in the American when they found four hits off Vic Sorrell sufficient for a 7 to 1 triumph over Detroit. Sorrell allowed only two hits until no runs until the eighth, when he passed a pair and Lyn Lary and Tony Lazzeri came through with two-baggers, Tony's driving across both runs. Wayne Ross got both Tiger hits scattered in all but the fourth inning.

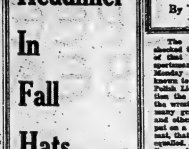
Cleveland and Philadelphia broke even. Willis Hudlin setting the champions down 6 to 2 in the first game and Waite Hoyt, giving some last inning help from Earnshaw, beating the Indians 8 to 7 in the nightcap. Jimmy Dykes' circuit clout, a hit a home run in the first game and Phil Weintraub's blow in the second.

Washington maintained its two-game lead over the third place Yankees by setting down the St. Louis Browns 8 to 2. While Marberry and Hadley were limiting the Browns to four hits, none after the fourth inning, the Nationals' heavy bunched their nine off Walter Stewart in four frames.

Boston Red Sox rallied to score ten runs in their last two times at bat and beat the Chicago White Sox, 13 to 3. Five Boston runs in the seventh inning were unearned, following the fumble of a grounder by Lou Rice, the first baseman. Earl Webb, of Boston, hit his fourteenth home run in the first inning.

Paints Saint John As Coming Great Port

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 14 —Saint John and Halifax, by catering to summer traffic, can become two of the greatest ports on the Atlantic seaboard, in view of the many improvements which have been carried out by the Dominion Government in the last few years, Sir Alexander Gibbs, famous engineer and port authority who is investigating the possibilities of Canadian ports for the Dominion government, stated here.



"There is no doubt that many improvements can be made in every port in Canada," Sir Alexander said, "but that is said of every port in the world. Montreal, for instance is the largest port for grain in the world. Her handling facilities are wonderful, and she is improving these activities every day."

CANDIDATE FOR SCOTT TOUR

"Bill" Somers, one of Canada's outstanding centre halves in soccer, is being talked of as a candidate for the all-star team which may be sent to Scotland next year, provided the Dominion Football Association agrees. Somers, who is captain of the Toronto Scottish, 1931 Dominion finalists, comes of good old country football stock, his father having performed with Glasgow Celtic for ten years. In 1906 he played for Scotland against England in an international match in Glasgow, as at present participating in professional football in Ireland. Swimming, golf and tennis are other athletic hobbies of this young Scotch-Canadian. Hockey is by all odds his favorite among Canadian sports. "It's the fastest of them all," he says.

Current Sport

By The Observer

The sporting world was shocked to hear of the passing of that great lover of sport-sportsman, Stanley Staniak, on Monday morning. Staniak, known to the sport fans as the Polish Lion, was without question the greatest showman in the wrestling business. By his many postures, grunts, faces and other manoeuvres he could put on a show, on the wrestling mat, that perhaps will never be equalled. At any rate the wrestling world has lost its greatest showman.

We notice that Peterboro has got the wrestling "bug", Thby are staging a weekly wrestling and boxing bout in the Lit Lock City. Which reminds us of the fact that the local promoters are doing everything in their power in order to give Hog heaven fans a real smart card in the City Hall this month. It is to be along the lines of an inter-city bout between Kingston and Belleville. They are trying to have eight bouts billed on the program.

The game of games is to be played at the Bay of Quinte Country Club on Friday afternoon, of this week, when the annual golf match between the local doctors and lawyers is scheduled to take place. This match has been an annual affair for the past few years. The students of the law won in '29 and '30 but the medicine boys are out for revenge this year. The trophy is a low dinner for the winners at the expence of the losers. The local doctors say that their learned friends' have had enough free meals in the past decade. So Friday's match looks like a real battle.

This is on the q. t.; Danse Kennon has it that the lawyers are out scouring for a couple of "ringers". Now watch the fur fly.

Tomorrow Gilbards, of Napanee, play the return game in North Bay. They leave by special Pullman car this evening and will arrive in the North country late tomorrow morning. It is expected that Fred Sentner will get the call for pitching duty while big 'Ken' Wright will no doubt start on the mound for the Northerners.

Talking of hits considerables Gilbards should return home winners of the series. But in baseball nothing is assured and the best way is to try and win the games on the series. There is an old saying "one at a time is good fielding, this also applies to baseball. The eyes of the baseball fans, of Eastern Ontario, are on Gilbards Athletics they are the only hope of the east now.

It might be well to know that a boy who learnt his baseball in Belleville is playing first base for the Gilbard Athletics. He is none other than Jack Young who for some years starred at Wells Junior baseball and hockey. "Ab" is doing a smart job at first base and is a credit to the team. The local fans will remember him as a pitcher, when he starred for both the Moose Juniors and the Belleville Nationals.

Applications for tickets to the 1932 Olympic games in Los Angeles, Cal., have been received from 21 nations. The largest number of applications have come from Germany, Japan, Austria, Spain, Canada and Mexico. Although many have also been received from South American countries.

More than $11,000,000 was spent by baseball's probably 12,000,000 baseball fans to witness played by the American league games last year.

FIRE FOLLOWS HURRICANE AT BR. HONDURAS

Threatens to Complete Destruction Caused by Storm and Flood

Belize, British Honduras, Sept. 14 (AP)—Fire threatened to complete the destruction of storm and flood today as the work of burying and cremating the dead from last week's hurricane, now estimated at more than a thousand, went forward.

The suburb of Mesopotamia was menaced by flames that spread rapidly in spite of unceasing efforts on the part of soldiers and civilians to block their path. An inflammable liquor warehouse was in the path of the conflagration and fears of an explosion spurred the fighters to frantic measures.

Scores of bodies were burned on the great pyres almost in the centre of the once-flourishing city, now in ruins. At least 700 bodies were buried in crude trenches dug on the cemetery by convict labour. Still curals check of the dead impossible. more bodies floating down the river from the interior made an accurate check impossible because of the fear of disease.

Squads of volunteer laborers worked under the direction of Honduran soldiers to clear away the tangled wreckage of what once were homes and stores. Business was paralyzed and all manner of activity was subordinated to the work of relief.

Thousands Treated

Hundreds of those maimed and cut by the fury of the storm were being treated with medical aid rushed by aeroplane and ship. The U. S. S. Swan and the Sacramento are among the mercy ships on the scene. The British ship Danae is en route with additional food and medicine.

A shortage of food and water was feared for a time but the arrival of relief expeditions partially remedied the situation. Authorities were of the opinion that troops had things well in hand and there would be no food riots or looting.

A survey of the city by air showed that not a building was left unmarred. More than a dozen ships were piled upon the shore along the waterfront. The Wrigley Company building, centre of the Chicle Industry in this section, was demolished and the customs house was badly damaged. Many houses were torn from their foundations and hurled into the streets.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

Absolute hush fell. From out of the darkness sounded the clink of a horse's hoofs on the flagstones. Slowly a powerful white horse emerged from among the shadows, and a rider, masked and muffled in a heavy cloak, rode into the patio. Twice he circled amid the deathlike silence, then raised a gloved hand high in silent greeting.

The spell of silence snapped. Like a single voice rose the great chorus of men's voices, shouting wild welcome to this leader of the border band. The night thundered with the sound; the little cantina trembled, and far out over the desert rolled the cheers of these men of the Mexican border, pledging life and loyalty to the unknown leader. For long minutes the shouts echoed and reëchoed, filling the patio, then it seemed, to the very stars; then slowly the masked man turned his horse and the men knew the final shadow faded into the velvet night.

Slowly the multitude grew silent and turned once more expectant faces to the speaker.

His voice held an exultant ring. "Men of the border, you have answered. Go back now to your ranches and haciendas, for a good courage, and wait for the word. No man can make slaves of a free people. Go back to your hoes and be very sure that each day brings nearer the time when the clouds of Morales's power will be forever scattered."

He raised his arm in farewell and rode out into the desert.

Dawn was touching the mesa with color when a sentry horseman dismounted and hurried inside the hacienda of Don Morales.

At his desk the old Spaniard raised his eyes. "Well, Alvarez, Jito," he asked,

"They held a meeting. Two of my men were there. They are making ready to attack."

"Attack? Those insolent dogs."

"Sí. They say they are tired of defending their city and strike. Next my greatest news,—is this—El Coyote himself was there."

"Caramba! What did he look like? Was he recognized?"

Jito hesitated. "No. He rode his great white horse. He spoke no word they say, and yet"—again he hesitated—"it may be we shall find out, my master."

"You have an idea?"

"No thought only, not worth the speaking. But be sure of this, my uncle, we must end El Coyote's life or your power over the land is lost forever."

Morales nodded. "Life is a matter of stern necessities." He shrugged his shoulders. "I fear there are so many lives in the world."

CHAPTER IX.

Ted and Bob were leaving for the great fiesta of Paso Morales—the Fiesta of the Rains.

From the foothills to the north horizon all the desert world had burst into bloom that April day. A soft haze touched the Mexican hills with the promise of returning spring while slowly the two men jolted over the rutted road.

At the end of an hour Bob pointed. "Behold the edge of the mesa is the hacienda of our all-powerful Don Paco Morales," he said.

Ted looked and grinned. "I'll say it is!" And at the rate we're crawling it will be Spring a week before we get there."

"Try to beat twenty miles an hour over this Mexican cow trail and see how many springs you have left. Besides, why all the gesture of impetuous youth? You're being blessed with my company and the world's sunshine. Why so eager for the journey's end? Any special reason?"

Ted laughed. "You're worse than the major's wife with your genial way of inferring possibilities. Should I blush becomingly and say 'Don Bob, I have a confession. I'm longing to see the lady Adela'?"

"Maybe. And maybe your smoke screen is hinting me completely into a question."

Ted's face grew thoughtful. "Well, part of the truth is I'm eager to see Morales again. It may be interesting to be the guest of the man who ruined my father and changed my life so profoundly he did."

"Morales will give no sign of all that."

"Suppose I make him?"

"How?"

"By talking about it. What would you say if I ask a question?"

Bob looked searchingly at Radcliffe, then nodded. "Worth trying. But remember, you're dealing with one of the keenest brains of Mexico. Life is a game of chess to Morales. I think he could easily beat both of us at intrigue. But talk to him. You may gain something, perhaps."

"And in my present condition it's hard to see how I could lose anything in the world today—except Radcliffe added in a lower voice, "your friendship. I could never afford to lose that. I haven't forgotten how much that's meant to me."

Don Bob looked at the tanned face and the clear steady eyes. "What a precious thing youth is," he said at last. "Youth and courage." After a moment he added, "That's my manner of saying that I'm proud of the way you've taken it all."

"There was no other way."

"Oh yes. You might have been bitter. You might have played the martyr. Or you might have sworn revenge."

"And what makes you think I haven't plans for revenge?"

Have you?"

"The little car bumped along for a time before the boy answered. "When I listened to Pedro I felt I'd like to break the power of that octopus—to end the evil it symbolizes and divide his million acres among the people. I'd like to grind that chief bully's face into this land. Just now it would give me a lot of satisfaction to do those things. Is that revenge, Don Bob?"

"Well, it's distinctly unfriendly feeling toward one's host. Also, it sounds a bit like El Coyote's ambition. But look ahead of you."

Ted looked. There, where the road turned at the edge of the mesa, loomed a tall granite crest. It cast its long shadow across the road, standing out dark and austere against the blue vault of the sky. The only sign of man's handiwork out there on the rim of the desert.

For a time Bob's eyes were fixed in meditation. "The Cross of the Conquerors," he murmured at last. "Symbol of the spirit of man's life, that cross. Hundreds of years ago it was erected by these lonely Spaniards who made a nation of this country. No one knows what it commemorates—a battle, a sacrificial mass, but winds and sand have obliterated it.

"What is that long slab at the base?"

"It covers an empty vault—empty except for shifting sands. That, too, is part of its mystery. In the days when the peons were owned by their masters a legend grew up that this vault was to be the resting place of some awaited Emperor of the people. Well, they were liberated, so far as laws go, but the basic law hasn't greatly changed—and the vault remains empty."

Bob drove on a few feet to the very edge of the mesa. He pointed out the high, prairie dog's dreadful things, there's the hacienda of Morales.

Bob had stopped the car where the mesa sloped abruptly down toward the valley. Ted's lips parted in an exclamation of pleasure and surprise. It was as if in all that world of sterile sand and cactus, one had suddenly come upon a valley where green trees waved and the homes of men clustered around a silver, slowly flowing river. From somewhere out there a faint breeze brought green, twisting and twining upon itself, had at last reached the mesa's edge. Below him its farther bank lay little docs of red-tiled roofs and yellow adobe walls. The crowding village—a dozen low buildings sprawled together on watered grass. Beyond, nothing but desert, with its ascending heat waves shimmering in the sun to where, far beyond, the purple hills rose, impressively even at that distance unfathomed. Somewhere out there, Ted was thinking, El Coyote had his being. Somewhere out there, laying his plans, gathering his men, and in the night swooping down upon the valley. And here, before him, lay the stronghold of the enemy. In the distance a dog barked faintly. A horseman trotted down to the river bank nearest the ranchhouse.

"Siesta time," murmured Don Bob. "Otherwise we would see more activity. We come five miles to this yearly feast of Morales. There will be music and dancing, probably much drinking, horse racing and all the things that mean a feast day."

"You don't seem greatly in sympathy with it."

"I love color and melodrama and romance. You'll see it all here. But Radcliffe, there's a little too. For peon or later—perhaps sooner than we suspect—the world-weary Saturday world of theirs will be as dead as the days of the old Spanish conquerors. Out here Morales has planned his life, and he'll require to take you back to those days. The careful courtesy, the great leisure, the very way he lives and thinks. And it is very beautiful and colorful and—quite impossible."

Leaning forward Don Bob threw the car into gear. "Now for some skilful herding of this eight-cylinder stallion, and other things befall."

Slowly they bumped along the narrow road over the mesa's edge.

CHAPTER X.

This house is yours, Senores, burn it if you will."

Morales's white sombrero touched the ground. The Americans bowed in response to the old Spanish phrase of welcome. In wondering surprise Ted looked about him. It was, as Bob had said, a place of surpassing loveliness—a few acres of paradise in the heart of the great desert.

Before them lowered a black iron gate, and beyond it the shadows of tall trees touched cool yellow walls and the red tiled roof of the old hacienda. It rambled, with low eaves and jutting wings that may have been added as successive years grew rich of its master grew in wealth and importance. Beyond were a dozen smaller buildings, each one a model of the same artistry, all grouped under the high protecting wall that seemed to fix so firm a line between this shaded fragrant spot and the blazing desert outside.

Morales watched Ted's eyes. "You like it, no?"

"It's beautiful. You've created a Fairyland."

Again the Spaniard bowed. "You are most kind. You may remain with them, our shereomings, if not here we lack much of comfort. Welcome to you of the East have become necessities."

Ted looked up at the vine-covered walls and the immaculate gardens. It seemed like something from an old story, I feel as if I had stepped back a couple of centuries."

Cyclonic Disturbances Again Sweeping In

Mexico City, Sept. 14 (AP) — The Tacubaya meteorological station issued a warning last night that a cyclonic disturbance described as strongly tropical, which struck Belize was sweeping in from the Caribbean and probably would strike the Yucatan peninsula between Belize and Port Otigon today.

A hurricane, which struck La Paz, lower California, yesterday was reported to the west of Belize city and it was feared that it was causing heavy damage. The last report from La Paz was received here yesterday by the newspaper Excelsior and said considerable damage had been caused there and fortunately no loss of life. Since then communication with La Paz has been lost.

The Excelsior's correspondent said yesterday that the storm was growing in intensity.

Exhibition Demonstration of Canada's Solidarity

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 14—With a blaze of fireworks, the Canadian National Exhibition came to a close here Saturday night. The thousands of people who had packed the grounds since early in the day slowly straggled out and the gates were closed on another exhibition. Attendance during the 14 days totalled 1,657,000, a decrease of 30,000 from last year, or about two percent. Saturday's attendance was 146,000.

Belief that the C.N.E. was a demonstration to the world of Canada's solidarity in a time of worldwide depression, was widely evident, sounded a note of confidence in his closing address.

All Passengers and Crews Were Taken Safely Off

San Pedro, Calif., Sept. 14 —Abandoned by her passengers and crew and battered by heavy seas, the steamer Point Loma, Colombia, today lay on the rocky reef of Santa Margarita Island, 20 miles south of here off the Lower California coast.

All of 130 passengers and crew of 100 were aboard the United Fruit Company's liner La Perla, due to arrive at Los Angeles harbor Wednesday. Their rescue in the early hours of yesterday morning was related today in radio messages which paid tribute to the heroism of the officers, crew and men passengers.

Bertin E. Moisant, a passenger from El Salvador, radioed a description of the scene on the darkened decks of the Colombia while passengers prepared to take to the lifeboats. It said:

"There was no panic, no hysteria to be noted. This was averted by common sense on the part of the officers and by precise and stern orders at the same time. Never has it been our lot to see men show a finer example of coolness and this applies to both officers and men."

CORNWALL TO BE SEE SITE?

Primatial See May Be Created By Synod of Anglicans

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 14—Cornwall, on the St. Lawrence River, once the capital of the Province of Canada and the home of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, is likely to be the primatial see which will be created at the sessions of the twelfth Provincial Synod of the Church of England in Canada, during this week.

Next to the election of a primate, if not of equal import to the Anglican Communion through Canada, is the proposal to create a new see for the province, to be endowed and located at a place convenient for the bulder to devote most of his time to the administration and ministrations of the church in every part of the Dominion. A few years ago officials of the Church of England in Canada proposed to erect a see with Cornwall at the seat of the bishop, because of the proposition has come to the front with the recommendations of the National Commission for a fixed primatial see.

Swims While Daughter Lies at Death's Door

Toronto, Ont. Sept. 14—The shadow of death hovered over Mendel Burdett of Toronto, as he swam Saturday in a special three-mile contest arranged by Canadian National Exhibition for three star boxers, while Burdett was finishing second 100 yards behind Harold Sully and 200 yards ahead of Ernst Vierkotter, his eight year old daughter lay dying at Sick Children's.

The child had been an invalid for several years and her condition was aggravated by a severe attack of diphtheria whooping cough. She sank rapidly last night and died early today.

Rather than disappoint thousands of swim fans and friends, Burdett hurried from the sick bed to participate in the contest. Then he hurried home to spend the last hours with his daughter.

It was stated by local authorities that the man they were holding had established himself in Montreal medical and social circles but that he had not the necessary qualifications to practice medicine. His apprehension, they said, came through the inquiries instituted by the fraternity of a well-known United States University, to which the suspected man claimed membership.

FASHION'S DECREE FOR FALL ADMIRED BY LARGE NUMBERS MONDAY NIGHT AT KARNIVAL

Wottens Ltd. Sponsored Showing of the Latest Modes

CHIC MILLINERY

Models Wore Jewelry From McFee's and Furs From Delaney's

Fashion's magic door was pushed ajar last night to allow Belleville women to take their first peep into the enchanted realms of Fall styles. Fashions to dazzle and intrigue passed in review and the breathless attention of old and small was an indication of the unqualified success of the first evening of Fashions.

With costumes from Wotten's Limited featuring the Revue, there were added interests in the furs of Delaney, the jewelry by McFee's and the millinery by Woodley's. The garments breathed the atmosphere of the recent continental fall exposition, and the beautiful gowns and coats added new laurels to the furs with which displayed them.

Dame Fashion has been turning over the leaves of the history book for inspiration this year and the vogue of the seventies is marked. Many garments, coats as well as gowns, had touches that revealed this influence of the Second Empire and showed that elegance has returned to feminine garments to stay for some time.

Dazzling in their beauty of line and fabric the gowns of evening and the creations of lace and velvet, of satin and brocaded materials. Even the casual sports outfit assumed new dignity when combining velveteen and silk and wool. The evening dresses shown by Wottens's were pictures of charm and grace, with rustling taffetas, crepe romaine and clinging velvets predominating. They gave the dancing maiden a wide choice in her evening apparel, from the demure bouffant even hooped models to the ultra-sophistication of daringly cut black velvet.

Coats introduced the new pebbly and granulated weaves and their conspicuously set the fashion borders for fall. The tight-fitting silhouette, with trim flare, was enhanced with regal collar of rich fur. These collars emphasized the new let effect, inspiring by the blossom garlands of Hawaii.

The charming mannequins for the evening were Mrs. J. Kerr, Mrs. Ben Burley, Mrs. Roberts, Miss Madeline Bell, Miss Gladys Emerson, Miss Georgina Bell and Miss Ruth Rainbird, acted their part with great grace and discretion and were constantly applauded.

Some of the unusual models shown included an afternoon dress of transparent velvet, worn by Mrs. Kerr. This model had a plump of Alencon lace that could be removed to let the frock into an evening costume. With this was shown a chorus coat of black with jacket effect of lamb. Miss Ray wore a pretty little frock of black crepe romaine with collar and cuffs of white velvet and a coat of woolen spongo cloth trimmed with wolf collar and cuffs.

Miss Rainbird displayed the new boucle material for sports dresses in Spanish tile shade and coat of natural crepe with brown opossum trimmings. Mrs. Burley was also seen in a sports model, this of slate blue. The costume affair had velveteen jacket and skirt of plaid silk and wool. Miss Emerson wore a lovely afternoon gown of rich transparent velvet in autumn leaf hue outlined with white fur. A smart coat worn by Miss Emerson was of Persian lamb spiral crepe with luxurious natural wolf collar and cuffs. Miss Bell exhibited a handsome gown of Burgundy velvet with filmy net blouse, and Miss Roberts was seen in a trim little outfit of russet brown and oyster tweed jersey.

With the costumes was worn millinery by Woodley's that showed all the latest quirks of a whimsical mode. The Robin Hood hats with dashing feathers, the pastillion hats that had the air of long ago and many other versions of felt and velvet headwear fascinating the audience as they appeared.

Afternoon and evening frocks were given the final note of distinction in the addition of costume jewelry by McFee's. These jewellers have helped to make the Fashion Revue outstanding by exhibiting the rarest and costliest gems they collected for the show. Not only was there costume jewelry to please the fastidious, crystal and marcasite sterling jewelry to delight the exacting but there were stones to satisfy the connoisseur. The list included three remarkable rings. One was a diamond valued at eighteen hundred dollars, the second a ring set with a marquise shaped canary diamond, value at twenty-five hundred dollars and a gem that is rarely seen, and a beautiful blue white caret single stone diamond ring valued at four thousand dollars. Wrist watches of great beauty and price were also displayed, and the costumes for street wear were completed with gems in bracelet and bag.

Delaney's furnished another striking feature of the show in the collection of furs worn by the models. Fox scarfs in single and double models, using silver, Artic white and red foxes were admitted.

Bringing the first style revue of the season to a close Miss Hale, the evening models made a fitting climax to a perfect evening's entertainment. About the stage, which by the way, was most tastefully arranged, were Mrs. Kerr in an evening dress of black transparent velvet completed with velvet medallic overskirt and with white corset coat cut to imitate germine; Miss Bell wearing blue velvet with printed design and rhinestone trimmings; Miss Rainbird in a model of brocaded velvet with white squirrel evening wrap and Miss Roberts in vintage suiting of Artic white fox; miss Ray in black velvet with lovely coat of Persian broadtail trimmed with Russian grey squirrel, completed and bolero; Mrs. Burley in a beautiful black evening frock with gray hooped tail jacquette; Miss Emerson in black velvet with unusual design wearing a Hudson seal coat with natural flitch collar and cuffs; and Miss Roberts a charming old time tarreta and net dress with hooped skirt and lace sleeveletts worn with a wrap of Persian lamb.

"Art," said Matthew Arnold, "is nature seen through a temperament."

A Time to "Whoop" Sat Not October

Montreal, Sept. 15 (CP)—Whooping cough occurs less frequently during the last four months of the year than at any other time, Dr. O. M. Harmon, chief statistician for vital statistics of the census bureau at Washington, told the vital statistics branch of the convention of the American Public Health Association, here today.

The month of October has proved to be the month when whooping cough is least prevalent in the United States, Dr. Harmon said. The peak months of whooping cough seem to be January and February in the northern States and May in the southern States. Just the reverse procedure for respiratory diseases as diphtheria, measles and scarlet fever.

12 Mile Hour Not Enough to Stay Juror

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 15 (CP) — Summoned for Grand Jury duty, Alfred R. Roberts failed to appear for service when the list was called in the Court of General Sessions last Thursday. His Honor refused to believe this however, and for a lesson to the public in general" imposed a fine of $50. TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 31.

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan saw the books and weapons strewn on the floor; his little store of treasures littered about. A great wave of anger surged through him. Ah—but the men had not found his tin box with its precious contents! . . . What was that? . . .

His quick ear had caught a faint but unfamiliar sound.

He ran to the window, looking toward the harbor. He saw a boat being lowered from the great ship beside the one already in the water. Soon he saw many people clamoring over the ship's sides and dropping into the boats. They were coming back in full force!

He weighed bundles and boxes being lowered. As they shoved off, the apeman snatched up a piece of paper and with a pencil printed several lines of strong well-made characters. This notice he stuck upon the door with a sharp wood splinter. Then gathering his precious box and weapons he disappeared into the forest.

Fifteen villainous-appearing seamen landed from the boats. Bloodthirsty and filthy they looked. The five others comprised two elderly men — evidently scholars—a handsome young man in white ducks, a huge negress, and a very beautiful girl of about nineteen. In silence the party advanced toward the cabin.

The sailors carried the boxes and bales, followed by the five of so different a class. Coming to the cabin, they saw with puzzled surprise the new-made sign. Few of the sailors could read. "It, professer," one shouted, "read the bloomin' words." The old gentleman addressed, read, and murmured "Most remarkable!", in a half hour's flight each week. He had merely taken his due when he set out for his jaunt before leaving the company.

FEATS OF HUMAN STRENGTH DEMONSTRATED BY HARDMAN

Pulls Three Cars Weighing 10,260 lbs., by Teeth

ON FRONT STREET

Feature Act Given Free By Kiwanis Karnival Committee

Demonstrating feats of human strength never before witnessed in Belleville, Herbert (Hercules) Hardman, Canada's strongest man, lifted three automobiles at one time on Front Street yesterday afternoon, the act being sponsored by the Kiwanis Karnival.

The cars were supplied by the Riggs Motor Sales and consisted of two Plymouth sedans and a Dodge coupe. The cars were lined up three abreast in front of the Canadian Department stores and Mr. Hardman, who, is a fine specimen of Canadian manhood, attached two chains to the outside cars and a rope to the middle car and pulled the three cars at one time, down as far as McIntosh Bros. store. The "Canadian Hercules" intended pulling the cars as far as Campbell St., but due to the fact that Front St. has a cone top he found it impossible as he was pulling the two outside cars uphill, as they were cantied by the cone of the pavement. Mr. Hardman was somewhat disappointed that he did not accomplish his feature, but he demonstrated the fact that he could pull three cars at one time. The feature pulled the act was idea that he pulled the cars with his teeth. All Mr. Hardman had in his mouth was one solid piece of leather. This piece of leather is in the shape of an iron ring through which the ropes and chains pass. Mr. Hardman explained to the press that there was no trick to his act, but that he tried to demonstrate an act of human strength.

The act was well received by those privileged to see it. The public present could see that Mr. Hardman was accomplishing an act that never had been seen in Belleville before. The two Plymouth cars weighs 5,200 lbs. each, while the Dodge coupe weighed 2,600 lbs. making a total of 10,200 lbs., a load that should be hard for any strong man to pull with his teeth.

On July 1st of this year Mr. Hardman pulled the Port Hope fire truck, on a level stretch of road 30 yards. The fire truck weighed 7½ tons. These figures only go to show that Mr. Hardman has, in the past, accomplished some real feats of a "strong man."

PARACHUTE FAILS TO OPEN

Mesmin Gets Tangled in Falling Plane Wreckage

Moncow, Sept. 14.—The airplane Hyphen II. in which Joseph Lebrix and Rene Mesmin were killed in a crash near Ufa on Saturday was literally blown to pieces in mid air by an explosion in the motor, the Tass Agency correspondent reported today from the scene of the wreck.

There were indications that the machine had caught fire, the correspondent said a wide area of the region in which the plane crashed had been burned over. Only one body was found intact.

Mesmin was pilloting at the time of the accident, Doret told the Tass correspondent.

"He tried to bail out in his parachute but the survivor said, "but the chute did not open and Mesmin got tangled up in the fallen wreckage of the plane. Lebrix was beaten to the ground by the wreck as he himself loose in time to jump."

Doret was not hurt at all, and could be expected. He would not talk about the possible causes of the accident, asserting that this was a matter for the experts to determine. He did say, however, that the crash occurred in a bad fog while a heavy rain was falling.

"I shall fly back here again some day," he said, and visit the spot in memory of my comrades. I will fly back here and visit the graves are here and I shall not go home without them."

London now has 27 Justices of the Peace.

GANGS CONTROL IN 2 FIELDS

Robbery and Kidnapping Rackets Are Conducted

Chicago, Sept. 14.—Col. Isham Randolph, head of Chicago's Secret Six, said yesterday that evidence has been uncovered which leads the organization to believe that two nation-wide criminal gangs exist which have obtained monopolies on robbery and kidnapping.

"It has been shown conclusively," he said, "that approximately 25 per cent. of the daylight robberies about the United States, particular by those involving diamonds and large thefts from financial houses, are being committed by one large country-wide body of super-citizen-thieves.

"The kidnapping racket," he continued, "also has become a sort of one-gang national monopoly. Figures formerly identified with Alfie Sheldon make bigness to stand out as directing geniuses of this new system of extorting money from wealthy business men."

Attempt to Seize Reins of Government Thwarted

Vienna, Sept. 14 (AP)—The attempt of the Heimwehr, Fascist organization, to seize the reins of authority in the northern and eastern provinces was believed by the government today to have been effectively blocked.

Dr. Walter Pfriemer, Heimwehr leader, who proclaimed himself dictator in Styria yesterday, and Prince Starhemberg, issued a joint manifesto saying they were breaking off their hunger strike, and urging their followers to return peacefully to their homes. Authorities verified the report, that Fascist leaders were dispersing of their own accord.

LOSS OF LIFE AS HURRICANE SWEEPS AREA

Santa Rosalia, Wrecked When High Wind Causes Tidal Wave

DAMAGE AT MINE

Small Vessels Overdue And it is Believed They Foundered

Mexico City, Sept. 15 (AP) Heavy property damage and many loss of life were reported today as the result of a hurricane which swept the southern half of the lower California Peninsula, Saturday and Sunday.

A brief message from Santa Rosalia said the major part of the town was wrecked when a wind of near-cyclonic velocity battered its wooden houses and that a number of lives were lost in a tidal wave, that swept over the ruins in the gale's wake.

The population of Santa Rosalia does not exceed 2,000 but there is a considerable population at El Boleo Mine in the hills back of the town. Serious damage was reported at the mine, but details were lacking.

The exact number of victims at Santa Rosalia and other points in the hurricane's path could not be learned here for the despatches said that in view of the confusion no check had been attempted.

La Paz, which is the capital of the southern district and considerably larger than Santa Rosalia reported serious property damage but no casualties. Several small vessels were reported missing Magdalan and other ports, however, and it is feared the Gulf of California on account of the disturbance, which it was believed might sweep across the tip of the Peninsula, over the Gulf and penetrate inland along the Rebuiadejoe Isthmus.

"Don't think that the saying is a meaningless one, for many lives have been taken this young woman, who personified purity and faith and it is easy to forget that we are all mortal and must prepare for the life journeing here for a short while. Sometimes we forget God, but we need Him in occasions like this and it is only to Him that we can turn for strength. There is also the precious thing that we know God will help us in our sorrow and we must trust Him each day and live here to His commandments," said the speaker.

LATE ROBERT WHALEN

Little Bobbie Whalen was laid to rest yesterday afternoon from the residence of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ted Whalen, 14 Hillside Drive, interment being made in Belleville cemetery. The little boy, who died in his sleep in the section of the city in which he lived was mourned by a large number who attended the funeral service conducted by Rev. C. E. Clarke. The little casket, which bore his remains, was covered with floral tributes, they bearing the mute testimony of his many friends. After the simple but impressive service at the Anglican church had been read Rev. Mr. Clarke spoke a few words of comfort to those who mourned. He stated that he knew the struggle that had been going on in the home now bereaved and words of comfort do not help sufficiently for parents to bear their loss but God knows and sympathizes. Rev. Mr. Clarke spoke of the love of God and how that little life that had passed into the abundant life prepared by God and all should look back with calmness on his short stay in our midst. Rev. Watch Lake Huron For $4000 Speedboat

Goderich, Sept. 14.—Hardons on the east short of Lake Huron are being watched closely for the appearance of a $4,000 speed boat, the property of Arthur Herts of Racine City, Mich., stolen from that harbor some days ago. The boat is believed to be engaged in rum running, and has so far been in the lead in every race that has given chase. It was at Grand Bend Pier, day, and heard a loud thud as the propellor. Provincial police with Mr. Herts, arrived an hour after it had departed for parts unknown.

BRITISH PARTIES LOOK FOR EARLY ELECTION

Expediency of Early Appeal to Nation Doubted by Many People Fear Serious Crisis Threatening

Strong Opinion Favors Tariff Before Election

DIVERCE VIEWS

London Times Expects Earlier Election Than Was Anticipated

(By George Hamblton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 16 (CP)—Dissolution of parliament is in the air. The political party machines are working on the assumption of an early appeal to the people. The refrain of a general election echoes through the debates in parliament.

But opinion on the expediency of a general election in the very near future is sharply divided. The big financial interests are said to be against the unsettling effect of dissolution before the National government has had the opportunity to tackle the major problems of the unfavorable balance of trade. The Daily Mail declared Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald has received an appeal from the big financial district saying "A crisis even more terrible than that which preceded the formation of the National government would result if rumors of an early election persist." And a strong wing of opinion is urging a policy of declaration in favor of tariffs before a general election is held.

National Reconstruction

On the other hand it is argued that only a government backed by the support of the people would be in a position to carry through an effective plan of National reconstruction. The desire for an early vote is strongest among Conservatives, who are eager to challenge the electorate on the tariff issue just when unanimity seems to be tying to indoctrinate Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, party, to take a public stand on the matter. The switching of exchange rates, according to the protectionist ranks, if only in a limited degree, strengthens the belief that an early election would result.

A remark by Rt. Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the House last night provoked ssilles of laughter at the time but is considered significant. Answering a labor member's query about an appeal to the country Mr. Snowden said: "He does not want an election more certainly than I do. I have admired in these last few days the manner in which my late associates have cheered to keep up their spirits, knowing that only a few weeks possibly remain before they lose the place that knows them no more but will know them no more."

Free Trade

"On the whole, and taking everything and chance into consideration," said Mr. Snowden, the arguments point now to an election sooner than later. The old controversy over free trade is almost ceasing to be relevant. It has been swallowed up in something comparably bigger."

And The Times asks: "Is there any real reason why an appeal to the country, whenever it does come, should not be made—on a broad general issue of reconstruction which shall include a tariff—by the National government as such? The noting that after the severity of the last month and in the face of the disappointment of the electorate, that it can merely dissolve into chaos of the old three-party system, is altogether too lighthearted to bear examination."

Big Ben Dropped From Light Plans

London, Sept. 16 (C.P. Cable)—"Big Ben" has been dropped from London's present program of floodlighting public buildings during the world illumination congress. From last after nightfall, "Big Ben" has been considered necessary to prevent by interrupt the immemorial right of members of parliament and peers to ready access to their chambers—a right enjoyed by night and day as in the times of the Stuarts. The decision to floodlight Big Ben indeed was not taken before it was pointed out at the time the decision was made that Parliament would not likely assemble until October. Instead Parliament assembled for the emergency session on August 31.

SHIP PEACHES OVERSEAS

Montreal, Sept. 16 (CP)—Determined to create an overseas market for Canadian fruit, growers of the Beamsville district of Ontario have arranged for the marketing of a trial shipment of 2,000 baskets of choice peaches, by the government trade commissioner service in England. The cargo will be shipped from the port some time this week.

Apples Baked in Orchard Sun's Cooking on One Side

How would you like to stroll out into the orchard with the intention of satisfying your craving for a nice, ripe apple and find to your delight that your coming had been anticipated and several perfectly formed juicy apples had been baked to a turn for you to enjoy! This would, indeed, be a pleasant and astonishing surprise. Such an unusual happening, however, was experienced recently by Mr. C. B. Meyers, who owns a fine farm with a beautiful orchard on the Belleville-Trenton highway. Mr. Meyers says that during the recent extreme hot spell he was passing through his orchard and came upon baked apples, true enough, but as there had been no one on hand to turn the apples at the proper time, they were baked on one side only. These apples which were ripe had fallen to the ground and were exposed to the sun's rays in a place where they received just the right amount of heat to bake them on the side exposed.

TRANS PACIFIC FLIERS SAFE ON ISLANDS

Cecil A. Allen and Don Moyle Have Reached Alentian Islands

FLEW FROM JAPAN

Left Samushiro Beach a Week Ago Monday and Believed Lost

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 16 — The coast guard received a report today that Cecil A. Allen and Don Moyle, California aviators, missing more than a week after a trans-Pacific flight attempt from Japan to Seattle, are safe in the Aleutian Islands.

The coast guard station here received a message from the Unalaska radio station on St. Paul island in Behring Sea addressed to Mike P. Bremon, fiancee of Moyle at Riverside, Calif. The message said two fliers had been found safe on an uninhabited island. No details were given in the report.

The coast guard cutter Chelan, a revenue vessel of the coast guard have been combing the Aleutian archipelago of their base at Dutch Harbor.

Allen and Moyle left Samushiro beach, Northern Japan, on Monday of last week on an attempted non-stop flight to Seattle. They were sighted over the Japanese coastline that day but were unseen after that. They were due in Seattle a week ago today. Capt. H. D. Hinkley, commandant of the northern division of the coast guard, said the message was sent from the steamer Buriat through the St. Paul Station, which relayed it to Cordova, Alaska, and thence here.

"We are safe, Don," he said, and told Mike Bremon that Don was safe on the island, and would be back in Seattle September 22nd. The fliers were believed to indicate that the fliers were on Ib Burial.

Justice Blind But Need Not Be Concealed

Geneva, Sept. 16 (C. P. Cable)—"Justice may be blind, but its face need not be concealed," said Senator the Hon. C. P. Beaubien of Montreal, in the course of an eloquent speech at the League of Nations assembly today.

The subject was one of deep interest not only to Canada but to her great neighbor, the United States. Senator Beaubien pointed out both countries having numerous minority populations which remained firmly attached to their countries of origin.

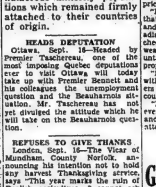
Ottawa, Sept. 16—Headed by Premier Taschereau, one of the largest delegations Quebec deputations ever to visit Ottawa will today wait up with Prime Minister Bennett and his colleagues the unemployment question and the Beauharnois situation. Mr. Taschereau has not announced the attitude which he will take on the Beauharnois question.



REFUSES TO GIVE THANKS

London, Sept. 16—The Vicar of Mundham, County Norfolk, announcing his intention not to hold any harvest Thanksgiving service, said: "This year marks the ruin of English agriculture. cannot ask me to join in thanking Almighty God for the ruin of farming or for things going wrong, another is partly responsible for the mess we are in."

Gandhi to Visit Old London Use Old Guide Book

London, Sept. 16 (AP).—Mahatma Gandhi plans before he leaves to re-visit the London haunts he knew 40 years ago as a student, using the guide book he wrote to pay his way through college.

The book, "How to see London," is still in manuscript form because he was never able to secure a publisher. He will take with him on his sightseeing tour of Miss Madeline Slade, who as the daughter of a British admiral, knows London better than he.

BELGIAN LEGISLATOR

The Socialists of the Louvain Province of Belgium have elected Mme. Marcelle Speder (above) to a seat in the Belgian Parliament. She is the first woman of her country to hold such a post and her election marks a definite trend of women's part in hitherto exclusively masculine Belgian politics.

"Extravagance" Even If It Costs Government Nothing

London, Sept. 16—(AP)—London's floodlight illuminations failed to make any impression on Mahatma Gandhi.

Passing last night in front of Buckingham Palace, which was turned into a fairy land by scores of brilliant searchlights, Gandhi, exponent of the simple life, said:

"What an extravagance for a government that is trying to balance its budget," in India the Mahatma reads by the light of a candle.

He explained that the bright lights cost the government nothing.

"I don't care," he said, "it's ruinous extravagance just the same."

Admiralty Promises To Re-examine Rates

FLAVOR LATE FALL CHEESE IS CRITICIZED

Dairy Commissioner Ruddick Advises Factories

CURING ROOMS

The following letter of interest to the local cheese industry was received this morning at the office of the Belleville Branch of the Department of Agriculture.

September 14, 1931.

"Mr. Geo. H. Barr,
Director of Dairying,
Department of Agriculture,
Toronto, Ont.

"Dear Mr. Barr:

"During my recent visit to the dairy producer markets in the United Kingdom, I was very much impressed with the growing unpopularity of late fall made cheese from Canada. The complaint is that they are pasty, immature and poor flavor.

"The cause is undoubtedly the lack of heat and moisture in curing rooms during cool weather. The cheese are not as well cooked in the curing rooms today as they were 20 or 30 years ago. The temperature of a curing room should be over a degree lower than 80 degrees.

"If this matter is not attended to it will soon be impossible to sell cold weather cheese in the United Kingdom. Time was when anything could be sold. That is not so today. The attitude of the trade is why handle inferior Canadian cheese when good New Zealand is always available. The demand for high-grade Canadian is as good as it ever was, and it brings a premium, but improperly cured cheese are not wanted at any price.

"In order to protect the factories that give attention to these matters and to save the reputation of Canadian cheese, these cold pasty cheese, handled without heat in cold weather, will not be graded, is said until they have been put into proper condition.

"I am also taking this matter up with the Montreal trade and owners of warehouses throughout the country.

"I hope too that you will use every effort to induce the factories and cheesemakers to give immediate attention to this matter.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) J. A. RUDDICK,
Commissioner.

GOLD TONNAGE UP IN AUGUST

Kirkland Lake Production Falls Off Considerable

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 16 — In August gold mines of Ontario produced bullion worth $3,548,624 from 540,736 tons of ore, the value of $69,914 under that of $3,618,372 reported for July when 560,000 tons showed a gain of 16,707 tons. Private Chapel May be Established at Balmoral

Crowd of Spectators Show Unrestrained Curiosity

KING'S OBJECTION

(By Thomas T. Chamelon)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)
London, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press Cable)—His Majesty is understood to be cheerfully considering the necessity of establishing a private chapel at Balmoral Castle in Scotland, following the display of unrestrained curiosity by crowds, who have been flocking in all manner of conveyances to Crathie on the Dee, although no witness the arrival and Queen's attendance at church there while they were staying in Scotland.

A recent Sunday produced the spectacle of a stream of cars and coaches forming an avenue three miles long to the church. "The King objects to a church service being made a public show," said the six months' issue of the Crathie Parish Church Organ.

Their Majesties are due to return to London at the end of the month for a few days, before going to Sandringham in Norfolk. The Queen left Balmoral earlier this week for a visit to Princess Mary and the Earl of Harewood at their Yorkshire seat.

When Her Majesty, following invariable custom, went to Harrogate on a shopping expedition yesterday she experienced a very different contrast to that of a Sunday at Crathie. Her progress was always combined loyal interest with decorous behavior and non-curiosity.

ADMIRALTY TO STUDY PAY IN BRITISH NAVY

Situation Not Serious and No Sign of Disloyalty Seen

CHEER KING

London, Sept. 16 (AP).—Bluejackets of the British Navy's Atlantic Fleet through a series of demonstrations against cuts in pay, obtained from the Admiralty today a promise of re-examination of the new rates with a view of alleviation of such hardships as might be revealed.

London, Sept. 16 (A.P.)— The agitation of Great Britain's Atlantic fleet against wage reductions was the subject of a conference today between Sir Austen Chamberlain, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Rear Admiral Colvin, chief of staff to the Commander of the Fleet.

Admiral Colvin,—who arrived by airplane from Invergordon, the scene of the chief trouble, was summoned to present before the head of the Admiralty the details of protest meetings which led to suspension of the Autumn manoeuvres in the North Sea.

It was stated that the Admiralty would issue later in the day a statement giving the extent of the movement and measures to restore tranquility among the men, who are complaining that the cuts constitutuy unequal sacrifice in comparison with the rest of the defense forces.

Another officer, who reached here from Invergordon described the situation as "not serious but unprecedented." He added: He said that the crews felt they were being unjustifiably penalized by reductions placed as high as 25 per cent.

Available reports indicated that the dissatisfaction had been confined to two points—Invergordon and Rosyth. There was nothing to show that it had extended to English home ports, either at Portland which is the fleet's home base or at the important naval bases of Portsmouth, Plymouth or Chatham.

The best available information indicated that sixteen ships were involved in the movement of which complete details were carefully with.

London, Sept. 16 (A.P.)— The Evening News said today in a dispatch from Invergordon, Scotland, that sailors who acted at the request of the Federal Minister of Justice, Hon. Hugh Guthrie.

The announcement was made in the House of Commons this afternoon by Sir Austen Chamberlain, First Lord of the Admiralty. As he

Jungle Crowds Do Not Like Living on Town Charities

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 16.—(By The Canadian Press)—Jungle Kimberly in Toronto's "jungle" were today considering the significance of the decision of the Civic Board of Control that the "jungle" must be abolished.

Unless they could go to employment, they hesitated at the thought of leaving their rough home-made shacks and the valley that was the outskirts of the city. All of them objected to the idea of spending the winter in a charitable institution.

"Do you know what it is like to be down here," one of the men told a reporter. "But what's much worse, you don't know what it's like to live on the institutions in the cities. It takes all the heart out of you; you feel yourself going to pieces."

"We want work; that's all" said one of the group which sat around a camp fire discussing the future and its problems.

spoke, in quiet tones, the Laborite Opposition broke into a storm of cheering. Before the House met three Laborites submitted private notice of questions, all asking for particulars of the troubles in the Atlantic fleet.

Difference of Cats

As Mr. Chamberlain rose the Laborites showered supplementary questions. One wanted to know if land lice Labor cheering, whether in considering the position attention would be given to the fact that while an able seaman had his pay cut by 25 percent, the First Lord of the Admiralty with some other Government officials Government was only taking a 10 percent. cut.

Sir Austen replied he was unable to accept notice of the six questions—for trouble in the Fleet or of any other kind.

A. V. Alexander broke in with a supplementary: "Is it correct that MacDonald replied H was clearly understood that all the arrangements making savings could adjust the burden.

Stamping and Shouting

Nolay scenes followed. Both Laborites and Conservatives were on their feet together and rival shouts of "Question" and "Answer" several members at once tried to raise points of order.

Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson, Conservative member, finally endeavored to put a question as to whether the Labor Government had not made drastic cuts in naval pay, but he was unable to complete his question.

The Laborites attempted to move an adjournment of the House so as to precipitate a debate on the whole question. But the Speaker ruled against them. Nor did the hubbub die down until a motion was submitted by the Government for the extension of the 11 o'clock rule tonight.

The Government finally won. "No" in the division the Government had a large majority of 91, the vote being 236 to 145.

Sir Austen declared the Admiralty has ordered ships of the Atlantic Fleet to proceed to their home ports forthwith. Immediate investigation ports will be made by the Commander-in-Chief and representatives of the Admiralty into those classes of cases in which it is alleged that the reductions press exceptionally on those concerned.

"His Majesty's Government have instructed the Board of Admiralty to make proposals for alleviating hardships in these cases so soon as they have been ascertained by the contemplated investigation."

Reports of the protests received there had never been a serious mutiny, for the sailors took pains to make it clear they were protesting solely against the pay cuts and had no intention of disloyalty.

Hundreds of men on the great Atlantic Fleet and Invergordon the Atlantic fleet off Invergordon Scotland out of their bunks this morning and gathered on the gun turrets to raise a rousing cheer for the King.

Ramsay Medney's men followed the cheers with the "Prothibiowers Anthem" in which the First and somebody yelled, "Are we downhearted!" The thundering roar "No!" was echoed from the big battle cruiser Hood nearby and then carried down the line among the rest of the ships.

Other accounts said that while the men had refused some days ago to obey orders to weigh anchors, when the Fleet was scheduled to sail for exercises, they had given three cheers for His Majesty to make it clear the loyalty was not affected.

The Admiralty statement today followed a conference in London between Premier Ramsay MacDonald Chamberlain. First Lord of the Admiralty, and Sir Archibald Sinclair, Chief of Staff to the Commander-in-Chief of the Atlantic Fleet. It was understood the discontent had affected several thousand men on 19 vessels.

FLYER GORDON IS FOUND WELL

Chas. W. Gordon, Nephew of Novelist, Located at Trout Lake

Sioux Lookout, Ont. Sept. 16 (C P.)—Missing for more than three weeks in the wilds of Northern Ontario, Charles Gordon, 40, pilot-navigator for the Consolidated Smelters Company, today was safe at Trout Lake. Gordon and his mechanic had brought here by a search party which had been scouring the country since he left Sioux Lookout on a flight to Trout Lake.

Shortly after taking off to carry 1,000 lbs. of miners supplies for the company's property near Trout Lake, Gordon became lost and was forced to land in Nikip Lake due to a shortage of Gas, according to word brought in by the search party. He remained in the vicinity of the lake for three weeks, subsisting chiefly on the supplies carried in his plane.

After three weeks of aimless wandering Gordon met a Cree Indian who directed him to Trout Lake. Once there he had little difficulty in establishing contact with the search parties. He appeared none the worse for his adventure.

Arrangements are now being made to bring Gordon out with the next flight.

Sioux Lookout, Ont., Sept. 16—(CP)—Charles W. Gordon, pilot-navigator, missing for twenty-eight days since he took off on a flight from Sioux Lookout to Trout Lake, cheers on the shores of Trout Lake today. He appeared to be exhausted but no ill effects as the result of his adventure.

The finding of Gordon was reported in a message received here this afternoon from members of the search party, and an attempt is being made to get official confirmation.

Gordon, a nephew of Rev. Chas. Gordon (Ralph Connor) well-known Winnipeg novelist started from Sioux Lookout on Aug 15 to carry supplies to miners working on the company's property near Trout Lake.

New York, N.Y., Sept. 16 — K. D. Voeler, factory manager of the Bellanca Aircraft Corporation, today definitely identified wreckage found off the North Atlantic by the British trawler Lord Trent as that of the plane of Parker Cramer, United States flier lost on a flight from Detroit to Copenhagen.

OPERATION AS CRIME CURE

Even Appendicitis Operation Known to Produce Change

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 16 — The belief that a man's criminal tendencies sometimes can be cured by taking out his appendix was expressed yesterday by Dr. W. A. Guild, a member of the Illinois parole committee on law enforcement.

"A man intelligent and well educated was committed to court in his books while working for various corporations stores. While he was in jail I removed his appendix Now he is manager of a 10c chain store in Chicago.

"Once a forger was in jail for his fourth offense. When he got out he saw a Salvation Army band. So he stepped into a cigar store, forged a check for $5.50 cashed in and placed the money in the collection box. I removed his 'grapevine appendix' and he was cured of forging checks."

Sweepstakes Are Approved By Amps.

Toronto, Sept. 16 (C.P.)— Unanimous approval of legalized sweepstakes was voiced yesterday by the Dominion Convention of the Amputations Association of the Great War, in session here. The resolution read as follows: "That this Association place itself on record as being in favour of legalized sweepstakes when controlled by soldiers' organizations, as in Ontario charitable institutions under Dominion Government supervision."

Little Hope Held For Lisbon Plane

New York, Sept. 16.—The time limit of 48 hours for locating Lisbon since passed, the dwindling hope for the finding of the missing Lisbon-New York plane of three fliers lay last night in the Atlantic ocean or on a remote spot flying along the Eastern seaboard.

The plane, with its 48 hours of fuel, was more than 12 hours over that time limit when it was due at 8 E.S.T.

Fear that the fliers may have gone the way of Nungesser and Coli was tempered with the thought they may have made a forced landing on some inaccessible portion of the Canadian or United States coast, and been unable to communicate their plight.

Poet's Corner

Oak and Cannel

Astronomers can weigh a star,
And tell a planet's girth,
And bring the cosmic system's skies afar
Well nigh in touch with earth.
But who can tune the throbbing of a heart
Or match the streamlet's song,
Or estimate the joyous mood
Upon the skylark's tongue?
By mathematics men can count
The motions atoms make,
And calculate the vast amount
Of force when billows break.
But love's equation cannot be
By sign or figure given,
For, boundless as eternity,
It touches earth and heaven.
—A. B. Cooper, in the Methodist Magazine

SIMON STIRS UP BRITISH

Advocacy of Tariff is Cause of Sensation in British House

London, Sept. 18 (A.P.) — Sir John Simon, long regarded as one of the most uncompromising free traders in Great Britain, caused a sensation in the House of Commons last evening by declaring himself in favor of the imposition of tariffs.

Asserting that a serious situation would result unless tariff measures were taken to restore trade balance, he declared that only imposts offered suitable material for such action.

"I am driven to the conclusion," he said, "that there is no alternative but putting some block in the way of the flow of free imports."

There was a storm of interruption when the members realized what he was saying and Mr. Snowden was restored Sir John said he did not advocate "a general tariff," but an emergency tariff would produce a new situation on earth, and in addition to this emergency Great Britain must abandon its system of free import.

TWO YOUTHS HUNTING WORK

Interjewed Labor Minister But Told They Must Take Their Chances

Two young men, with bundles strapped to their shoulders, stepped briskly from the city police station on Front Street yesterday and hurried upon the walk for a moment to size up the kind of city they had arrived in and to fill their lungs with the clear, invigorating air which was very plentiful this morning and "free to all." They had passed Trenton, of their own accord, at the station and were full "getting on their way," but in response to the usual morning salutation, they were met with a cheerful word of greeting. There are some people who are not slaves to the clock and they can "go to sleep right alongside of it," but these young chaps had to be up and about early this morning after it—chasing it and hope of finding work. The latter they had hiked from Ottawa to Toronto to interview the minister of the labor department at the Parliament Buildings there, but on the subject of "making sure" that they would not start with the first draft of men to work on the new Welland Canal job. Hundreds of men have registered with the city at Ottawa and as they had heard and read in newspapers of "going direct to headquarters—crashing your way to the real boss," they decided to try it. However, although they received courteously, they were told that they must take their chance with others—so it is that they are now on their way back to Ottawa. They are expert mechanics and will work at almost anything for some time. Hiking all over the country looking for a job, has been their occupation for a long time.

"You know," one of the boys said "you can't get any place standing still, so if we are to keeping company" with a girl whom they hoped some time to marry when good times come again."

Widows are losing their popularity in the marriage market in Britain. Before 1920, one of every three brides was married one a widow. In 1929, out of 422,316 brides only 2,400 were widows.

Friends that his name be submitted as a candidate for the office of Moderator of the Presbyterian Church.

OPERA UNDER GOV'T SUBSIDY

First S.ate-Subsidized Opera is Played in England

London, Sept. 16 (C.P. Cable) as by coincidence the first state-subsidized performance of opera in English, under the national economy bill was being debated in the House of Commons.

The subsidy of $87,500 annually for five years, to assist opera performances not only in London but in other parts of the country, was voted last November and there was some criticism of the expenditure at the time. The action was taken largely on the initiative of Mrs. Philip Snowden, wife of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose musical gatherings at No. 11 Downing Street, have become celebrated.

"The Mastersingers," produced last night, was a rediscovery, for it is 24 years since it was last heard in London and 1908 it was given in the German. Nevertheless its memories have always been cherished. Critics declare the performance was a commendable one, although so far as the individual performers are concerned most praise is reserved for a male singer and the conductor who happen to be the only foreigners in the company.

The Autumn theatrical season opens with a rush this week, there being no fewer than ten first nights, either of new productions or revivals. A noteworthy event was last night's revival of Sheridan's play, "A Trip to Scarborough." The work is a free version of Sheridan as his most engaging but the characters are modernized and the costumes were charming. Ernest Thesiger was the creator of a bygone style of foppery, diagnctly added to his laurels.

THE STORM DISASTER

Details are slowly coming through from British Honduras where the total of dead in the storm may reach aggregate of two thousand men, women and children On land was desolation and on the sea death reigned. One hundred men went down on six sailing vessels.

The native homes and other buildings were swept away in the violence of the storm which swept up out of the Caribbean.

Aid is being rushed in, and this brightens the picture somewhat though fear of pestilence stalks the land.

The stricken land will have the sympathetic aid of all peoples.

TRENTON JOINS

Trenton has joined the municipal ownership throng of municipalities in Ontario carrying by-laws for the purchase of the distribution plant, for the purchase of power from the Hydro Commission of Ontario, for the management of the system under the Public Utilities Commission and has also linked up with the new company in the gas field, the Ontario Shore Gas Company Limited, granting a franchise to the company for a stated period of time.

The town has had many shining examples of the importance of local Hydro ownership and has seen one after one of the municipalities leaving the old system. Most of the municipalities are now out and all have been showing profits. Trenton under the local Hydro ownership has an opportunity to save money for the people of the town.

The entry of the gas company into the fuel field in Central Ontario and the Bay of Quinte section naturally links up Trenton. Important developments along this line are expected.

THE FIRST AMERICAN SAINT

More than a hundred years ago the grand-daughter of an American clergyman was converted to the Roman Catholic faith and devoted herself to good works.

To-day tens of thousands rise up to call Mother Seton blessed and ask Pope Pius to elevate her to the spiritual peerage of the ancient church. If that comes to pass, she will be the first American saint. The petition, signed by 150,000 Americans including many of the American hierarchy was presented to Pope Pius by fifty priests, nuns, and delegates of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae.

When he presented the huge scroll to the Pope, Father Joseph B. Code, who headed the delegation, recalled that the cause of beatification was introduced in 1907 by Pope Pius X. Father Code listed among the good works of Mother Seton that she had "inaugurated practically every work of Catholic social welfare in the United States."

"Because she opened the first free school for children," he recited, according to an Associated Press dispatch, "she has been given the title of patroness of the parochial-school system in the United States. Because she sent sisters to take charge of the first Catholic orphanage in the country, her place among the homeless little ones of Christ is secure. Because her spiritual daughters opened the first Catholic hospital in the United States, her memory is venerated among those sickness and suffering receive ministration."

Some persons have been thinking so much of the warm weather that they fear the coming of winter and predict a colder winter than has been in order to match the peak in the heat wave. There ought also to be heavy snow to compensate for the light rainfall here during the past summer. But the winter will tell its own story.

AUTUMN FRAGRANCES

The obvious perfumes that had assailed
The nostrils soothed by Summer drift away
Upon the wind. The last wild rose has paled,
The darkened clover drowses, but today
A secret richness lingers in the grass,
A mellow fragrance hides within the husk,
And scents tinge where old orchards mass
Their cider-tang in this soft-breathing dusk.

Through shadowed vines the fragrance of ripe grapes
Drifts over horse mint that our steps have stirred;
We touch new richness in familiar shapes
Of bush and wall, as if all these deferred
Their fullness till this time when hearts must need
Fragrance of harvest—and new faith in seed.

ANOTHER SAGA OF THE SEA has been written, another triumph for the inventiveness of man in wireless communication. Darkness and tidal wave have been churning the southern seas into hell's brews of snatching death. Saturday afternoon the Panama mail liner Columbia out of New York and through the Panama Canal for San Pedro, California, was engulfed in a terrific storm of typhoon velocity off the coast of Lower California and dashed on upon the rocks. S. O. S. calls sent out were picked up by various steamers which were quickly speeding to the rescue while two hundred and thirty-four of the passengers and crew battled with the elements in puny lifeboats, the Columbia, meanwhile, breaking up fast on the rocks. The transference of the passengers to the lifeboats from dark and slippery decks while the storm continued to rage and the ship pound to pieces on the rocks is another epic of the sea with more heroes for the sung or unsung Hall of Fame in the officers and crew who kept perfect order and carried out their various duties as all in the day's work, and turned what might have been a panic punctuated with death into an adventure of the night disagreeable but interesting to recall once it was over. The San Mateo, southbound, and her sister ship, La Peria, responded to the call received at 6 p.m. Saturday and the first named reached the scene of the wreck at 3.40 Sunday morning picked up the passengers and crew, later transferring them to the La Pera. The rescue was broadcast but two U. S. A. Coast Guard cutters sped to the scene under direct orders from the Admiralty, while other vessels bent on rescue, resumed their voyages upon learning that the work of rescue had been completed. Truly that "Old Devil Sea" is losing most of his terror.

LAWRENCE D'ORSAY, who played many parts on the stage and appeared in British films frequently, has responded to his last cue on earth and joined the great company of actors just behind the curtain called death. Perhaps will be best remembered herabouts for his altogether delightful "Earl of Pawtucket," the "silly," English gentleman who is not so silly as he looks, monocle and all. As the very amusing Earl in pursuit of his lady love through tea rooms and coffee shops with his endless reiteration of "Cawfee," D'Orsay created laughs galore and left a pleasant memory which the years have failed to obliterate. Yet D'Orsay never played many weightier roles but his "Earl of Pawtucket," full of light and laughter as it was, will linger longer in the memory of the playgoer of his generation.

BOOTLEGGERS HAVE TAKEN to the air as a logical development of bigger and better business in their particular line. The first air rum runner between Canada and the United States has been captured on U. S. soil. The booze air line has certainly added to the terror which is the lessened danger of hijacking. As temptation to hijack in the air would be perilous both to hijacker and hijacked.

FOUR HUNDRED MILES AN HOUR

For the first time in human history a man has driven one of his machines at more than four hundred miles an hour. Only a few years ago such speed would have been considered not merely impossible, but indeed almost unthinkable. Even today, accustomed as we are to speeding to the marvelous in mechanics, we gasp a little at Flight Lieutenant Stainforth's performance and conclude that the speed that he attained is probably about the limit, that not only machinery but men have come to the limit of their endurance.

But have they? Man's ability to stand "cruel punishment" in whatever form seems almost unlimited. His ambitions, his courage, his eternal restless dissatisfaction with things as they are lead him forever to the exploration of new fields, the creation and development of new machinery and the consequent and painful adjustment of himself to the new conditions which he himself has created. If by some miracle the seaplane S-6-B had appeared twenty years ago, when the Schneider Cup was won by a speed of forty miles an hour there would have been no need for anyone to fly one mile and can find, not one man but many men both able and eager to fly it. We can look for the future—and the not very distant future—for bold

Meanwhile the flight above the Solent adds the final new record to the British collection. On land on water and in the air British colors are supreme. — Montreal Star.

LAWRANCE D'ORSAY

Lawrance D'Orsay's acting was at all times clean and wholesome. "The Earl of Pawtucket" in which he was perhaps his best known vehicle in America, long retained its popularity with the public. His most recent appearance in Montreal was thirty six months ago in "The Artist's Model," in which the noted stage beauty, Miss Studholme was the star. His last engagement here was in "The Squaw Man," the White Eagle" and its world—premiere in Montreal, and D'Orsay, head of the stock company, brought to his performance the fine appreciation of a long career in drama and opera. When later, "The White Eagle" was staged before the critical theatregoing public of New York, the veteran actor captivated the first nighters, who not only applauded the excellence of his work, but welcomed him warmly as a favorite of other days. His performance was marked by the meticulous attention of detail which helped to make him more than a mere actor. Years before "The White Eagle" had been thought of, Lawrence D'Orsay was a personality, in private life as well as in the theatrical world of the stage, but in spite of the brilliancies which he achieved, he always remained a very human person. On the stage he was the character he portrayed; off-stage he was a gentleman and a scholar who had played many parts, but most of all a friend to whom friendship was worth more than most laudereed in the last ten years in designing organizations representative of 50,000 workers in the Dominion. He stated that Communism has never been short of funds when destruction was involved. Communism with the support of the Russian Soviet is seeking to ruin the present form of democratic government. Attorney-General Price was home too early in starting his campaign against this menace in Ontario.

Airplane passenger service will be established in China from Shan ghai to the Siberian border where it will connect with a Soviet service to Europe.

All Seven Tenders Name Same Amount

Hamilton, Sept. 16—When tenders for twenty-one transformers were opened by the Hamilton Hydro Commission Tuesday afternoon all seven tenders were found to discover that the bid of each of the seven tenderers was the same, namely $7,221.50. Commissioner William Burton said it was very strange that the figures would be identical, but no further comment was made. Women's Interests in the Home

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman
A Real Social Sense

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When visiting the home of a very dear friend, when the manner of my friends enters the room, ther of the family enters the room, I always rise to greet her. Is this too formal or do you think it correct? To me it seems a nice courtesy to extend to an older woman and a hostess.

2 A girl friend of mine was giving a Saturday afternoon party at the home of her married sister. Her sister had not previously met any of the guests. We sat around and the sister was introduced to each one in turn. I was the only girl to rise to acknowledge the introduction. Naturally I felt that I had done a rather courageous thing, although I have been brought up to believe this correct. Was this a bit too formal?

3. Do you consider it polite or necessary when going to a friend's house for dinner to take a box of candy or flowers or something of that sort? So many people do that and to me it seems a bit though one were trying to pay for the dinner. Don't you think it nicer to return the courtesy in some other way?

4. Your social sense is perfect about this; you should, most assuredly, rise when the mother of the family, the hostess of the home enters the room. The last sentence of your question is so right!

5. You did do a consistently correct thing, dear friend, and I am so glad you allow your good manners and social sense to hold the position that they should. Not only was this not "too formal," but it was the most thoughtful thing to do. I should think that the other girls would have felt embarrassed and thoroughly uncomfortable to remain seated.

3 You are right point of view is so right and so good in your actions in all these questions that I hope that I can persuade you to change your point of view about this pleasant gesture of taking a box of flowers or candy to one's hostess.

Its unworthy of us to consider this thoughtful act in the instinctive light of "trying to pay for one's dinner." One must never, never allow such a misinterpretation of a kind thought to be so exquisitely interpreted. In several countries I have visited, and countries they are, too, famed for their graciousness of their manners and for their thoughtfulness to their friends—it is the unalterable custom always to take a gift to one's hostess. It needn't be a consequential gift, as a decorative one, but it must be a pleasant thought, a gesture of "why how is my hostess." They would be outraged and quite justifiably so, if anyone thought that this were an attempt to "pay for the dinner." No, I don't think that you do, I think the pleasant way you do in the first two queries.

Introducing the Divorce
Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

What is the proper way to introduce a divorced woman? I have a child. Several friends have asked me to call, but would introduce me as "Mrs. P. or Miss S. Please enlighten me on this subject?

Divorced.

I cannot tell you which name you should use, my friend, for that depends on which name you choose to use, and on whether you wished to return to your maiden name, this was made definite and allowable when you got your degree.

Usually women who are divorced choose to retain the Mrs., especially if they have a child.

The form of name that, in the social world, has been accepted by most divorcees, is the use of Mrs. before the last name of the maiden name used as a first name, and then the last name of the married name. That is, if Helen Mary Cliffe marries and divorces Harry Smith, she would take the name of Mrs. Cliffe Smith. And some women prefer to be known as Mrs. Helen Smith, though this is not, in the world that makes use of social form, considered good taste.

DRAPERIES MADE NEW

When we resumed housekeeping a month ago I found draperies had become creased from packing. I hung them out on the line, hoping to remove the creases. Then I forgot them. The result was they became badly faded and sun-spotted.

"I was heartsick until the happy thought struck me to dye them. I just dyed them a deeper green, and as I used Diamond Dyes they look gorgeous and new. I have never seen better dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—when used either for tinting or dyeing—and never take the life out of cloth as other dyes do."

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

Dear Readers:

"And now Dame Fashion presides the bustle.

The first showing of Paul Poiret's winter fashions before a select group revealed that the bustle has become more than just a hint in the "new styles," says a recent dispatch.

But Paul Poiret bustle is as much a bustle as it was when grandmother manipulated hers beneath yards of petticoat. The petticoats are missing, however, which makes the bustle infinitely easier to manage.

"Some rest in the conventional place for bustles in these amazing models, others are placed just below the belt line, while others begin a few inches further down. In many instances the material used to form the bustle or bustle-effect is continued on down into a train.

"Generally draped with a wide band of fur that had its counterpart around the rim of one of those draped to the rear apron tunics.

"The gowns, less severe in their return to bygone days, were those of the directoire period where suggestion played the greater part of accomplishment. High waistlines were in evidence, with a very pitt cess draping of skirts and a clinging flowing line. Square necks further accentuated the period, and a great deal of machine stitching in points and a scroll design spoke more for the mode they represented than the many frills and flo belows would have done in their place.

"A demure costume which dispelled the need of gloves included a black net cuff, terminating in long and tight net sleeves, falling completely over the hand and reaching to the tip of the longest finger. These can be turned back during the showing the model usually gathered a bit of it in the palm of her hand and thereby gave more of a glazed hand.

"The novelty of the evening consisted in elaborate gowns made of silk jersey. This material never before had been used, but because of its clinging nature it adapts itself admirably to the mode. The jersey was sheer, of course, than the quality used in sports dresses and suits. Done with a fibrous-look duct about 600 feet above a ravine, hurling seven coaches into the chasm and killing 11 others and gended above, eighteen persons were injured.

Fashionably yours,
LUCILLE.

Subdued glitter may be a paradox but just the same it is the key-note of many of the new evening frocks and even the oldest shape are used for a lovely gown in sapphire blue. The frock is form fitting with the skirt flaring from the knees down. There is jaunty little coat of the sequins.

"Smart footsteps will be those that come from the shoes of the new Drorsay lasts that have come out of the bedroom into the street one of the new shoes for formal afternoon or evening wear in black velvet with strappings and heel of gold kid.

Right in hand with smartness goes the new bag. Delightful for Autumn afternoon wear is a bag of navy faille with contrasting bands of red. And piped with silver cloth. There is a fastening of hinged enamel and mother-of-pearl set with marcasite!

A pleasant surprise is the enormous success of gay marcasite this Summer and its continued favor this Autumn. Black marcasite is the medium for a charming new afternoon frock which combines two shades of pink for the collar that outlines the neck and terminates in a bow at the side of the high waist. The belt is of silver metal disc.

The hard working camel coat is more useful and popular than ever, albeit more dressy than it used to be A polo coat of beige camel's hair has a novel cross-over collar, seamed shoulders, irregular closing and oddly shaped dark brown leather belt clasped with amber in match the tone of the buttons.

OLD SALT

by Ethel Willis Hewitt

(By Ethel Willis Hewitt)
Seaview wasn't much of a summer resort. Just a handful of cottages and a rambling, frame hotel, crowning a narrow, crooked boardwalk, against a wide stretch of sandy beach. True, there was a pier or two, and the amusements at one end of the board-walk, and it was a popular excursion resort. The train ran directly up to the board-walk, and belched forth streams of perspiring humanity, right in the midst of everything.

But the best thing about Seaview was the water, an ocean of it, and sand that you could run through with your fingers. For that, Betty could endure anything. Her eyes were still misty with thoughts of her morning dip, as she took the rumpled dollar bill and tore off five tickets from the huge yellow spool. She laid them beside the fifty cents change, under the iron bars of the ticket window, and watched the fat man and four hasty youngsters wedge themselves through the turnstile.

Betty had learned a lot about life from the ticket window at the Old Mill. She liked it all. The slush of water, as the boats slid in and out of the dark, narrow opening. The shouts and squeals of delight that came from inside, and the sharp smell of salt water mingled with the odor of painted canvas.

On hot nights, Betty did a rushing business. There was always a little thrill attached to passing out tickets to bashful young couples who sought romance in the damp, musty channels of the Old Mill. Some girls would have disliked her job, but not Betty. She knew all about people and how to read them. Had you found it, and she got a lot of fun out of it, too.

She caught sight of a tall, blond figure, looking her way, and flushed. He was leaning against the hot dog stand, eating a sandwich. She had met him three days ago. At least he had rescued her when he thought she was drowning.

"I'm quite all right," she had told him, but he towed her in, nevertheless.

"You were too far out. The current's tricky."

Funny, how they struck it off like that from the start. It was more than though. He was there every morning to go swimming with her, at sunrise.

That was how Betty endured short hours and pay, and even the danger of infection by washing our hands with the right soap many times a day and particularly before meals. Not a wash with just any good soap but with Lifebuoy—Lifebuoy means a germ-safe Laboratory tests prove that it will kill or remove almost every deadly germs, where other soaps fail.

Later chugging out in his motor boat they laughed.

"And I, thought you were a life guard, or something."

Jim groaned.

"Not much. They hang too close to shore for me."

Betty giggled delightedly.

"You should have been a sailor—you old salt."

She met his eyes.

"Wrong again. I've not the hankering all right, but the light house is just right. Not too far out, not too far in."

After rambling through the tiny house, they stood on the narrow porch and watched the miracle of rippling, foam splashed water, beneath an opalescent sky. Betty decided that it was just right—all of that. Something in the beauty of it got hold of her, made her quiet, leaning against the porch rail.

"Something is on your mind," Jim asked almost reverently.

"More than that. It makes me feel like—oh, I wish I were a man," she added with a wistful little sigh.

Jim caught her meaning.

"You don't have to be. That's—" He stopped, looking into dark-lashed eyes and flushed.

"Betty, is there a chance for me? Before the summer's over, some girl might be crazy enough to—" His glance didn't waver, but because his hand slid along the rail and fell to the touch of hers, he couldn't go on.

Betty looked at her watch hurriedly.

"I think before the summer's over I'd better get back to unravelling yellow tickets."

They laughed into each other's eyes, the young lovers coming out of the Old Mill, and their hands trembled a little when he helped her into the boat, but neither knew they were in love, that the situation of the lighthouse wasn't the only thing that was just right.

Daring Thief Raids Warehouse in Daylight

Finger Print Caught Him

In Detroit some months ago a man in overalls walked calmly came in the doorway of a clothing warehouse waiting to be noticed. On walking round the corner he found a huge safe with its express delivery truck standing side.

He saw a brush, hoer and rower, and walked away. Jumping into the seat he drove back to the clothing warehouse. Calmly signing the express book he loaded the cases on the truck he had stolen and drove away—with several hundred dollars worth of clothing.

So daring was the theft that he might never have been traced but one of the thieves placed a finger print upon page as his false signature in the express book. The print proved to be that of a well known gangster. Throwing out their drag-net the police soon caught him.

His finger print was the means of sending him to jail for a long term.

Your Prints on Food—Danger!

This story is not told to warn you against stealing. You are not a thief, and need have nothing. But you do need to be told of the dangers in finger print carelessness.

They may bring a dangerous disease to you—in this way. When you touch soap fruit, a chocolate or a biscuit, your prints leave germs on the food. In your mouth these germs multiply a million fold and quickly attack your system.

These germs come from touching things other hands have touched—money, a book, a telephone or some door handle. All day long you run into this danger. Life Extension Institute tells 27 diseases which may be spread by finger prints. Cold and flu are among them.

Avoid this Danger—with Lifebuoy

While we cannot avoid coming in contact with germs we can avoid the danger of infection by washing our hands with the right soap many times a day and particularly before meals. Not a wash with just any good soap but with Lifebuoy—Lifebuoy means a germicide. Laboratory tests prove that it will kill or remove almost every deadly germs, where other soaps fail.

Protection against Odours

There is no partiess in Lifebuoy just an extra-clean wash of purity which disappears at once but tells you it purifies and protects. A bath with Lifebuoy before you start the day's work makes you safer against body odours for many hours.

Why not use a soap which combines so many advantages? You will find it particularly good for children, for it helps to heal cuts and scratches which otherwise might become infected. Keep it always on the basin and for the bath. Let everyone in your house enjoy it and learn to adopt the Lifebuoy habit.

Get several cakes from your dealer to-day so that you will always have some on hand.

A'S AND CARDS WILL MEET IN WORLD SERIES

Connie Mack Cinches Title By Defeating Indians 14-3

SENATORS SECOND

Cards Can Get Nothing More Than Tie By Losing All Games

By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer

Connie Mack, the 68-year-old sage of Shibe Park, can spend the next two weeks figuring out what pitcher the St. Louis Cardinals will not accept him to start against them in the first game of the world series.

Any other worry the Philadelphia pilot might have is removed this afternoon, when his Athletics entered yesterday's play in third place, but by the margin of only a single game over whelming the Cleveland Indians, 14 to 3, while Washington and Detroit were bowing to St. Louis 3 to 2.

If they repeat their world championship could lose their remaining 12 games and, providing Washington won its last 13, still finish with a full game lead over the Senators. That, however, is highly improbable, as Lefty Grove would have to win another game or two.

When informed his A's had won for him the American League flag, Connie Mack admitted he was pleased, but failed to enthuse. It was here last year. Ever since May 8, when they launched a 17-game winning streak to carry them to the top, it has been considered that nothing short of a disaster would deprive them of the pennant. Cards Clinch Second

By coincidence, the Cardinals chose this same day to take a strangle hold on the National League hunting. Defeating Philadelphia 3 to 2 in their closest rivals, the New York Giants, were held idle by rain. Washington's warriors assumed themselves at least a 2 to 1 choice. If they lose their remaining games and Giants sweep their last three, finish with 95 victories and 59 defeats.

The veteran Ed Rommel, rather than one of Mack's high powered pitchers, drew the assignment facing the argument. He was fairly liberal, granting the Indians eight hits but was nothing to what his mates did to two Indian hurlers. They piled up 18 hits, every member of the team batting at least one hit and driving across a run.

Washington, trailing 4 to 2 through the seventh inning, threat ened to carry the fight over another day. Fred Brickell rallied to tie the count in the eighth and then nicked Lloyd Brown for the winning run in the ninth there went Walk Johnson's hopes of an American League flag.

Still In Third

The New York Yankees, still scrapping for second place, made it four straight from the Detroit Tigers, 9 to 2. Outside of Gordon Rhode's seven-inning pitching the victory was assured by Lou Gehrig's forty-fourth home run in the fifth inning with two on base.

Tom Oliver made it the tenth inning with two out and the bases loaded drove Danny MacFayden in with the run that gave the Boston Red Sox a 3 to 2 win over Chicago, their second in a row. The game was a brilliant duel between Ted Lyons and MacFayden, who went the route.

National League

Jim Lindsey, whose specialty is relief work, bracked out to do it full-time during trick as the Cards scored their important shutout. The big relief-man allowed only five hits, all singles while his mates got in Clint Dudley for nine, including two doubles by Jim Bottomley.

The Pittsburgh Pirates, behind superb pitching by Heine Meine and Larry French, trounced the Brooklyn Robins twice, 5 to 2 and 7 to 1. Dazzy Vance deserved better fate in the nightcap, when errors by Norman and Wright gave the Pirates all their runs.

DISABLED PLANE FOUND

London, Sept. 16.—(AP)—The British trawler, Lord Ernest, wireless the Associated Press today that it had picked up the wreckage of a seaplane in the approximate vicinity, owhere Parker Cramer, United States flier, was believed to have been lost on the flight from Detroit to Copenhagh via Eastern Canada.

CHATTERTON W.I.

The Chatterton Women's Institute held their September meeting at the home of Mrs. L. Frost on Thursday afternoon. After singing the opening ode the Lord's Prayer was repeated in unison. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. It was moved and seconded that $2.00 be donated toward the school fair.

The roll call was answered by "First aid in emergencies."

Collection was taken and after repeating the Ishpah the hostess served a dainty lunch.

HOOT GOES TO GIANTS

Sam "Hoot" Gibson, the long right-hander who toiled many years for Toronto in the International League, and who this year won more than twenty games for the San Francisco Seals, is back in the makes and he should go this time. Rowdling Manager McGraw of the New York Giants knows that he can do fodder regularly. Gibson was purchased for the reported sum of $50,000 but was sold by Toronto for half that amount to the Yankees a year ago. By the shrinking but a spendthrift. When his meals are bought for him by the ball club he does not stint himself, but when he is given so much daily to buy his groceries, his wife is said, generally known as a "cream-puffer." Men who know Gibson well say darkness and the electric light have made him great because he is particularly fitted for that kind of pitching. His delivery leaves the batter in the dark. He is one of those pitchers with more motion than a contortionist trying a double jow knot around his back. He will not of course get any night games in the majors, if he fails to win for the Giantsand then goes back to Toronto. Somebody must set there again, it will be pretty well conceded that he is an electric-light pitcher.

AL MAMAUX HURLS TEAM TO TWIN WIN

Manager of Bears Was Too Good For Reading in Both Games

TIED FOR 4TH

Orioles Kept Pace in Race Defeating Jersey City 25-2

(By The Associated Press)

Al Mamaux, veteran manager of the Newark Bears, again has stepped into the breach, when things began to look bad for his team in their struggle with Rochester for the International League pennant, as a result of his strenuous and successful efforts, the Bears again are back in the thick of the struggle a half game behind the leaders, and Mamaux who hasn't pitched often this season is uniformly successful, when he has started, put over a feat that several young hurlers of the League have tried this season yesterday and won two games from Reading yesterday, Mamaux held the Keys to two hits in the first game of a doubleheader and like a shutout only, when Jim Poole clouted a homer in the seventh inning. The score, was, 2 to 1. Then the Newark manager sent himself back to the mound and blanked Reading with five hits to win 6 to 0.

The League-leading Red Wings were stopped by rain in their game with Buffalo and as a result, Frankie's two victories netted the Bears a gain of a full game. Newark got only eight hits off Rech, in the opening battle, one of them a homer by Bennett. In the second clash, O'Keefe limited the Bears to seven hits but would have benched in two big innings, four runs in the first holding the game to two.

The other close battle, the Montreal-Toronto struggle for fourth place, remained deadlocked as their game was rained out. Baltimore, the only team in the league to be playing a night game, scoring 10 runs in the inning and 7 more in the fifth beat Jack Joe Hauser's Sist Jones run of the season and one by Red Hargrave to help along, the Orioles by a 25 to 2 score. Jersey City could hold the Skeeters to five hits and pitched shutout ball until the ninth.

In their special Pullman car Gibbards Athletics left for North Bay last evening. Manager "Spuds" Gibbard and Coach "Walt" Gerow took their fall teams to the Northern Town. Trade Sweet; who was an absentee due to the death of his sister at last Saturday's game, went with the club. This boy is about the world's smallest ball player, he stands about 5 foot tall and the "midget" sure makes the opposing pitchers work when they throw to him.

As we stated before "the eyes of Eastern Ontario are upon Gibbard's Athletics" and, also their good wishes.

We were sorry to hear of the illness of Stan Bergeyne, who is confined in the Orillia Hospital with appendicitis. Stan, we understand was about to return to Fredericton, N.B. when he was taken sick. He is to coach the Fredericton team in the Maritime League this coming winter.

Another Canadian boy has risen on the horizon of the sporting world in the personage of Cecil Dixon, Dyn. who, recently was hired as manager of the Chicago Cubs farm. Which, by the way, reminds us of the fact that the Belleville Arena directors are still trying to induce the Chicago American League team to do their training in Belleville this season. It would be a great boost for the city in Belleville if this idea could be realized.

The Kingston Capitols ran into a snag when they lost the first game of the Eastern Ontario Baseball to the Ottawa Gladstones by the score of 13 to 4. The Capitols committed no less than 9 errors during the game. We too had that they did not have a few of those errors against the local CIACO club last week.

Umpire Ari Twigg, we understand, threatened to call the game in favor of Kingston if the Ottawa team did not comply with his every call. Well that's one way to win ball games for the home club.

All indications are to the fact that St. Louis and Philadelphia will hook-up in the World's series this year. The American league has won the series six consecutive times lately, but, the "Cardinals" feel assured that they will turn the table on the "White Elephants" this fall. (Maybe.)

It is rumored around town that the doctors are about to bring a couple of physicians for consultation. On Friday, these eminent doctors are getters of no mean ability and it seems queer that their services are needed on the exact day when the "medical men" are playing the local lawyers at their annual golf match. All is fair in love and "smacking the little white pill." . . . . . .

St. Hilda's Band Was Founded in 1869

Belleville musicians and friends of the Royal Light Infantry cannot but be pleased to know that the premier band of England, the "St. Hilda's Band," is to visit this city on September 24th., to give a concert under the auspices of the local regiment.

Proceeds of the concert will be recognition of the superior musicianship of the band as well as wadance of the regimental fund which requires aid owing to the smallness of the departmental grant this year.

This band is a world champion organization and each member is a bronze, silver or gold medallist. It has won over eighty first prizes, fifteen challenge cups, and one hundred and fifty prizes. The band was founded in 1869. Last week the band played at the Canadian National Exhibition.

In these days of depression nothing is more stirring than music which will make the people forget worries which are best forgotten.

This little opportunity is given to hear bands of international renown. We have opportunity to hear Belleville's.

The local regiment needs the assistance of every citizen in this undertaking of bringing to Belleville this fine organization. What monies the regiment make out of the visit of the band to town will be placed in the fund for furthering the interests of the regiment.

STORM RACES INTO MEXICO

Heavy Rain and Strong Wind Now Prevalent Inland

Mexico City, Sept. 16 (A.P.) —A tropical hurricane which swept across the Yucatan Peninsula from the Caribbean yesterday was expected to penetrate inland in Northern Vera Cruz today after crossing across the southwestern part of the Gulf of Mexico.

Reports from Vera Cruz city last night said it was raining there and a considerable wind had sprung up but that the weather conditions were not alarming.

The hurricane would pass to the north of the city and strike the mainland somewhere between there and Tampico.

No further reports have been received from Lower California since dispatches which told of a loss of some lives and heavy property damage in Santa Rosalia, caused by a hurricane, which swept the peninsula Saturday and Sunday. Damage in Santa Rosalia caused in La Paz, capital of the district.

Reports from Manzilan said there still was no news from several coastwise vessels which were caught in the hurricane. It was feared they had foundered. The largest had twenty passengers aboard.

The four elements, according to ancient and medieval philosophy, were earth, water, air and fire.

Yesterday's Stars

Dib Williams, Athletics — Made five straight hits to land an 18-3 victory over Cleveland that clinched American League pennant for Philadelphia.

Jim Lindsey, Cardinals—Shut out Phillies with five hits for Cards' fifth straight victory.

Larry Bettencourt, Browns—Batting in two runs as Browns came from behind to down Senators 5-4.

Heinie Meine and Larry French, Pirates—Opened Robins in both games of doubleheader, 5-2 and 7-1, allowing 13 hits in both games.

Tom Oliver, Red Sox — Singled in tenth to drive in run that beat White Sox 3-2.

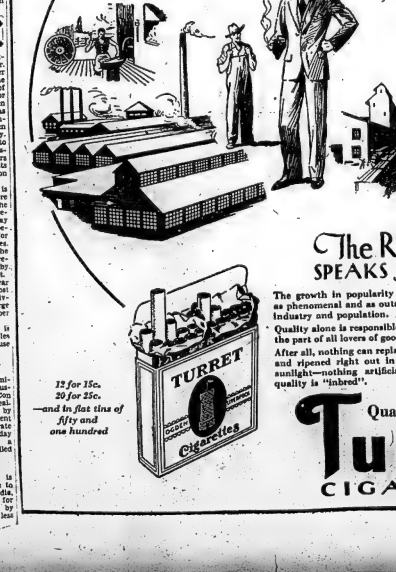
GOLF

Congratulations are being extended to George Faulkner and Dr. George Morgan for the low winner and runner-up respectively in the men's championship at the Quinte Golf and Country Club for 1931. The final game between these two outstanding players was a nip-and-tuck affair and terminated only on the seventeenth green Mr. Faulkner, who has been playing steadier golf all season, was to display his full bag of tricks to display his skill. Both players fully merit the favorable comments on their improved game this season.

On Wednesday afternoon it is quite probable there will be more damage done to the fairways of the Bay of Quinte Club than by frequently happens on any single day The occasion is another clash between the Drakes and Duffers for the dinner and sundry prizes. Every man who plays golf at the bayside club is expected to be present when sides will be chosen by the President and Vice-President.



Similar affairs earlier in the year have proved to be among the most enjoyable of all the season's activities, and the committee in charge look for a turnout close to 100 per cent. of the membership.

Another interesting event is that for nine of the lightest holes players will be restricted to the use of putters and one other club.

PROBLEMS OF IDLE IN NORTH

25,000 Workless Must Have Work Found For Them

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 16— With approximately 25,000 unemployed men in Northern Ontario, the Provincial Government is said to be concerning over the problem of finding work for these men as well as for the 15,000 who are registered in old Ontario.

Conditions in Northern Ontario are worse than at any previous time, according to Hon. Dr. J. S. Robb, Provincial Minister of Health who has just returned from a week's trip in that district. The almost entire absence of log cutting during the bush will add to the problem, he said.

Unemployed single men, it has been decided, will be put to work on construction of the Trans-Provincial highway from the Provincial Parliament Buildings here to Port Arthur. It is expected that the work will be sent North from old Ontario, according to Hon. Charles McCrea, Minister of Lands and Forests and of the Government's Northern Development.

Meanwhile, reports on the establishment of camps along the projected highway route is proceeding with as rapidity as possible.

Letters to the Editor

Belleville, Sept. 15, 1931

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:—The officers and members of the Belleville Ontario Athletic Junior Baseball team desire to publicly acknowledge the splendid reception shown in connection with the Clifford trophy contest.

We sincerely appreciate your courtesy and probably the warmth of welcome in your paper, the splendid professional services rendered by Dr. Fremlin and Dr. Ross, the support of the general public in the purchase of tickets.

The proceeds, records, accounts, etc., have been audited and certified by the Secretary-Treasurer of the B.A.A.A. and found correct, finally in meeting the expense incurred.

Clive's misfortune in breaking his arm during a game was a serious handicap to the team in the playoff series. The boys, however, playing for the first time in Memorial Park, Belleville, Ontario, Canada, O.H.A.A. Company made a very creditable showing and took everything amicably toward another season.

Canada is Resuming Her Normal Condition

Ottawa, Sept. 16—Predicting an improvement in railway earnings with the harvesting of the grain crop, Senator Gideon Robertson, in a survey of the improvement since inflation lasted last night, asserted that Canada would shortly resume her activities and "enjoy prosperity on still greater progress."

He stated that the new "many indications" of the passing of the depression of Senator Haber-Co seed the first statement in which the Federal Government has credited the work being done with its aid in such avenue under the legislation passed at the last session of parliament.

While he admitted that the construction in the transportation industry continued to "languish," Senator Robertson expressed the belief that the way ahead seemed to have improved in the past week. He noted however that the large amount of grain in the railways last year, when they set out to help matters by financing their spending budgets as far as possible, had left a difficult problem to them to participate to the same degree this year.

KNIGHTS OF ROAD HELD BY POLICE

Slowing up for the signal at Stirling, five men boarded the western bound freight at that place this afternoon and despite the conductor's commands, refused to get out of the box car in which they had located. Pressure was used by the conductor's forte, however, and he immediately locked the men into the car and sealed it, notifying the local C.N.R. police at Lindsay. Constable Morden answered the call, making a record trip to Campbellford where he apprehended the transients and placed them in the town lock-up.

1932 Glass of Fashion

Fall fashions in all their glamour and charm continued to intrigue visitors to the Kiwanis Karnival when last evening there was presented the Kroch Bros. Style Show. As each lovely mannequin pirouetted her appeal grew and the pleasure of the spectators was enthusiastically expressed by the generous applause. Terms like "just the ensemble" and evening wear, wraps and millinery were shown by Beryl Kroch. Her while jewelry was from McPee's and furs from Delaneys. The girls who showed the garments during the evening were Miss J. Kerr, Miss Georgina Ray, Mrs. Ben Burley, Miss Gladys Emerson, Miss Isabelle Bell, Miss Edith Halsted, Mrs. R. A. Roberts.

Fascinating Costumes

Stressing the authentic style notes for winter 1932, the Kroch Bros' presentation of costumes was one that was great admiration from the audience. The newer trends in fabric and finish, the colors that have the favoured place in the mode and the trimming touches that gave an air to smartly tailored suits were shown. Each fancy of Dame Fashion was reflected in the styles that made their appearance last evening. Underlying the popularity of black satin, the afternoon frocks often combined white trimming to great advantage The beauty of velvet for fabrics in fabric and colors for the nonchalant little sports frocks added to the success of the evening's showing. Many of the suits have the military trimmes softened by the generous use of fur in collar and cuffs. The new trend in coats is the material which has forsaken the sooth fabric for the new weaves of crepe or spongy cloths. Capes were in many cases bellies, the slender jingle dress appearing to greater advantage without them.

In colours the prominence of black was marked with brown and green following. The French Colonial Exposition this season has many costumes and colours, chief among the latter being the new green, orange and yellow combination.

Millinery for the evening's show was from Kroch Bros. and included some very chic little models. Peil was noticed in many, the latest being the adaption of the Scotch cap, to the Second Empire millinery. The softened Engenie effect was very charming and most hats showed a feather or quill of some kind. One sustained

by TOM GILL

Morales smiled to delight. "You feel that? I am glad. It is what I should most like—to preserve a world as it here is for grandfathers knew it. I try to keep the present at bay. The pressure—it is so unlike existing, so unlovely, no? You see, even for my servants I insist on the old costumes of the country." His hand indicated the peon girl who passed them in a blouse of gay colors, strings of spangles about her neck and ankles. "I also," he said with a moaning smile, "retain another old custom"—and he nodded to a small one-room building with barred windows and heavily grated door. "My private prison," he added. "But come in. A glass of Spanish wine will take the taste of alkali from your throat."

Up the long, flower-bordered path he led them, through an oak-hewn door, and into the fragrant, security of the house. Beyond the tiled floor stretched a broad patio, and in its center the waters of a fountain fell, cool and silvery. Palms and rare shrubs were growing, within this restful place, where there seemed to be no sound but the soft falling of water and the lazy chirping of two brilliant yellow birds.

From behind a high wicker chair a thin column of cigarette smoke curled upward. Helplessly Morales shrugged.

"That is one modern wolf I have not succeeded in banishing. But what can I do, no matter what I do, Your generation, Senor Radcliffe, is a very insidious one."

From behind the chair a languid voice trilled: "Do not worry. I will come in the siesta hour, both of you and all morning I tried to look my prettiest. Now you burst in at the height of my beauty sleep are skinned and hair musicial. Come over here, Senor Radcliffe, and tell me why you've kept us waiting for three hours."

Radcliffe found himself looking into her smiling eyes. "That nose," he announced, solemnly, "should be sheen shiny in all its impudent life."

She held out her hand and shrugged. "Wonderful person, to think of a speech like that after miles of desert. Bob, where did your big gringo learn his serious and convincing way of telling the most outrageous lies?"

"It's probably a gift."

"Si, it would have to be. He is much too young ever to have learned it."

Morales was burying himself with a long, thin bottle.

"Of this I'll draw the cork myself," he explained over his shoulder. "One must combine love and care in opening old wines."

"So the men he handed glasses of the straw-colored fluid.

"It is the sunlight of Spain, gentlemen. Its warmth and sunny afternoons of some Spanish vineyard."

They raised their glasses toward Adela. Don Bob sipped appreciatively.

"That is worth many miles of desert road."

"Wine," responded Morales, "is it not one of the divine gifts? The Yaqui Indians who live here in our foothills state it was the first drink was given to the world by a goddess who happened to fall in love with their chieftain. It may be true. Why not? Perhaps goddesses become human when they love, just as mortal men become divine. That is why no man should fall in love. A man should only allow himself to be loved, yet, Senorita, are not life's richest sources of amusement the love of women and the domination of men?" The Spaniard pouted out another glass of wine.

Abruptly Ted broke the long silence. "Senor Morales, you have my father. When I came out here I thought I had died, and this notch was. Don Bob has told me my father was practically a pauper. I myself am penniless. You probably know this already."

For a moment Morales hesitated. "Senor Radcliffe, it would be folly to pretend I did not. I would be the foo what this must mean to you. It would be cruel courtesy to ignore it. For my niece and for myself I can only say we are most sorry. Whatever I can do to help you, if anything can be done, I shall do gladly."

Radcliffe suppressed a start of surprise. There was evident sincerity, pure and simple, or deceit marvelously well acted. He looked toward Don Bob, who sat apparently unconcerned, intent on the enjoyment of his wine.

"I'm glad of your directness," Ted said. "Senor, I, too, will be direct. It has all come as a surprise, complete and very disturbing. I have not prepared to me that you may know the source of my financial disaster."

The Spaniard turned the glass in his long fingers. "I am sorry you will understand, Senor Radcliffe, that your father's worry and mine were quite distinct. It is true our interests often coincided, for a time they did, but I remember that first day in with what we both were doing. Thus, we had organized the North Mexico Railroad in order to get its special shipping rates. It was interested in his irrigation scheme, and he co-operated for a time, one might say, as partners."

"What was yours' ego?"

"That was 25 years ago."

"And in the buying of the land for the railroad terminal plan, did you do that together?"

"Si."

"You held controlling interest, Senor Morales?"

"I held a little over half—that was the agreement."

Ted tighted a cigarette. "What do you think was the cause of my father's failure?"

"It was simply that he had borrowed and expanded on the wrong, the wrong time, Senor. If it had not been for those disastrous days when money was impossible to get, and when the industry was toppling, your father might have doubled his investments. But things went badly. Your father was not to be indicreet."

"Did my father ask you for help before he killed himself?"

"He asked me to keep the Mexican government from canceling its concessions. I could not do that for him. I myself was fighting against failure."

Senor Morales, if you will pardon a blunt question in your own house, did it help you in your own difficulties to have Senor Radcliffe's father?"

Morales looked at Radcliffe. He may have been unwilling on an answer, but the deeply lined face betrayed nothing. As a matter of truth, it would not. Had it come earlier—perhaps. But let me say this, I, me something I hope you will believe. I would not have had your father fail for his own benefit. He was, in a sense, my friend."

Ted laughed. Don Bob's words and was silent. His steady gaze held the black eyes of Morales for a moment, and it may have been that the Spaniard's quivered for an instant.

"All this—it will profoundly change your plans, Senor Radcliffe. Might one ask your plans?"

"I have no real plans as yet. Don Bob has offered that I work with him. I'm going to try it. If I find that I am only a charity burden, I'll go back. East, and yet—" He looked out the broad window toward the blazing desert. "Everything here has made me want to stay. Perhaps for always. The East holds very little for me now."

"Let us hope you will stay always." Morales rose and looked at his watch. "In the half-hour will be our horse race. Until then I shall leave you with Adela while I see Don Bob in my office."

As the footsteps of their going died away, the girl looked up from her deep chair, reached out and took his hand.

"It is a very brave thing you are doing, Ted Radcliffe, to hold your head up beneath this sudden blow. But do you mind 'I I add one word of caution?"

"Say anything in the world to me you want."

"Then I want to say this. Something in your manner tells me you believe Uncle may have had something to do with your father's loss. Whether he did or not I can't say. I know nothing of his enterprises. But until you are sure, or until you can see some end to be served, be careful, my friend. I would not have conflict between you."

"Why?"

"Because," she answered simply. "I am fond of Don Bob and I like you. My uncle is very powerful and he holds to the Spanish idea of a blow for a blow. You won't think me meddling for saying this, will you?"

I think you're quite, quite perfect, and I'll talk no more today about what has passed. Out here, in this place of beauty and yesterday it is hard to think that any other world exists, isn't it? At least a world where bonds and stocks and failures have any place."

"I often wonder if they have," she answered slowly. "I was East for two years at school you know, and at times people would take me down into what you call the business section of those great cities of yours. I always felt I was stifled. I felt that unfold havoc has been wrought by in this once tranquil town are more than hundred persons are little colony.

shall break him in two—so." And his great hands closed together in a twisting gesture.

The girl laughed outright. "Sweet and simple solution."

5000 PILGRIMS AT MIDLAND

Midland, Ont., Sept. 15. (CP)—About 5,000 pilgrims, the largest body to come here this summer, poured Sunday through Midland to the Martyrs' Shrine at Port Del Marie. The official pilgrimage was that of the Catholic Women's League of Toronto, but hundreds of other Catholics took the opportunity to attend the last of the Sunday services for the year. Many dedicated and maimed and people affected with all manner of ills, flocked there, in hope of cure.

Tes'imony to the growing number of these cures affected at the Shrine was given by Rev. T. J. Lally, rector of the Shrine, who read a list of ascertained healings said to have taken place this year.

"TRAVELLING HUSBANDS" DRAWS LARGE ATTENDANCE

Last night, the Capitol housed large crowds of adults who accepted the advice of the management to see "Travelling Husbands."

Outstanding highlights of this expose of travelling husbands are story, treatment and acting. It is a well known fact that an anecdote concerning the travelling salesman is usually avoided in the best of society, so that the director of "Travelling Husbands" had an almost impossible task to adapt an episode from the lives of these hard-working, hard-living knights of the commercial road, and make a drama suitable for public exhibition. The director of "Travelling Husbands" deserves a great deal of praise for the finished product.

Acting honours most certainly go to Evelyn Brent. This dynamic actress has unlimited talent, and no matter what characteristic or emotion is called for, she responds with superlative ease. In the leading role opposite Miss Brent, Constance Cummings and Stanley Fields are distinctive, each discovering their part with conviction.

The story is fraught with comedy and tragedy, intrigue and innuendo, strength and weakness, and at times, interspersed with an element of the humdrum.

"Travelling Husbands" should not be missed by adults.

The programme, includes Rosco Ates, the stuttering star of "Cimarron"; the thrilling chapter play "The Lone Starved Ranger," and is shown for the last time tonight.

RUTH CHATTERTON'S NEW HIT TOPS HER RECENT DRAMAS

Ruth Chatterton, who has contributed "Sarah and Son" of the outstanding screen dramas of the past two years, comes to the Capitol again in a picture that rivals for dramatic greatness "Sarah and Son," "Anybody's Woman," "The Right to Love" and "Unfaithful." It is "The Magnificent Lie," at the Belle Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, matinee daily.

Each of Chatterton's characterizations has demanded the ultimate in acting talent from the distinguished actress, and in the part called for such a complete newness of spirit and technique that "The Magnificent Lie," Chatterton sings the song in the development of the story.

"The Magnificent Life," based on the novel by Faith Baldwin, "Laurels and the Lady," presents Miss Chatterton as a New Orleans cafe singer, a charming person who deals lightly with the emotions. A laughing wager that she can impersonate a famous French actress, at that moment in the east of New Orleans, leads her to impose upon Ralph Blaney as a sincere young lumberman.

Ralph Blaney, who supports Chatterton in "The Magnificent Lie" is easily described as the handsome male lead in love with her, and, in spite of herself, she falls to love him. Blaney is a young lawyer out to distillusion him, and plays a part that makes Chatterton's performance. Their love is put to the supreme test.

Ralph Bellamy, who supports Chatterton in "The Magnificent Lie" is easily described as the handsome male lead in love with her, and, in spite of herself, she falls to love him. Blaney is a young lawyer out to distillusion him, and plays a part that makes Chatterton's performance. Their love is put to the supreme test.

Ralph Bellamy who has been captivated by the voice of the French screen,

THREE CLEVER ACTS SEEN AT THE KARNIVAL

Vaudeville Given Much Better Than on Opening Night

FINE ACCORDIONIST

Sister Act and Slack Wire Artist Rounded Out Programme

Last night's vaudeville at the Kiwanis Karnival was something a little different than has been seen in Belleville lately. In order to make the surroundings a little more congenial the Kiwanis Karnival procured "Slim" Burgess as master of ceremonies for the remainder of the week. "Slim" kept the patrons amused with his wisecracks and witty sayings during the evening's performance. The boy is very good and his jokes were well received by those present. The first act was staged by the Calhoun sisters, Helen and Marie, these little girls did what is known as a "kick act," their clever singing and dancing received rounds of applause from the patrons. "Our" Mauro, the wandering accordionist, gave the patrons a treat that they will long remember. Mr. Mauro is a very clever accordion player and his many intimations received rounds of applause. He entertained the people with both classical and modern music as played on the accordion. He has a large white accordion with double key-board and the music from the instrument could be heard all over the building.

George Grant, slack-wire artist, was next on the programme. Mr. Grant gave a fifteen minute exhibition of the art of slack-wire walking, etc. Some of his tricks on the wire caused many hearty rounds of applause. While standing on the slack-wire, Mr. Grant would do feats of juggling and Indian club swinging. His cigar box trick went over with a bang. He supported ten cigar boxes in the air by merely holding the two end boxes. This feat brought down the house as Mr. Grant finished his act. The Calhoun Sisters again gave the fans a few bits of singing and dancing. This new act put on by the girls was very well received by the public. "Our" Mauro again favored the patrons with a few selections before "Slim" Burgess after amusing the crowd for a few minutes announced that tonight's vaudeville would surpass anything that has ever been seen in Belleville. Mr. Burgess personally recommended tonight's vaudeville. There will be a complete change of program each night.

PLANE WITHOUT TAIL

Berlin, Sept. 15.—(AP)—An airplane without a tail for trans-Atlantic flight was demonstrated before representatives of the Ministry of transportation. It has a wing-spread of only 45 feet and is driven by a 38-horsepower motor. Its sponsors claim it has shown such remarkable flying qualities that it may prove to be a turning point in airplane construction.

Embarrassing Moments

WATER, FAMINE, DISEASE, CHIEF PERILS NOW FEARED

Second Hurricane Strikes 150 Miles North as Refugees Flee

FOOD SHORT

Dead Are Being Burned Without Identification or Ceremony

Belize, British Honduras, Sept. 16.—(AP)—Mankind fears of a food and water shortage, an outbreak of disease and riots by stricken natives today dominated Belize's efforts to repair the havoc of storm and flood.

Estimates of the dead still ranged between 500 and 1,000 with the probability that when outlying districts are heard from the mortality list will reach the latter figure. The wholesale burial and cremation of the victims without identification made it likely that their exact number never will be known.

Much Ye Ba Done

Diddier Masson, Pan-American Airways field manager, after a survey of the hurricane area warned that "general problems still remain to be solved" before the work of reconstructing the city, either on its present site or further inland, can go forward unimpeded. The food supply is running short, he said, and the lack of drinking water is serious. The danger of disease could not be underestimated in his opinion and the possibility of trouble among the laboring classes was a grave factor in the work of relief.

"The blazing sun has been beating down mercilessly," he said, "bringing additional suffering to the injured as they lie in rows on the floors of roofless homes. Masses of sea flah imbedded in pools of liquid mud are up to the waist. The wave are decomposing and the air at times is unbearable.

The remaining population is still dumfounded by the enormity of the catastrophe for it had been the belief for generations that no hurricane would ever strike Belize. The native population, are stricken, that seems to have overcome them with a trance, still unable to grasp the truth of the enormity of the horrible tragedy.

Starting to Rehabilitate

Nevertheless rehabilitation measures are proceeding under the direction of British authorities and with the help of United States air lines and sailors. The sound of hammer and saw is heard often at natives go about the work of restoring walls and roofs, torn asunder by last Thursday's disaster.

The Salvation Army has taken over operation of soup kitchens to feed the hungry. Doctors have commandeered 10,000 gallons of water stored in a nearby Key. Additional food and medical supplies are arriving by ship and plane. The perils of the dead and relief for the injure goes steadily forward.

About 5,000 cases of whiskey, scattered about by the force of the storm, have been collected by warehouse agents and stacked on the main streets awaiting new storage facilities.

LOSES LIFE AS HOUSE BURNS

Brantford, Ont., Sept. 15 —(CP)— Overcome by smoke, it is believed, Mrs. Charles Harris of Brantford was burned to death in her home yesterday. Her charred body was found upstairs when firemen arrived to fight the flames. The chimney is thought to have caught fire and it is assumed Mrs. Harris went upstairs to investigate and was overcome.

DOG AWAKENS FAMILY

Guelph, Sept. 15— Persistent efforts by their Pomeranian dog, Trixie, early aroused Mr. and Mrs. Walter Robertson, Guelph, from sound sleep and saved their lives from fire, which was sweeping through their home. Barking long and loudly, the little animal succeeded in getting his master from bed just as a blaze, which was menacing his store, was threatening to spread to the family's living quarters. Although dazed by heavy smoke, Mr. Robertson quickly assisted his wife from the bedroom and summoned the firemen. Considerable damage was caused.

FINANCIERS MAY MEET

Halifax, N.S. Sept. 14—Belief that Montagu Norman, Governor of the Bank of England, and Geo. L. Harrison, Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York would meet in Montreal was expressed here this morning when it was learned that the distinguished Londoner had not taken up tentative reservations to sail from Halifax on the Minnetonka tonight.

PICTON FAIR'S FINANCES GOOD

Attendance and Financial Returns Are Very Satisfactory

Picton Sept., 16—That Picton Fair, held recently will have a good surplus after all accounts and prize money has been paid, was revealed today by Secretary F. H. Minaker though definite figures were not given. Attendance during the two days equalled that during the three days of the 1930 Fair. The special performance on the first night by the Veterans in co-operation with the Agricultural Society, drew the largest crowd to Picton Fair Grounds in many years. Exhibits were never more numerous. Prize money to be paid out totals over $2100.00.

The fact that Picton Fair came out so well financially this year is more remarkable when it is remembered that the County Council granted only $750, whereas grants of other years was $1500.

The only sign of the present depression was noted in the midway, their receipts being down.

The secretary's report is very encouraging for the other officers and directors and is planning to make next Fair even bigger and better.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Newman and Miss Norma Davis are on a two weeks motor trip through New York State.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Hicks and son attended the C. N. Exhibition.

Miss Addie MacCauley, R.N. of Otego, N. Y. is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. MacCauley.

Picton and Prince Edward County was visited by a severe electric storm Sunday night but no great damage is reported. There was a very heavy downpour of rain and a strong wind, which was responsible for breaking limbs of fruit trees and causing much fruit to fall. The rain was very welcome and is hoped that it will bring to an end the very hot weather of the past few days.

Mr. Albert Wellbanks, farmer, residing in South Bay, reports the loss of five head of cattle, one a bull. They were struck by lightning while seeking shelter beneath a tree.

SCHOOL CLOSED

Wellington Consolidated School is closed for ten days owing to an outbreak of Infantile paralysis. The young son of Mr. and Mrs. George Hartley was stricken while attending classes and it was thought best to close the school for a time. There is also another case in the village but the girl is recovering.

Mrs. Clifford L. Colliver, who was recently stricken in Picton with the dread disease, is now recovering and there are no more cases in town.

Miss Florence Willman is spending a couple of weeks in Toronto.

Miss Gene Young is home for the Central Public School at Cobourg.

Mrs. (Dr.) Roblin and Miss Mary Roblin returned to New York city on Saturday after spending several weeks at their summer home at Picton.

Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario will attend the opening of the Cold Storage plant on Wednesday eve, Sept. 16th.

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 32.

(Metropolitan Newspap er Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

A sailor grasped him by the collar and bawled into his ear: "Read it out loud, you blithering idiot!" The professor read: "THIS IS THE HOUSE OF TARZAN THE KILLER, OF HEARTH AND MANY BLACK MEN. DO NOT HARM THE THINGS WHICH ARE TARZAN'S. TARZAN WATCHES. TARZAN OF THE APES.

The puppermost in their minds was "Who is Tarzan of the Apes?" The rat-faced sailor growled out an insulting oath! The young man's face paled in anger. "You're murdered our officers and robbed us," he said. "Now shut up or I'll break your neck with my bare hands."

He deliberately turned his back upon the sailor and walked away. The sailor's hand crept slyly to his revolver. His eyes glared vengefully . . . Two keen eyes had watched every move of the party from a near-by tree. Tarzan saw the surprise caused by his notice and now watched the quarrel.

The act of the rat-faced sailor in killing his comrade, the day before, had aroused a strong dislike in Tarzan. He liked the fine-looking young man. But now he naturally expected to see the young man murdered. Spear in hand, his mighty right arm was ready to strike.

Then three things happened, almost simultaneously. The sailor leveled his weapon at the young man's back, the girl screamed a warning, and a long spear shot through the man's right shoulder, and the seaman crumpled up with a scream of pain and terror.

FEAR SAFETY OF 3 FLIERS

Hopes Pinned on Plane Seen High Up Along Coast

Keene, N.H., Sept. 15 — A large airplane flying high and heading toward New York was seen over this city at 12 noon E.S.T.

The plane passed over the centre of the city and was seen by scores of people. It was a large grey plane and appeared to have pontoons. The ship came from the northeast and as Keene is not far from the Atlantic coast it placed could have come in from the ocean undetected because of low clouds.

As the plane was flying at such a high altitude and high speed it was impossible to distinguish any markings on it.

No trace has been found of the Atlantic fliers, Wiley Roddy and his two companions.

Gandhi Voices His View of Congress

London, Sept. 15 (C. P. Cable)—Mahatma Gandhi spoke today. His day of silence is over. He presented to the Federal Structures Committee of the Indian Round Table Conference the National Congress demand of complete independence for India.

Again Gandhi wore his loin cloth and shawl. Again, he had with him a thermos flask of goat's milk and dates and fruits for sustenance.

At the beginning Gandhi had declared the founding of the Indian Nationalist Congress and traced its history to show its cosmopolitan character. "The congress is completely national," he argued. "It recognizes no distinctions in race, religion or sex. It was conceived by an Englishman, Allan Octavius Hume, nearly half a century ago, and was nursed to maturity by two Parsees. For practically the whole of the nearly half a century of its life have been representatives of all the principal races in India, including two women."

$25,000 Offered For Pacific Air Trip

Winnipeg, Man. Sept. 15 (CP) — R. (Bill) Easterwood, wealthy flying enthusiast and sportsman from Dallas, Texas, sounded a call to Canada's northland and prairie country airmen today. The man who paid Costa and Ballonte, the flying French, $25,000 a year ago for their Paris-to-Dallas flight, offered a like sum to the aviator who would fly from Dallas to Tokyo over the Pacific.

Easterwood specified that the flyer would start on the trans-Pacific attempt "must have gained his experience through years of flying." He can choose his own route so long as it starts at Dallas and ends at Tokyo, or starts at Tokyo and ends at Dallas.

But the donor suggests a hop from San Francisco to Honolulu, 2,400 miles and another from Honolulu to Tokyo, 3,400 miles. He expected to hear from several airmen who had gained fame by daring the northland's treachery in all seasons.

Demands For V.O.N. Exceeding Supply

Montreal, Que. Sept. 15 (CP) — With four sessions meeting concurrently today, the 60th annual meeting of the Canadian Public Health Association got away to a busy start and thirty papers on various scientific aspects of public health problems were read and discussed. More than 2,000 delegates attended.

Senator Graham, of Brockville, Ont., President of the Royal Victorian Order, said the Victorian order is flourishing, but our chief difficulty is that the demand outruns the supply of nurses." The Victorian order, he explained, trains nurses gratis or at small expense, if they can afford it, and similarly charges little to patients who cannot afford it.

Dr. A. Grant Fleming, of the department of health of Syracuse, N.Y., said the epidemics he had made in regard to sinus infection in the treatment of scarlet fever. The result of his studies was that in the great majority of cases of scarlet fever there was some measure of chronic sinus infection, and that this infection had a decided effect on the spread of the disease.

Recovery of $330,000 Sought in New York

New York, N.Y., Sept. 15— The Department of Attorney General John J. Bennett, Jr., today filed a civil suit for $330,000, allegedly part of the profits of the late John M. Phillips, whose estate was given to the Queen's Borough government figures in the controversy and implicated former Borough President, Maurice E. Connolly, from forward today at a private hearing before Commissioner Desmond Fales, appointed by the Canadian courts, to hear the case.

The case is before the Canadian courts because the money was deposited in Canadian banks by John M. Phillips, Jr., who died in an airplane crash shortly after his father's death.

Cousin of Belleville Man Reported Cured at Shrine

Case of Miss E. Forhan of Toronto is Published

RECTOR'S WORDS

Miss E. Forhan, of Toronto, whose remarkable cure after thirteen years of illness is reported from Midland by Rev. T. J. Lally, S.J., rector of the Roman Catholic Shrine, is a cousin of Mr. George J. Forhan, Catherine Street, Belleville, manager of the Belle Theatre. Mr. Forhan told the Ontario Intelligencer today that he personally knew she had been unwell for thirteen years. One month ago he had a talk with her and then she was showing the results of the cure wrought at the Shrine. For the first time in many years she is able to sit up.

The story regarding her cure is as follows:

Midland, Sept. 15.—About 5,000 pilgrims, largest number in a body this summer, poured by train, car and bus through Midland to Martyrs shrine at Fort Ste. Marie Sunday. It was the day of the official pilgrimage of the Catholic Women's League of Toronto under the organization of Rev. Paul Strob of St. Patrick's church, and hundreds of other Catholics took this opportunity to attend the last of the Sunday services for this year.

Each time mass was sung, the beautiful church, which gleams white on the hill overlooking the place where the saints Brebeuf and Lalemant were tortured, was packed to the outside steps. Many disabled and maimed, and people afflicted with all manner of ills, flocked there imbued with faith. At the end of the day many departed with full cup of improvements.

Testimony to the growing number of cures effected at the shrine was given by Rev. T. J. Lally, S.J., rector of the shrine who read a list of ascertained cures said to have taken place this year. In the list was that of Miss E. Forhan, Marguerite St., Toronto.

"For thirteen years she has been bed, afflicted with acute heart disease," he said. "Last year she was up here and felt improved. Since that time she did not suffer from it. Her severe attacks which rendered her unconscious and made it impossible for her to take food."

Miss Forhan returned to the shrine last week, Sept. 2. She was brought in on a stretcher and placed in the middle of the church by her friends.

"While we were saying prayers for her, she sat up," continued Father Lally. "Her friends exclaimed, 'Look, she's sitting up.' I turned and saw her sitting up and smiling and she hadn't been able to do this for 13 years previously.

A letter expressing gratitude for remarkable improvement was received from Miss Forhan by Fr. Lally Sunday. In it she says that her doctor told her "she saints did not have to pay you than I could."

"The cures include those for such maladies as sinus trouble, convulsions, arthritis, deafness, goitre, peritonitis, eczema, rupture, osteomyelitis, cancer and heart trouble.

"This may account in some measure for the deep devotion shown by our Canadian people for the first Canadian saints, who are showing special love for the land where they labored and shed their blood for the faith."

Not all of those cured have been Catholics, he pointed out.

"Colon" Had 30 Negroes Aboard Refused as Undesirables

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Sept. 15 (A.P.)—Six Honduran schooners, including the coast guard ships "Colon" and "Pastores" were reported today to have sunk in last week's Caribbean hurricane with a loss of more than 100, lives.

Hepburn Looks For Ontario Election in '32

Windsor, Sept. 15.—Launching of a Liberal campaign in Dutton on October 10, and anticipation of a Provincial election next summer were announced here by Mitchell F. Hepburn in an interview with the Border Cities Star.

Mr. Hepburn spent a part of the week-end here in conference with Liberal workers, and is planning similar visits in all ridings. The Dutton meeting will start a Provincial campaign tour for the Provincial Liberal leader, who states that he will seek election to the Legislature from Elgin in the next general election and not before then.

Lower taxation is to be the principal plank in the Liberal administration costs is to be one of the measures advocated.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 15.—(By The Canadian Press)—Hon. George S. Henry, Premier of Ontario, professed ignorance when informed of the prediction of a Provincial election next year, made by Mitchell Hepburn, Provincial Liberal leader.

"It's the first I've heard of it," he said.

"Another hot weather story," commented Hon. W. H. Nicol, Attorney-General.

Popcorn Pops With Heat of Old Sol

Woodstock, Ont., Sept. 15.—(By The Canadian Press)—The sun-induced farmers of this district a new trick during the most recent hot spell. Last week a crop of popcorn on the farm of Archibald Burgesville, was cut. When the husks were removed, some of the kernels were found to have popped. The grains were distended and white from the heat which they had been subjected in the open field.

BARNS, HOUSE ARE STRUCK BY BOLTS DURING STORM

Lindsay, Sept. 15.—The severe electric storm over the week-end hit this part of the county with its heaviest rainfall of Reaboro and Oneida, where two barns were burned to the ground and one house damaged by lightning. Three thousand dollars is the loss suffered by Joseph Ja farm of John Thorne, between Reaboro and Omemee, when two barns were struck by lightning and burned to the ground with all of this year's and part of last year's crop. The loss is partly covered by insurance. At about the same time George Dempsey's house, near Reaboro, was slightly damaged by lightning. One animal is reported killed—a cow owned by Mr. and Mrs. J. Campbell at Victoria Corners, near Omemee. The animal was found dead in a field.

PLAN LARGER DOCK

Captain Leaves Animals Aboard Wreck For That Purpose

San Pedro, Calif., Sept. 15.—Upon the lives of a cat and dog—the only living creatures aboard the wrecked Panama mail liner Colombia, which went on the reefs of Santa Margarita Island in a storm last Saturday night, depends the legality of claims to gold bullion worth $850,000 reported held in the sinking room of the liner.

WARNING AGAINST FURTHER TROUBLE IN NAVY

Navy Discipline Act Will be Invoked In Event of Further Refusal of Men in Navy to Carry Out Orders

Sir Austen Chamberlain Makes Statement to House on Trouble

SITUATION TODAY

Premier MacDonald Says Navy Men Ask Equal Cuts

London, Sept. 17 (AP)—Any further refusal of men in the British Navy to carry out orders will be dealt with under the navy discipline act, Sir Austen Chamberlain First Lord of the Admiralty, announced in the House of Commons today in a statement on naval pay reductions and the unrest which has followed them.

In reply to an ironical question whether the pay cuts were among those agreed to provisionally by the late Labor Government, he said that when he took over the Admiralty under the new National Government he found instructions to make the cuts in question.

Premier Ramsay MacDonald added that the Labor Government had been advised by the Admiralty that the men loyally would accept the cuts provided these were cuts all around in the public services and that there also was an address cut in the unemployment dole.

Inquiry Begins

As for the army, a spokesman of the War Office informed the house that all ranks had accepted the pay cuts but that the Council had set up a committee to inquire into cases of hardship in connection therewith.

Eyes Reluctant

London, Sept. 17 (AP Cable)—The British press has been reluctant up to today to discuss editorially the mutiny incidents of the British Atlantic fleet except to express sorrow. Some newspapers still prefer to keep silent, but such an offer comment as there is regret that the demonstrations ever took place.

"The navy has given the nation a shock," the Daily Herald says.

"Some British sailors in their hearts say, that is their habit, have gone too far. However, good humoredly it may be done, refusal to obey order by His Majesty's fleet is a grave occurrence. The naval ratings may have a real grievance but the men of the Atlantic fleet have chosen the wrong means to get attention to it."

Grave Situation

The Conservative Morning Post resorted to plain language when it declares the situation is serious nowadays. "It describes the actions of the lower ranks of the Atlantic fleet as mutiny, although admitting they declined to sail in battle order before the facts had been explained to them. Sir Austen Chamberlain in his cautious reference to last night's Admiralty statement showing it is unfortunate incorrect to say the cuts mean 30 per cent. since the reductions only affect substantive pay, leaving untouched all the various extras.

The Liberal Manchester Guardian asked whether the cases of exceptional hardship were to be considered in the navy, if was not time for the country to think what it could do during the Autumn and Winter to alleviate the distress not less severe, of others than seamen.

London, Sept. 17 (Canadian and Associated Press Cable)—Unconfirmed reports from Invergordon today stated the Atlantic fleet left Cromarty Firth for home ports last night only after the officers had been compelled to threaten disciplinary action. The fleet sailed after being tied up at Invergordon for some days. The sailors' protests against cut reductions were met by a statement from the Board of Admiralty that the rates would be examined and cases of alleged hardship investigated.

R. R. Men Ask Merchants to Aid With Shipments

For the purpose and means of advancing the idea of shipping by rail a meeting of the Affiliated Railroad Employees was held here in the Freight office of this division of the C. N. Railways this week. Officers and committees were appointed and a campaign launched to endeavor to increase the shipping of the goods in this district. The committees were asked to wait upon the principal wholesale and merchants of this city, pointing out to them the special advantages of shipping by rail. The buying powers of the railroad employees in this district is very large and this point still is advanced to the merchants, showing them that by co-operation with the railroads they will again, as the railroaded employees will be placed in a better position to spend their money in Belleville.

The committees have been instructed to receive all suggestions handed down by the shipping public and also from the local merchants so that they (the officers), could forward them to the head officials of the C.N.R. It was the feeling of the meeting that if this idea was passed before the shipping concerns and the local merchants in the proper light that there would be ways and means whereby co-operation between all concerned would be almost 100 per cent. benefitted and a large measure of relief under present conditions.

TEAR BOMB IN TENT CHURCH

Controversy Over Church Tangles More and More

Jonesboro, Ark., Sept. 17 — Explosion of a tear gas bomb in the tent tabernacle of the Rev. Joe Jeffers, Baptist Evangelist, during services Wednesday night, was under investigation here today.

The explosion threw the congregation of about 4,000 into confusion, causing most of them to flee from the tent. Jeffers, centre of a religious controversy here, attributed it to "the chief of police or persons from Jonesboro State College."

Officers said they believed a bomb was stolen from the stores of the National Guard detachment here which is composed largely of college students.

In a brief prayer service after the congregation reassembled, Jeffers prayed for a new city administration. He announced during the service last night he would begin a "vice crusade" immediately.

Permission resulting from Jeffers' attempts to oust the Rev. E. H. Heard from the pastorate of the First Baptist Church caused the calling of National Guardsmen last week. The troops were withdrawn on Sunday.

SYNOD SENDS INVITATION TO ISLAND BODY

Newfoundland Diocese May Enter Into Union

CHURCH PROPERTY

Anglican Investments Not Weakened By Depression

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17 (CP)—The General Synod of the Church of England in Canada today extended an invitation to the Diocese of Newfoundland to join its ranks.

The Diocese of Newfoundland will be welcomed if it decides to send delegates to the general Synod in 1934, it was declared by the Synod rules and those of the general Synod, it was indicated by today's resolution.

Note before, at the general Synod of 1890 in Winnipeg, Newfoundland was invited to join the Anglican group in Canada, but plans for union were not consummated. Since that time several negotiations have been carried on, resulting in the appointment in 1924 of a joint committee to confer on union.

Property Issued

The report of the honorary treasurer, L. A. Hamilton, showed that some of the capital investments of the Church of England in Canada have depreciated in value during the period of depression.

The general Synod for a few hours today turned aside from the consideration of the report presented by the Anglican National Commission, which involves the whole structure of the church, to hear reports on the missionary society.

In 1930 the whole church raised $346,949 for missionary purposes, a decrease of about $10,000 from the figure for the previous year. The mission board recorded their thanks to the people whose generosity was gratifying in view of unfavorable business conditions.

RAIL MERGER IS DISCUSSED

Announcements of Solutions of Problems is Expected

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17 (CP.)—Discussing the problems of the Canadian National and Canadian National Railway companies the Financial Post in a despatch from Montreal today says:

"While Ottawa frankly discusses rationalization of the C. N. R. and C.P.R., while the announcement of the proposed joint examination of railways, hangs fire, the two systems of Canada's railways are being operated by joint action on the part of Sir Henry Thornton, chairman of the C.N.R., and Edward W. Beatty, chairman of the C.P.R. to iron out difficulties, avoid inter-company agreements otherwise solve common problems. But the railways' presidents are hampered by public indifference, sectional jealousy and political control—three factors for which the remedy is believed to be the immediate appointment of a royal commission.

"But despite the difficulties, progress is made and announcements of vital importance to the railways of Canada will shortly be made in Ottawa and Montreal."

Tampering With Ancient Law of Supply and Demand May Lengthen Present Slump

President of N. Y. Stock Exchange Speaks to Merchants

LAWS VITAL

New York, N.Y., Sept. 17—Any attempt to tamper with the ancient law of supply and demand by injecting artificial measures to stimulate or depress its normal operation may well lengthen the business slump and stard recovery, said Richard Whitney, President of the New York Stock Exchange, in an address to the New York Merchants' Association today.

"Before the flood-tide of prosperity can return there must be visible undercurrents and the poison of unseen economic forces must from exhaust themselves. There forces respond to but vital to human existence like the tides they are little subject to human control. In our, vanity we cannot or will not learn this lesson. We still think we can attempting to oppose futile obstacles to the inevitable course of events and to seize against their mighty current, our folly will be upon our own heads.

"It remains for us to heed the principles of supply and demand to govern our actions in accordance with its dictates, and thereby hasten the return of a prosperity based upon the sound and lasting foundation of natural law."

Mr. Whitney made no attempt to predict from the records when conse, although he did say that the prospective of 1960, "the extreme optimism of 1928 and the general gloom of 1930 and 1931" will appear equally exaggerated and unjustified.

Entertainment Program

Following the interesting addresses there was round and square dancing. Cooper's orchestra furnishing the music. The crowd entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion and the happy pastime continued for some hours.

During the evening the machinery of the plant was in operation and the many spectators had the opportunity of seeing how the apples are handled.

The Plant

There are two apple sorting machines and two motors are used to operate each machine. The apples are dumped in one end of the machine and carried over a series of belts, brushes and rollers to the other end, while being automatically polished and sorted for size. After the fruit passes through the brushes, there is a space for inspection of apples. Seven sorters are employed to divide the No. 1's from the domestics. Travelling on the apples drop through holes according to size into their respective compartments. From here they are packed for shipment, having been graded and polished. The fruit can be sized to one-eighth inch variation.

There is a quick-freeze room and low temperature may be secured. There is also an electric elevator.

The plant is built of red brick and is a handsome structure. It has been built so that future enlargements may be made.

Packing Section

The packing section is one storey high, while the other section is of three storeys. The plant is only a few rods from the railway tracks and there is a special siding built to it. It is just off the highway at the westerly limits of the town.

The contractor was J. S. Stacey of Trenton, who has, since completing the plant, made an assignment. (Many firms will lose heavily)

H. S. Fraser, M.P.P., and Howard Leavens, both well known and experienced fruit packers, will be joint general managers and salesmen of the plant, while Earl Weese is sorting Plant, is the plant manager.

Friday's Vandeville Program at Karnival

Friday's vaudeville at the Kiwanis Karnival promises to be the best of the week. All three acts will be head liners and the committee in charge have gone to considerable expense to provide high-class entertainment for the last night of the vaudeville.

The first act on the programme is the Mundy Trio. This is a sensational acrobatic act and is acclaimed in Toronto as the best ever seen in the Queen City. Their hand-to-hand balancing is very neat and their aerial acts leave the audience spellbound.

The second act of the evening will be provided by Jimmie Taylor, Jimmie's juggling and chair-balancing is one of the feature acts that have not been seen in Belleville to date.

The final act of the evening will be supplied by the Wilson Sisters Better known as the "Dancing Dandies." They put on a high-class singing and dancing act that is worth the price of admission alone as both of these girls are first-class entertainers.

"Slim" Burgess will again act as master-of-ceremonies and with his comedy talk and wise-cracks it looks like the best evening's entertainment of the week.

Tonight's Program

Tonight there will be four acts offered by the patrons. Myrtle Rowden, world's champion clog dancer, is first on the programme. She will be followed by the Bon Sisters. The last two acts will be supplied by Ernie Bruce and "Shorty" Campbell.

The feature of the vaudeville tonight is the introducing to Belleville of Ruth Downing and Alfred Sully both prize-winners in the recent C.N.E. swim.

Mr. Harry E. Bullen, an old Belleville boy, is in town for a short holiday and is staying at the New Queen's Hotel.

Mr. Bullen, who, is a nephew of the late Wesley Bullen, left here forty years ago to reside in Chicago. He has often visited the "Old Home Town," since then, but this is the first time he has started out on my holiday to visit places of interest and after I have seen there a short time I expect to lay down in Belleville to finish off my holiday. I meet fewer old friends each time I come, but I like to be in the old town. I am enjoying myself sauntering around. Every morning I walk around Victoria Park, sit out at the end and live over again many most exciting days there. There are a number of punts in those days and we could certainly get some good from them. Very often some of the prominent citizens from there would watch us—put up fifty cents or a dollar on a prize and then that fellow over there would say, 'well, boys guess we better have another race' and the money would be put up, those were the days of real sport.

Mr. Bullen commenced his career in Belleville as a boy in a law office. He changed his mind, however, shortly after he had been there a little over a year and decided that it was time he "got down to brass tacks" so he went to Chicago and entered the hardware business. He was with one wholesale hardware firm for 36 years, staying until they wound up the business. At present Mr. Bullen is with another wholesale hardware firm and he is daily in touch every day on the purchasing agent for the city of Chicago and the agent for Cook County. Mr. Bullen says the "Belleville Old Boys' Club," formed in Chicago years ago disappeared and had been forgotten long ago. "You know," said Mr. Bullen, "many of the old boys are gone, others are much older now and are not allowed out nights."

Mrs. Bullen was formerly Miss Annie Hick, of Belleville, is with her friends and is enjoying her visit thoroughly looking up old friends, all of whom are very glad to welcome her.

STUFFLY REFRIMANDED.

Learning early in life that the only way to get on is to follow "the straight and narrow path", generally has the effect of keeping boys from getting into serious troubles later in life. Two little fellows, aged 10 and 12 years, had the misfortune to be found guilty of having stolen a couple loaves from the kitchen of a Front st. Murney street, which they used for their Canoeing. They found the youngsters on the grounds of Queen Mary school, Wednesday afternoon, and they were placed in the Children's Shelter until this morning when they were brought before Chief Ponton and severely reprimanded. The little fellows were very penitent, and, no doubt, will be "good boys" in future.

CANNIFTON WON FIRST

In the wildest game of the season, Canniton won first place in the playoff in the Belleville and district league from Foxboro by the score of 11 to 10. At times Umpire White was called upon to stop fistic encounters that arose between the players. The second game will be played at Foxboro tomorrow evening. BUSINESS BOOMING

One would never imagine, that there was a slump in building operations in this district, if they could see the activities around the Belleville's new industries. While on his official rounds this morning a reporter was fortunate to come across a sight, that could erase any thought of hard times. The industry in question is the Belleville Manufacturing Co. on Front Belly street in this city. There was a continuous line of wagons and trucks, loaded with tomatoes lined up from the receiving door of the factory all the way down Emily street around the corner of Station Street and down Station to as far as Memorial Park. Although the scribe did not count the number of vehicles he would imagine that there were at least 50 in the line and wagons lined up at one time, with tomatoes at all the time. /

Gas' Pipe Blows Open During Street Blasting

Arrangements for the preparation of the evening meal in homes on North Front Street and vicinity were seriously interfered with on Wednesday owing to householders having no gas with which to cook their evening meal. Fortunately, the annual meeting of the family council was held and the "powers that be" kept asking? "When do we eat?" The trouble was caused by a break in the gas main on Wednesday afternoon on North Front street, where a new gas main, also a new sewer are being put in. The gas main was accidentally ruptured by the blasting yesterday on a sewer trench that was being dug open and the surrounding neighborhood filled with gas, sufficient to call for the use of gas-masks if such had been available. The break was soon remedied but not in time to be used to cook the meal that required. The inconvenience was of course, unavoidable as has also the shortage in private homes during the installation of the new gas mains. It is understood, however, that an improvement in this gas-service will be found by householders almost immediately.

Wage Reductions Stressed

A message explaining the government's action in reducing the pay of officers and men of the Royal Navy was broadcast by wireless telephone from Canada yesterday. It would be heard, it was said, in every part of the fleet, if the day set aside by the admirals for the broadcasting of the address and for every member of the officers' mess and the need for the all-round sacrifice.

The reports however, had it that in many parts of the fleet the message remained unsatisfied and it was two hours before the ships weighed anchor and sailed. This, it was asserted, is a specific protest had to do with what the ships' officer indeed, headed for the home ports.

Today the fleet separated at sea, the vessels heading respectively for Inverness, Portsmouth, Plymouth and Chatham. The scheduled Dogger exercises had been abandoned for the time being and the ships will remain in their ports pending the result of investigations by the Admiralty.

More Unrest

Meanwhile reports were received of unrest in other quarters. Members of the Mediterranean fleet at Gibraltar were said to be dissatisfied with the projected pay cuts, but to be quietly awaiting the outcome of the Invergordon mutiny. Similar reports from the squadron of the Royal Air Force at Malta was circulated and that too trouble had occurred. At the same time reports from Paris that naval bases and everything continued normal.

A member of the House of Commons today expressed some misgivings that the cuts in the navy would affect the attitude of the men. He pointed out that while salaries have likewise been reduced the cost of living has also undergone a drive. Laborites harried the government with queries as to why other classes who are facing pay or benefit reductions are not being considered. He also wanted the information that department of the navy had in mind, if any, to limit the burdens to avoid hardships.

The Daily Herald, now the chief opposition organ, printed a letter which it said leaders in the Invergordon protest movement had sent to the Admiralty. "It is evident it is all concerned that these cuts are a forerunner of tragedy, misery and immorality among the families of the lower grades," the letter said "and unless a guaranteed written agreement is received from the Admiralty, confirmed by parliament that our pay will be revised we are told to remain in the ranks no longer to serve under the new rates of pay."

WEDDINGS

LUPERETTE—NOLAN

A pretty wedding took place at St. Michael's Church this morning when Evelyn Grace, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Nolan, became the bride of Albert William, Lupereite, son of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Lupereite, both of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Master Rt. Rev. J. J. McNaughton, C.S.B. The bride wore a navy frock of orchid satin, and lace with shoulder bouquet of sweet peas. Her hat was a black velvet Eugenie model and she wore a platinum fox scarf.

Miss Helen De Carlo was bridesmaid and wore a dainty frock of jade georgette with matching hat.

Mr. Wilfrid J. Crawford acted as groomsman.

Mr. and Mrs. Lupereite will reside in Belleville.

ANDREWS—SAMPSON

A pretty autumn wedding of much interest took place on Wednesday, September 16th, at the home of the bride's parents, Orchard Cottage, Lonsdale, at high noon, when Grace Isobel Sampson, B. A., youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Sampson, was married to Hugh John Andrews, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Andrews, Belleville. Rev. Hilliard Jones, B.D., Bay of Quinte, officiated. Mrs. E. S. Hewitt, cousin of the bride, played the wedding march. The ceremony took place under an arch of the living room which was decorated with asters and fall flowers.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was very lovely in pale blue silk embroidered net with pink velvet sash worn over a full length slip of the same shade. With this she wore a picture hat of pink felt trimmed with velvet, pink lace mittens and pink moire shoes. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses and lily of the valley.

Miss Marion Molyneux, R.N., who was bridesmaid, was attractively dressed in pale chiffon with blue lace jacquette. She wore a blue felt hat with ostrich mounts and carried a old-fashioned posey.

Mr. Fred Symons acted as groomsman.

After the ceremony a dainty buffet luncheon was served to about forty-five guests. The bride's table was done with pink roses.

The mother of the bride wore a graceful gown of black lace with sprays of red roses. Mrs. Andrews, mother of the groom, wore a smart black satin gown with white trimmings, and corsage of red roses.

Guests from a distance included Mrs. C. B. Pope, Toronto, and Mrs. (Dr.) Lay of Ottawa.

On their return, Mr. and Mrs. Andrews will reside in Belleville.

Kiwanis Club Chasing Down False Rumor

The Kiwanis Club are anxious to find out who might have started a false rumour, that ladies would not be allowed at the Men's Fashion Show tonight, and are seriously considering offering a reward for the party one if detected. Of course the rumour is absurd for while it is to be a men's fashion show by men and for men, all the ladies will no doubt be more interested than the men for they usually have the last word as to what kind of a garment "He" will buy. Ladies, bring your men folks and men bring your ladies to the Karnival tonight for a real style treat in Men's Fashions as shown and arranged by Tip Top Tailors.

Mr. Vandeville will undergo a complete change again tonight and as it is getting better every night, a real treat is in store for you.

VAUDEVILLE AT KARNIVAL

Wednesday night's vaudeville at the Kiwanis Karnival differed somewhat from that which has been seen in Belleville in some time. There were three acts in all and they worked in between the style show and then put on a complete vaudeville show after.

Last evening the master of ceremonies "Slim Burgess, was attired in a comic costume that went over big with the crowd. Numerous cracks and jokes gave public many a laugh. The final number was a dance skit by Jimmie Ackert and Bobbie Sansone better known as "the College Cut-Ups." They gave a very fine exhibition of the shuffle, stagger and eccentric dance. Especially their eccentric dance went over with a hearty applause, from the audience. These two boys also acted the part of the elephant in "Slim" Burgess's animal act. This act was of the comedy nature and brought many a laugh from the patrons.

The next act on the programme was by Dave Ponger performing on the xylophone. His playing this instrument was very cordially accepted by the public. He played numbers like "William Tell" "Alcher" and other modern pieces. While playing Hawaiian numbers he used six mallets at one time, three in each hand. Mr. Ponger's performance was very well received by the patrons that had the privileges of hearing him.

The feature act of the night was supplied by "Bill" Arnott, Mr. Arnott is better known as Canada's master "talkative trickster." His many acts of slight-of-hand work received many rounds of applause from the patrons. Mr. Arnott's work of magic is perhaps the best that has been seen in Belleville in quite some time. He featured the well known hidden ball trick and many other card tricks were very heartily applauded by the audience. Mr. Arnott's act was perhaps the best that has been seen at the Karnival to date. Although the quickness of the hand deceives the eye, Mr. Arnott gave the patrons a very fine exhibition of slight-of-hand work.

All-the acts at the Kiwanis Karnival this year are supplied by the Canadian Vaudeville Association of Toronto under the direction of W. A. Garden. Their master of ceremonies "Slim" Burgess gives each act some color that perhaps bears a little weight.

All acts of vaudeville at the Karnival will be new tonight. Also as an added attraction the directors of the Karnival will introduce Ruth Downing, the only Canadian girl ever to win prize money in the C.N.E. ring. She also has engaged Alfred Sully winner of the men's canoeing race at Toronto on last Saturday. Tonight looks like the big night of the Karnival.

2 SWIMMERS WILL BE HERE

Ruth Downing and Alfred Sully Will Be Features of Karnival Tonight

There have been three women swims at the Canadian National Exhibition since marathon swimming came into vogue and this year was the first time that a Canadian girl reached the money class. Miss Ruth Downing, of Toronto, jumped into the amateur ranks a few weeks before the big splash, and at the time one of the best amateur swimmers in the Province, made history by finishing far less only grind to sixth position. Miss Downing is the daughter of "Pat" Downing, caddiemaster for the Native Sons and will be at the Kiwanis Karnival in person Thursday night. She will be accompanied by Alfred Sully, who won the consolation swim for the last three men in the water in the men's 15-mile grind. He beat Vierkotter and Mendel Burdett.

The patrons of the Karnival will take Miss Downing to their hearts as she is a likeable personality and knows her swimming. She entered the three mile invitation swim and was fourth but could not do herself justice, as she has been the great at many distances arranged in her honor for being the first Canadian girl to win money in the big event.

All Sully has been knocking at the door of the championships since the swims have been inaugurated and nearly every year has received a slice of the prize money. These two exponents of swimming will give a short talk on their experiences in the swim and what is required of one to win money.

PROOF OF PEOPLE'S MORALE.

Another proof that the fall fair has been surprising those who predicted its doom ... ultimate disappearance from recent ... indications and especially since t... ...ent of the depression was given at Marmora's annual exhibition on Wednesday. This fair is a type of all the other fairs in these parts and in all parts of Canada and shows remarkable life and every indication of growing importance.

Mr. G. B. Rothwell, commissioner of livestock, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, voiced to the directors of the Marmora society at their luncheon this very thing—the happy surprise which all felt that the prophets of evil were proved wrong by the results of this year. Both the large fairs and the small fairs have given similar demonstration. This proves the excellent stamina and resiliency of the livestock industry in particular.

Mr. Rothwell in his analysis of this remarkable phenomenon said "It looks as if the fair might be taken as an indication of the morale of the people. If that is true we may be down generally, but we are far from being out if we take this indication for what it is worth".

He had a word to say for the small fair—that is, not speaking it gave the largest dividends of all fairs for the expenditure of time and money. He summed up the situation after the remarkable demonstration of the present season. "It appears to me that fairs and exhibitions are just one of the really valuable adjuncts to agriculture. I never realized this so fully as I have this year."

Farmers, dairymen, livestock breeders may take Mr. Rothwell's words at their full value for they come from experience and careful analysis of the situation. The depressing for the farmer class, yet this sign of a sturdy morale among the agricultural population is one of the finest exhibitions of the strength of the people in the face of difficulty.

BACK TO FUNDAMENTALS

Livestock has been one of the outstanding elements in the fall exhibitions in this part of the province, leading in many fairs all other classes by its superlative merit. The same phenomenon will doubtless be demonstrated at all the remaining exhibitions.

It not this a proof that people are getting down to the essentials? Time was a few years ago that the livestock branch was allowed to dwindle but for the past two years or so it has shown signs of good attention.

No wonder the crowds cheer a running race? Marmora society staged a race at the fair on Wednesday and even the crowd listening to old time fiddlers turned from the jig time to strain their necks to the racetrack where the Gilpinlike performance was going on.

One spectator remarked at Marmora fair on Wednesday that the people of Marmora surprised him in the manner in which they belied their years. An eighty-two year old fiddler, and eighty year old dancer and even seventy year olds stepping the dances proved a marval to many. Truly these people preserve a spirit of youth in their music and in their measures, in which latter were introduced the most intricate steps.

A radio owner asks "Why is it, that Toronto radio owners are also consistently day after day and night after night to get programs over their sets without one iota of disturbance; while in Belleville it is a rare hour and a rarer day and a really rare night that escape the howls of disturbance in Belleville." Yes, others would like to know why it is and who if anyone is to blame in Belleville.

GANDHI—YES, BUT WHAT OF SHAW

Gandhi is thriving in the sunshine of publicity in ancient London, where Berqard Shaw has been holding forth for years and where the Irish wit has reached such a stage of fame that everything he speaks is sent to the farthest ends of the earth. Now little has been said of Shaw for a few days since the Mahatma came to London in loin-cloth and shawl and sandals. Has he ousted Shaw from the time being or will Bernard find some of his witticisms in a day or so just to show that the old Shaw is still there?.

Shaw has been called a poseur, and the same is insinuated against Gandhi. Well, both make the best newspaper copy in the world. .

Almost four hundred miles per hour was the speed attained in the Schneider races on Sunday and prediction comes that five hundred miles can be reached. But a scientist says this is about the limit and fliers to exceed that record may have to use a rarer stratum of air than that in which planes fly today.

THE ETERNAL LAW

I think the wind-flowers are in bloom,
Down in a deep ravine,
And violets shyly hide their heads
Beneath their clustered green,
While in the over-hanging trees,
Bird-lovers woo and sing.
The place is filled and thrilled with life,
Awakened by the spring.

It does not seem so long ago
That in that same ravine
There were no flowers or singing birds,
Of sunlight, through an autumn haze,
And drifting autumn leaves—
The mystic sadness of the year
That dying summer weaves.

A summer that I knew and loved
Has passed, and, in its stead,
My heart is touched by autumn's chill
And filled with winter's dread;
Yet, since I know that deep ravine
Is keeping tryst with spring,
I'm sure that God's eternal law
Works out in everything.

GEORGE YOUNG, MARGARET RAVIOR and a whole school of human fish including Johnny Walker, trainer of swimming champion, and Bill Hastings of the Young-Hastings "Dash Tandina" fame are splashing through public receptions and natatorial exhibitions in New Ontario. Monday, North Bay turned out en masse to honour the fresh water heroes, with Mayor Robert Rowe handing them the key to the city and the freedom of Lake Nipissing and the famous creek which flows and overflows called Cheney—there was also a sound of revelry by night as the natives and visitors tripped the light fantastic in the assembly given in their honour. Timmins, Cochrane, Capreol, Chapleau, Sudbury and other up and coming cities of the north will be visited by the swimmers and no doubt a good time will be held by all and enough golden shekels taken back to Toronto to keep the home fires burning this winter, whether George Young and Margaret Ravior decide to sit at the same fireplace or not.

GEORGE YOUNG came back because he met Johnny Walker and Margaret Ravior, who believed in him, revealing again the truth of the time-honoured slogan of the Salvation Army that "A man may be down but he's never out," unless he wants to be.

GANDHI TELLS WHAT HE WANTS

Mahatma Gandhi may be a wicened up little chap, with not enough clothes to dress a chorus girl, but he knows what he wants and how to ask for it.

There was nothing warlike about his broadcast over the radio. He didn't utter a single threat. But when he said he wanted independence for India, everybody knew that independence was what he was after and wouldn't stop still he got it. He disarmed his critics by confessing that he knew all the weaknesses of his case, that India was a nation divided against itself, with Hindoos and Moslems ready to fly at each other's throats. Still he wanted just independence for India and nothing else. All of which would seem to indicate that the pound sterling and the dole are not the only problems the Motherland has on her hands. —Toronto Telegram.

TO REVIVE THE ANCIENT GLORIES

Plans designed to revive much of the ancient glories of the Hudson's Bay Company are indicated in a statement made by Major Patrick Ashley Cooper, the newly-appointed Governor of the company, who has just arrived in Canada on a special mission to investigate the affairs of the organization from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Winnipeg to the Arctic border.

Those who know their history of Canada know what a tremendous part the Company played in those strenuous old days and what a large share it had in the development of the Dominion, particularly in the West and Northwest. Its outposts were, and still are, the farthest removed from centres of civilization. Its factors were—and still are—the hardiest men trading in Canada. And although history has changed alike its methods and its scope, there still remains much of the old spirit of adventure, of pioneer work and of resembling little more than the standards of the white man in the wilds.

All Canadians who feel a pride in the picturesque and thrilling past of their land will watch with keen interest the result of the new policies by which it is hoped to bring the Hudson's Bay Company once more into the limelight. It has an honored name, and its traditions are of the highest in all the vast range of industrial enterprise and peaceful penetration the Empire holds.—Montreal Star.

Attend the Daily Matinee!

This little slogan, emanating from the Capitol, tells us that it is at all possible to attend the matinee, when the admission is twenty five cents, it is certainly wise to do so. By doing so, 10 cents can be saved, which, if a visit to the Capitol is made once each week, at the end of a year, five dollars and twenty cents has been saved.

Dollars and "Sense" sound good advice!

LARGE CROWDS AND QUALITY EXHIBITS AT MARMORA FAIR CHEESE AND STOCK SUPERIOR School Fair and Speed Trials Draw Much Attention

FIDDLING TRIALS

Livestock Commissioner Places Fall Fair On High Plane

Superior livestock the greatest attraction of dozens in the history of the fair with thirty four entries, keen rivalry in vegetable exhibits, fourth trials of speed and good steady crowd were features of the annual exhibition of the Marmora Agricultural Society held on Wednesday. The weather was ideal, just cool enough and yet warm enough for comfort.

The fair gave a remarkable demonstration of the strength of agriculture in this part of the county. As Mr. O. B. Rothwell, commissioner of Dominion branch for Canada stated at the director's luncheon at the Royal Hotel, the excellence of the fairs could be taken as an indication of the morale of the people.

No Sign of Depression

"There is little evidence of depression except that the concessions probably will have as large a business as they had in the previous years. Quality marked every single of the fair and quantity was not lacking.

President G. B. Airhart was pleased with the results of this year's exhibition, he told newspaper men. In some respects there was a slight falling off in the industrial work but in many other departments, there was more than enough interest to make up for any shortcoming. The crowds lived up to past records.

The fair board had looked for the presence of the Hon. Robert Weir, once principal of Marmora school now the federal Minister of Agriculture, but the calls of duty were so insistant that he had to go to the west and so was unable to meet the Marmora people who had planned a magnificent banquet in his honour. In his stead came Mr. Rothwell, representing the Dominion Department of Agriculture. He spoke before the directors and last evening was the guest of honor at a meeting held in the town hall, at which he discussed the marketing problems in relation to agriculture. Mr. Weir will at some later date come to Marmora where his old scholars and the people of the district will pay tribute to him.

Fiddling and Dancing

A delightful sizzle of the exhibition were the step-dancing contests and the old time fiddler's competition. Here youth, even childhood and age vied with one another and age did not take a back seat. First came the fiddling contest with old time music set on the violins of fiddles as they were called. The fiddlers were by mean adepts at evoking the melodies and rhythms which set the crowd almost on their toes with the sweep of the bow. Bruce McIlroy led off with the first prize, the second going to Alex Anderson, 82 years old, one of five brother fiddlers in the family while Charley Campion a boy of thirteen managed off with third. Charles Jones was in charge of this competition and the judges included Jacob Booth and W. J. Hill of Madoc. The men's step dance was won by D. McLeod, first, Edward McIlroy aged 74 years and Thomas Hind, third, while also dancing was James McIlroy, a brother of Bruce, no younger than about eighty years.

In the women's contest, Wanda McIlroy, was first, Norma her sister was second and Mrs. Foster took third with her clever manner.

Cheese Competition

The cheese competition with thirty four entries was three times the usual competition in size, and the quality as above normal. There were eight exhibitors, the highest scoring taking 97.19 points. Marmora district leads in cheese and this was evident at the meeting at the fair.

The Pyramid car was on exhibition from the Riggs Motors of Belleville.

Among those on the grounds was Dr. A. T. Embury, M. P. of Hastings-Petroboro.

Mr. W. C. Dempsey captured a good many prizes with apples.

There have been many improvements on the grounds, Tuesday's fair and much interest manifested by the pupils of the Village and township of Marmora Schools, also of Deloro. Classes represented were as follows: Marmora public and separate schools' Edgewater Farm' Belleville; Roy Brown, Bonarlaw; Geo. Cotton, Campbellford: Geo. Kerr, Marmora; Fort Rouck, Deloro; M. H. Brockbridge, R. Phillips, H. Taft and H. Thomas are teachers. Miss Foley is teacher of Deloro Separate school and Miss Hadley, teacher of Deloro public school. The teachers of the various schools are to be congratulated upon the interest manifested by their pupils carried out their tasks.

Children's Work

Upstairs in the rinks of the buildings upon the grounds were the exhibits of the children and their handiwork proved of interest, not only to parents but other visitors. The young exhibitors who were fortunate in having prize tickets attached to their exhibits were naturally elated. Their exhibits comprised manualraining, needl drawing, art, (scenes in water colors), maps of South America, also maps showing the townships in Hastings County. Some specimens of penmanship were exceedingly good as was the crayon work displayed.

The specials comprised bird-house, some of which were constructed with bark, others representing log cabins, model screen doors, step ladders, dresses and aprons, and tardiners stands. A number of large dolls whose dresses and hats were made by girls were to be seen and made an attractive display. Need work was also on display also some wicker work. It was in every respect a display which demonstrated the ingenuity of the exhibitors. The superintendents of this department were Mrs. F. N. Marvett, Mrs. W. J. Barlow, Mrs. B. Robeson, Miss Hilda Thomson and Miss Hilda Jones.

Speeding Events

As usual at such a gathering, three speeding events were the attraction for many of the spectators and a few being ladies who appeared to take much interest in the horse speeding. The horse harness events were classed as A Class and Class B, and there were five entries in each. The third was a running race.

Class A

Black Monk owned by Mr. W. Fanning proved to be the favorite in this event, and the animal lived up to the reputation by taking three straight heats from his competitors. At no time in the heats was he hard pressed. Summary.

Black Monk, W. Fanning	1	1	1
Red Peter, H. McCuaig	2	2	3
Lena Direct, J. McCuaig	3	3	2

In this event Tim Alert, owned by George Pillman had no difficulty in taking three straight heats. The Pyramid car was the first threat Willowdale, owned by Mr. A. McLaughlin had the misfortune to fall on the back stretch, but fortunately the driver and horse escaped injury. Summary

Tim Alert, Geo. Wellman	1	1	1
Willdale, A McLaughlin	2	2	2
Rona Dare, Geo. Wellman	2	3	3

Owing to the fact that the track is not of the regulation half mile, no official time was announced by the starter.

Running Race

This was an event that caused considerable amusement as all the contents had a number of supporters amongst the spectators. Once around the track and three start were the stipulations announced by the starter. They started and a grey animal ridden by Cleone Clemens of Belleville romped under the wire by a fairly good margin. Don Neal was second, J. Cartwright third and A. Caldwell, fourth.

Officials for the races were as follows.

Starter—F. Johnston.

Judges—Geo. Lemaden, L. E. Neal, Geo. Forestall and Geo. Wellman.

Time keeper—Geo. Wellman.

Fair Valuable Adjunct

President G. B. Airhart presiding at the director's luncheon at the Royal Hotel at noon on Wednesday welcomed Mr. Rothwell. Mr. Rothwell brought a cheering message on the fair situation. He said "This year people were inclined to think in view of the general conditions our fairs would not be up to much, that we could do without them, that if men had money they would keep it.

"But the way it has worked out is exactly the opposite. In both the A class fairs and the smaller fairs both in east and west, success have been shown all along the line." He pointed out that interest in livestock was particularly indicated today.

"We are inclined to wonder at this" he went on, "Why is it. It looks as if the fairs might be taken as an indication of the morale of the people. If that is true that the morale of the people is sound as it is shown, then we may be down somewhat but we are far from being out.

"I have always been interested in exhibitions, particularly the smaller fairs. I think in many cases, for the amount of money expended on them they show much larger dividends for the farmers concerned. I think possibly we have too many fairs, but often this year seeing how the fall fairs held in spite of the depression and hard times, it appears to me that fairs and exhibitions of all kinds are just one of the really valuable adjuncts to agriculture. I never realized this so much as I have this year."

Mr. W. J. Cottrell of Marmora, also spoke at the luncheon.

Gasoline tax rises will cost motorists $30,000,000 a year.

BARNS DESTROYED IN BLAZE WHICH CAUSES HEAVY LOSS

Season's Crops Wiped Out as Mrs. Fluke's Buildings Take Fire

CAUSE UNKNOWN.

Heavy loss was sustained by Mrs. Elizabeth Fluke, 6th Concession of Sidney on Wednesday afternoon, when her large barn with the season's crop in, hay, straw, grain, was destroyed. The insurance will not cover the loss.

At 3.30 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon an explosion was heard emanating from the barn owned by Mrs. Fluke, just west of Frankford village and immediately the upper portion of the structure was seen to be in flames. Not only did the fire destroy the barn with its contents, but also the milk house, hen house and pig pen. The barn was an exceptionally large one, its dimensions being 105 by 60 feet, and was built upon a cement foundation. The basement was utilized for cattle and horses. At the outbreak of the fire a fine pedigree male animal was alone in the stable and he was taken out and led to a neighboring barn. Whilst a number of pigs were driven out, many others were cremated as were also four calves. The barn contained the bulk of the crop which consisted of some 750 bushels of grain, 35 to 40 loads of oats which were not thrashed, 75 tons of hay, some farm implements and a milking machine. A large stack of straw adjacent to the south part of the barn was burned. Two hundred men from the vicinity were soon upon the scene after an alarm had been given and rendered assistance in preventing the flames from spreading to other buildings, including the house. A portion of the City Fire brigade responded to a call and assisted materially in the saving of other structures. Their services were much appreciated by Mrs. Fluke and members of her household. The barn was one of the largest in that section of the county and was equipped in that connection and the loss amounting to several thousand dollars, which is partially covered by insurance. During the night the neighbors guarded against spread of fire by sparks.

Mrs. Fluke has a large herd of registered Holsteins, 18 milking cows, 2 in pasture and a bull, a flock of poultry, 2 horses and so forth. The loss of the season's crop will prove a very severe trial in view of the large number of head stock to be fed.

HOBO (after receiving a quarter, continuing pitiful yarn): "Yup, it was awful. I heard the chug chug of the engine—I speang up—But too late, the engine passed right over me."

LADY: "Dear me! Did the motor-car hurt you?"

HOBO: "Motor-car, lidy? It was an aeroplane."

"I'M having trouble with my husband. Our honeymoon days are over and I've come back to earth with a sort of a dull thud. Not that he isn't good to me, because he really is. I guess I couldn't ask for a more kind and considerate partner. In fact he's still a lover in every way but one. He's gotten careless about shaving. Probably he doesn't realize how much this means to me. But before we were married I never saw him without a clean shave. He must have thought shaving was important then. I wonder if he feels that he can afford to neglect his beard now that he's got me. I've hinted once or twice that he looks much sweeter with a clean shave, but he's as careless as ever. Of course he shaves regularly but not often enough or close enough. And I didn't count on bristles when I married him. Well, I guess I have to be fair. He says that shaving is a nuisance and I suppose all razor blades are alike. Maybe I can get used to a slight growth of stubble, but I do wish my husband would be as particular about shaving as he was when we were engaged."

You are right on one point, but wrong on the other. You must be fair and overlook your husband's negligence in the past because shaving was a more or less unpleasant task. But all razor blades aren't alike. Today, Gillette has a splendid new blade that is decidedly different and better. It is almost certain to change any man's idea about shaving.

The new Gillette blade is guaranteed on a money-back basis. Men are invited to buy a package and try a blade or two at our risk. If you don't agree that this blade is far better, if every shave isn't free from smart or irritation, return the package to your dealer and he'll refund the purchase price.

AMUSEMENTS

SPARKLING NEW CHATTERTON HERE IN "MAGNIFICENT LIE"

Ruth Chatterton displays a new versatility in a difficult and entrancing role in her latest starring picture, "The Magnificent Lie," now showing at the Bells Theatre. In a story that calls for a character of verve and spirit which changes rapidly to almost tragic drama, Miss Chatterton is superb, better even than she was in "Sarah and Son." Anybody's Woman or "The Right to Love."

"The Magnificent Lie" again brings Miss Chatterton in a staging role, as a cafe entertainer in New Orleans who, playing out a wager, dupes a sincere young humberman, into believing she is the girl he loves. Her playing, influenced by his unstinted trust, changes to seriousness when she falls madly in love with the man, and trembles on the threshold of deception.

Supported by a young stock favorite and New York stage star, Ralph Bellamy, Miss Chatterton makes a pulsing, vivid thing of this interesting story. Bellamy makes his screen bow in "The Magnificent Lie," and young destined for even bigger things in the movies. He is a tall, handsome, sincere young actor who plays a difficult role with great insight and talent.

Stuart Erwin displays an unexpected ability in handling a dramatic role, the eager and bewildered comedian has transformed himself into a clever character portrayer in this one picture.

"The Magnificent Lie," will be exhibited again tonight, for the last time, to be followed tomorrow with the racing classic, "Sporting Blood", featuring Clark Gable, and Madge Evans.

CLARK GABLE IN SCREEN CLASSIC "SPORTING BLOOD"

As "Sporting Blood," Frederick Hazlitt Brennon's popular Saturday Evening Post story, "Horseflesh," now reigns as one of the outstanding talking pictures of today, is announced as the feature attraction at the Bells, tomorrow and Saturday, and is an unusually distinctive piece of entertainment.

"Sporting Blood", while it contains a sweeping panorama of the entire sport of racing, while it shows the raising of racehorses as an industry, the training the machinations of crooked race manipulators and gamblers, and all the details of the sport as a whole is not to be classed as a racetrack picture.

Its central theme is a love story, based on the love of a gambler and a feminine follower of the turf, and about this central theme is woven the colorful setting of the racetrack. Thrills of the Kentucky Derby, Churchill Downs, and vivid drama in paddock and racing stables surrounded the regeneration of the pair who, caught in the whirl of gambling life, find their way out while seeking to "bring back" an abused horse.

Clark Gable of "A Free Soul" and "Secret Six" fame, and Madge Evans, heroine of "Son of India", play the principal roles as the lovers Ernest Torrence, Lee Cobb, Marie Prevost, Harry Holman, Hallam Cooley, J. Farrell McDonald and others appear.

Many actual jockeys and famous racehorses are also seen in the new picture, as well as many locales connected with the sport of racing.

CONSTANCE BENNETT IN "BOUGHT" AT CAPITOL

"Actions speak louder than words" is an old adage, and admirably applies to Constance Bennett. Here is a star, alluring, desirable, immensely versatile, becoming to many moods, more so in "Bought" at The Capitol today and Friday, than in any other picture in which she has appeared.

"Bought" is a drama of a girl, ashamed of low-birth and poor people, who practices deception in her effort to be a lady. Her idle life ends with the death of her mother, and she is forced to go to work.

From mannequin to secretary to a wealthy physician, she finds new outlets to her deceit, and with false stories of her distinguished ancestry, gets herself engaged to a rich man—who soon discovers the truth about her.

This is but the beginning of the story, a story which is tremendously human, and holds its breathless suspense to the very last scene.

"Bought" presents Miss Bennett with her greatest opportunity to display her alluring and many-sided genius. Her father, Richard Bennett takes the part of her would-be benefactor, whose efforts go up in smoke before the egotism of the willful character acted by Miss Bennett. Ben Lyon is the young writer, who wins out in the end, but not before many instances of foolish waywardness have landed Miss Bennett into the realization that she has been "Bought!"

DIVOTS FLEW BALLS SAILED GOLFERS PLAY

Field Day at Country Club Held Wednesday Afternoon

PLENTY OF FUN

Dubbs Won Interesting Match From Duffers By One Point

Divots flew, golf balls sailed, and clubs were discarded, when a two inch putt failed to go down at the field day held for members of the Quinte Country Club Wednesday afternoon. Until the day is held nearly afternoon, Wednesday of every year the golfers have had more fun than in any previous year, the committee in charge arranged by William Little, the pro, and everyone participated. A few days of the contests a number of years golfers gathered by Fred Smith in Dubbsone only to be refreshed by a sumptuous repast and an evening of good conviviality.

The competition for the lowest corrected score was won by Don Carman with Dr. Blakeslee second and Al. Doyle third. The drawn ball went on 32, Walter R. Belair being second with an 84. The highest score for the hidden holes of five and fourteen was 24, Fred Smith. Here we will not embarrass the winner by printing the score for the 70. Tilley was the net for the first nine holes with a 37 and Col. Freeman of Toronto the second with a 38. The highest score for any one hole was one by E. D. Wonham and again the score will not be printed. The highest score for the fourth hole was won by Roy Stafford, with a four.

The Dubbs and Duffers match was the place de resistance of the afternoon, the Dubbs leading the winners by the close margin of one point. The scores of the players was given after the handicaps had been taken off and it can be seen the players were evenly matched. The scores were:

100 Lives Lost In Heavy Storm

Mexico City, Sept. 17.—(AP)—Upward of 100 lives were lost in hurricanes that ravaged the Lower California Peninsula over the week-end and descended on the Vera Cruz coast yesterday, it was estimated from dispatches today.

Reports to the National Telegraph said more than fifty persons were killed at Cape Rondo, Lower California, and dispatches from La Paz, capital of the southern district of the Peninsula, said eight were lost when small vessels in the Gulf of California were sunk. In addition to a number of ships still missing.

From Vergosa, Yucatan, and Vera Cruz City came reports that numerous coastwise ships and fishing smacks had met disaster and a gale which struck the Gulf of Mexico between 40 and 50 tons in size were lost in the harbor, although their crews managed to escape.

Judge to Conduct Probe in Contracts

Toronto, Oct., Sept.17 — The Toronto Mail and Empire today carried the following story:

Judge Hector J. Denton, Senior York County judge, has been asked and has agreed to conduct a sweeping judicial investigation into the building contracts in North York Township. The probe will be under way early in October.

"The probe is a sequel to the election in North York township last December at which a libel suit which followed it."

Letters to the Editor

Belleville, Sept. 16, '31.

Editor The Ontario Intelligencer,

Dear Sir—

We have a great deal of the weather of the radio and I quite agree that it is one of the greatest blessings of this age. But I sometimes wonder if others, like myself, also think of it as one of the greatest nuisances of modern times.

I am taking a correspondence course by studying evenings. I have no radio in my home, one of the main reasons being that I fear it would interfere with my studies. I sit down at night to study and practically every night my neighbor (and a good neighbor, too) turns his radio on with such volume that it is impossible for me to concentrate or study.

Why do thoughtless people seem to consider it their duty to entertain their neighbors by a block around with their radio but hurting them on full blast? Why do they not realize that these radios were bought for their own entertainment and that such entertainment should be confined to their own homes and not be subjected to all directions by the indiscriminate use of the volume control button?

THOUGHTFUL.

TYPE OF MEN ARE WANTED

Hon. Wm. Finlayson Says In Interview With Press

Toronto, Sept. 17 (CP).—Commenting today on the question as to the type of settlers wanted at Don Plata and Mayor Stewart's statement that his Industries would be given provincial work through the city authorities, Hon. William Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests, remarked that the type of men camped along the Don was "the very type who should be employed on the Canada-Canada highway."

"The highway was primarily proposed as a means of taking care of single men and transient, while the dwellers of the Don 'Jungle' are certainly so," Mr. Finlayson said.

REGION FARES ARE SUCCESS

Result is Being Tried Out In Peterborough This Year

Regional fairs are proving very successful so far this year, stated Mr. Rothwell, Director of Immigration for Canada, to the press at Marmora fall fair on Wednesday. Peterborough is the only regional fair in Ontario where the regional grant of one thousand dollars this year, which is divided into four prizes of $400, $300, $200, $100.

The commissioner stated that really the fair is a misnomer as arranged for the district. It does not in any way interfere with the local fair for it is not necessary to show at a small fair before competing at a regional fair.

The regulations this year allow great latitude for conditions under which the fair in each province shall operate the term and competition. The department of Agriculture, Ottawa, has come to the conclusion as will lead to the drawing up of a standard of rules under which such money awards are given.

Mr. Rothwell stated that the regional fair has two results. It stimulates interest in agriculture and it will prevent prize stock competition at the gate of the dominion, bounds being set.

Mr. Rothwell is also regional fair to a province.

Belleville, Lindsay, Kingston and other cities have fine fairs but stated that these fairs were worth while institutions.

The city is the most uncomfortable place in which to do anything particular; you must either work or be bored.—A. A. Milne.

Meets Death While at Work Near Norwood

Henry Merriam, 19-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. R. J. Merriam, Methodist minister, was killed in a fall from a work train on the Canadian Pacific Railway line at a point distance east of Norwood Station, Friday afternoon. The young man was employed as section hand.

Merriam had been working the day morning, it is stated, and the work train was on the Madoc line when the fall occurred. It is believed that he was shoved from the train by the motion of the engine. It is expected on the train again, it is known that he ran for a sixty foot bank, the moving train and then stopped on the platform of the caboose. Death owing to insecure hold was thrown backward, clear of the iron wheels ing his neck and dying instantly. An inquest has been started before Dr. Ketchum, coroner. September 21st at 8.00 in Norwood.

Rev. Merriam and his son's death was conveyed to Rev. Mr. Merriam at Bethesque, where he was attending a meeting of the Presbytery of the Methodist church. Besides his parents, the young man is survived by a brother, Lorne and four sisters.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon at Bridgenorth and interment was made in Norwood, Rev. Mr. Merriam's old home.

GANG MURDER BUSIES POLICE

Slayers Hide Revolvers Paint to Wipe Off Prints

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 17.—Nine men were held for questioning today as police sought four underworld executioners in the fatal machine-gun ambush of three beer racketeers and gangland's first slayings.

One of the men held is Sol Levine who started out to drive the three victims from their lunchroom agency to an "unlucky conference" for settlement of several differences over liquor selling rights—a conference which, ended in a typical gangland massacre.

Levine told his inquisitors numerous conflicting stories during hours of questioning Wednesday night. The one police were inclined to believe was that, as the busy interrogation of Grand Lieutenant and Third Street, three or four men entered the car, flashed guns, told him to get out, and drove away.

The scene of the killings and the apartment house at 2749 Collingwood Avenue, in the heart of a quiet, residential district, yielded fifteen pistol shots were heard, and four men were seen running away in an automobile waiting in the alley.

Police Guess

They left, behind them the bullet-riddled bodies of Joseph Lenkin, alias Lebouitz, 32?; Isaac Sudger, alias Sutton, 34, and Herman Wolf, 31, all allied with the once notorious Purple gang, who, police say, conducted a flourishing wholesale liquor business without regard for district boundaries established by powerful underworld interests.? It was this defiance of gangland's regulations that brought death to them, police believe.

Victims Identified

The killers introduced a new departure in mass murder by scrawling their names in paint on the last sitting casualty under the gibs in the apartment. It was hours later when the weapons were found, telltale fingerprints obliterated by the paint.

Witnesses who saw the killers in flight, described them as between 25 and 30 years of age, well dressed and of swarthy complexions. An older man was waiting at the wheel of the car, which roared away from the alley, they said.

The apartment, at the rear of the building, and on the second floor, was rented September 1 to "Jones Regis." It had not been occupied. Although id carriage, Fred Mills, tentatively identified one of the dead men as "Regis," shortly after the shooting police "picked" Sugar to the relief of the Detectives, who rented for the purpose of the killings and that "Regis" was one of the victims.

Lebolt, Sullker and Paul, police said, were arrested in connection with liquor running on the Detroit River until Canadian export restrictions made smuggling unprofitable. Then they turned to wholesale liquor. All had police records, here, while Sugar also had been arrested for robbery and burglary in Chicago.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

She turned toward Radcliffe.

"That wildcat of the desert is Jito, my uncle's ward, and, according to his own admission, he is a very devil of a fellow. Jito, you have heard of Mr. Radcliffe, who comes of the way from the Atlantic coast to show you you're not the only beast in the world."

The Mexican stretched forth a great hand, and, to his surprise, Ted found, as they stood face to face, that he had to look up into the other's eyes. Jito's own eyes traced the outline of the American's form.

"Si. I have heard of the Senor Radcliffe. Already my men tell me of you, and I remember once when a big about you—how in three minutes or four, maybe, you threw the wrestler of the colleges. I, too, was wrestler. He laughed and nodded, filled with energy and delight by living. "You are a powerful man, Senor Radcliffe. It would be good to lock us both in a room to see who would come out, eh?" Again he laughed in high delight at the thought.

"It would be decidedly bad for the room—an altogether untidy idea," the girl answered. "So run along, big one and tell my uncle we are coming to see some unknown peon beat you to the race."

"Not while I live, littlest," he answered, and, leaning down he snatch ed a rose from her waist. "I take this to win," he called back, and was gone.

"Ted raised his eyes. "So that playful young hurricane is the famous Jito?"

"My uncle's right-hand man. Jito is a grown-up child and the world is his plaything. He has made himself my bodyguard ever since I can remember. When I was East at school, Jito went to college in California. He lasted less than two months. There was something about throwing a professor through the window, and Jito returned home. He is of this country and of this life. He simply would not be happy elsewhere. The very food of him, only he will not think for himself. So wonderful my uncle believes without knowing it he worships my uncle's brain—for who, heaven help him, has none of his own. A tempestuous child, he'll probably hate you because you are an unknown who threw the outside heel, and because you are going riding with me tomorrow."

"For that ride I can bear the hatred of several Jitos."

"Very pretty!" She rose. "But don't let him annoy you with his childishness, and soon he will come to be your fast friend."

"Ted, as he followed her through the patio, felt that there might be a reasonable doubt on that score.

CHAPTER XI

They passed across the patio and through a low arch, beyond which a tile afternoon sun blazed down the long white roadway to the gates. A hollow rumbler stood there and Adela motioned Ted to the seat beside her.

"And now, my big American," she smiled. "you are about to see something that only Mexico possesses—the Feast of the Rains. It is the one time in the year when these peons forget poverty, hunger, and death and give thanks at the coming of the rains. See, is it not a glad world this afternoon?"

They swung down through the village street, festooned with long shadows of giant pepper trees standing out black against the glaring sun. The street itself was alive with movement and color, everywhere men and women in gay red and bright greens and glittering spangles. The air was filled with notes that chattered excitedly in Spanish and rose at times to laughter. Everywhere happiness and light hearted gaiety. And everywhere, as the yellow roadster passed, men stood bareheaded and women curtsied to this niece of the master over all their destinies.

"To this fiesta," the girl was saying, "men and women come from all the borderland. Even a few of the Yaqui Indians come down from the hills, who will set their camp near the race course. They will be dressed with feathers and bright ribbons braided in their hair, and they will be selling beads and arrows to the pesos. The horse race is always the great event of the fiesta. Vaqueros throughout the border bring their best horses. They talk of it from one year to the next. Last year Jito lost." The Yaqui Indian behind beat him by half a length. All this week the men have been waiting and betting their last centavos. Jito is wild to win. He's entered a man-killing stallion that no one dares mount but Jito. There should be some dance. Uncle has brought down from Sonora to play, and the hacienda, for this day in the year, is open to all. So tonight we will dance, you and I, and then tomorrow, if you like, we will ride."

Already they had left the little village behind them and the deep curve of the river, along whose nearer bank crowded lines of horsemen were drawn up. Ted looked up into the sunlit April sky.

Riding and dancing, music and wine and laughter," he repeated. "All life in a single cluster of incidents, seems paradise. Does never pain or ugliness or fear touch you here?"

A shadow crossed the quiet face of the girl, then vanished. "Sometimes sorrow seeks us out, even here." Then she smiled and the shadow was gone. "But today is fiesta, when all life is an invitation to dance and laugh and be very happy, since we Spanish people know how well that only the minute as it passes can one be very certain of. Over there—she pointed just ahead—"where you see Don Bob and uncle in the judges' stand—there is where the fun begins and ends. Uncle is judge." She smiled again. "He is always judge, that is because with his decisions there can be no dispute."

"Hello, up there!" She waved her hand to them gaily.

From above her uncle called, "Come up quickly. If you miss the start of this race of races, Jito will destroy you both. He means to win today, and he does not know the word. God himself will be happier than Jito."

Morales led Radcliffe to the edge of the judges' stand. "This race," he said, "is is not like your races of the East. It is what you call a rough-and-tumble thing. The start" —he pointed directly to the cleared space ahead—"is here. The course lies beyond that clump of aspen and then across the river and up to where you see that point of high rocks It is three miles away. Then down they must come, straight across the river again to where we are. Six miles, a long-step hill, two crossing the river and a straight dash for the finish. A killing course, senor, for horse and rider both. Today there will be five to start. Three, I think, we can disregard, but the horse, almost naked ridew sitting on the pinto mare, watch him well. He is the winner of last year. They call him Antoa, a pure-blooded Yaqui, and each summer he takes my herds back into the land of his countrymen, where we whites dare not go. But see Jito sitting on his black stallion. See him plunge so that the mare rises like a true horse. I think he would kill Jito only too much he fears him. That, my friend, is the way one should deal with both horses and women—a tight rein and utter fear."

The girl, standing near them, had overheard. Her lips curved in a little smile of amusement. "Only be sure, my uncle," she advised, "that you choose the right horse and the right woman."

Don Bob rolled a cigarette. "Too late now to Mutual Confidence

by Louise Peple Armstrong

The only living person who knew anything about John Walton Baine's past was his daughter. Not she found out was a secret, she never told....perhaps in light of history of her mother's which she found one day when a mere child.

Baine idolized his girl. Since the death of his wife, when Rita had been a four-year-old, he had hardly ever been willing to let her out of his sight. She was a woman now—tall, fair and clear-eyed. Baine was proud of her beauty and graciousness, and his success in the world of finance had been largely due to an urge to give his daughter the best in life.

There was only one thing now which worried him, the knowledge that soon day Rita would marry. And there were plenty to choose from when she should come to make up her mind, although the second every possible opportunity of coming to the Baine home evenings to consult him on business affairs, and remaining to chat quietly smoking with him in the great drawing-room while Rita played softly on the grand piano, as she always did after dinner.

It was the hour Baine loved. Irritating as these it frequently invaded by some eager-eyed fledgling in correct evening clothes who usually fell called upon to subquently commented each selection as Rita struck the final chords. Baine struggled against petishness.

It was a perfectly natural thing. Some day Rita would fall in love, imagine she just couldn't live with out one of these callow fellows with dark sleep hair and ardent glances.

Yet for all his philosophy Baine was terribly put out that it should be Harry Pierce whom Rita finally chose.

Ranny worked in John Walton Baine's bank, and but for the fact that he was a nephew of Baine's lawyer and firm friend Ranny would have been dismissed for lack of serious concentration to duties. As it was Baine had him up to the house one night for a heart-to-heart talk which he hoped would bear fruit. It did.

The frank talk had been delivered early in the fall. By the beginning of the summer following Ranny knew more thoroughly at home in the bank president's domicile. He had a good singing voice

Rita opened the door of her father's private office that morning and interrupted an agitated speech by the cashier.

"So sorry!" She was about to withdraw but the president waved her in.

"Nothing you shouldn't hear, daughter. In fact, I believe...." He paused significantly, and Ranny too, the cashier, flushed and cleared his throat uneasily. Rita's friendship for Pierce was common talk in the bank, and speculations had been indulged in.

The girl came in and took a chair near the big window overlooking Main Street. She sighed and began removing her gloves, though her big gray eyes remained fixed on her father.

"It's about Ranny, isn't it?"

John Watson Baine turned on his daughter. "So he's been to you?"

"He told me last night about the missing bonds. He was worried. That's why I came down this morning." Rita stated, calmly.

"Like him to try hiding behind a girl," snorted the president.

"I don't believe Ranny's the guilty party, Father. Did if he were? If you found out he really had taken them....."

"If I do, he'll serve prison bars, where every thief belongs!"

The girl paled, but her eyes did not falter. "If he took them, and then....repented? If he decided he wanted to be honest?"

"Once a thief, always a thief. Sit down, Rita." the cashier.

Baine nodded. "Exactly, Hampton. Send young Pierce in."

The youth was visibly moved as he entered and saw Rita. "I was on the point of coming, Mr. Baine, and telling you about those bonds...." His voice broke slightly and he made an effort at control.

"Wait, Ranny!" pleaded the girl. "Sit down. Before you say a single word.....there's something I've got to say."

"But Rita, I must tell Mr. Baine ....." Pierce looked to the president for help, but that gentleman stared coldly.

"It's only about a boy Father and I know," Rita began, hurriedly, nervously, twisting her gloves and looking down in her lap. "He was just about your age, Ranny, when he worked in a bank, only....."

She glanced up with a frightened look at her father, then hurried on with her speech. "He wasn't in the Collateral Department. He was a paying and receiving teller .....had charge of shipments of money.....bank notes..... The new notes were cut on a machine in his cage, then counted and wrapped in packages....."

The president lifted his head with a jerk, but his daughter did not give him a chance to interrupt her. "One day this.....this boy took a lot of the green scraps, ends of the new money he'd cut and made them into a package. It was just the size and shape of real money .....it looked like money. He was packing a shipment of five hundred dollar bills to go to another bank. Again the president started to interrupt the story. And this time Rita paused, waited for him to speak. But instead Baine arose and walked over to the window where he stood with his back to her. But his shoulders were erect and uncompromising. Rita continued.

"The boy was about to put the fake package into the box for ship ment, when an officer of the bank came into his cage. So he hurried ly stuffed it into a drawer. It was late before he had a chance to finish packing, and he....he had to hurry.....

"What happened then?" asked Pierce, for the girl's last words had been forced and she stopped with a little gasp.

"Why....why the bank teller late that night on his vacation.....he didn't intend opening back, of course, only....."

"Only what, dear?" urged the young man curiously.

"He found.....that Rita's voice broke with a sob.

The president whirled about, from his post at the window.

"He found that he'd made a mis take....taken the fake package instead of packing it," he said, harshly.

Rita looked up with a white, stricken face. The president and his clerk eyed each other grimly.

And then the door of the office suddenly opened, the cashier looked in, hesitated and smiled obsequiously.

"I see Mr. Pierce has told you about the bonds," the man stopped and coughed in embarrassment.

"What about the bonds?" Baine snapped.

"Why, they're been located, sir! You see, they were only a temporary issue. And I myself took them out of the collateral to forward to the company for exchange, and forgot to make a note of it."

John Watson Baine sat down heavily in his chair.....

The cashier looked at him uneasily. "Sir, I greatly deplore....I That's all right, Hampton. We won't say any more about it."

When the door closed upon him Baine and his daughter gazed at each other in consternation.

"Oh, Daddy! What have I done?"

"I think, my dear," said the president, "we have both made a very serious mistake about this young fellow.....owe him an apology."

But Ranny Pierce stepped quickly forward and took the stunned, trembling girl into his arms. Looking over her curly golden head he smiled at his chief, the great John Watson who held the absolute trust of the banking interest of the state, and quietly held out his hand.

The president grasped it, tried to speak, and choked over his words instead.

"Since our confidence in each other is mutual, sir, I hope, and the past can bury its dead, your future son-in-law is going to kiss the bride to be."

"By all means," said the president heartily, recovering his voice. "By all means!"

Baine turned hastily to the door, then stopped short and added: "And by the way, Pierce, please don't think I blame Hampton entirely for this : isunderstanding about the bonds. You are responsible for the collateral in your ..lies .....nobody should be permitted to touch it, without a due accounting to you.....not even I myself!"

"Yes, sir," said the collateral clerk meekly, as the president slammed the door of his office behind him.

CORN BORER UNDER CONTROL

Prince Edward County Situation Seems Improved

Evidently the corn borer is being gotten under control in Prince Edward County as the camping factories which had the west end being handled is not as badly infested as before. However, there is some infestation and every effort will be made this fall to give a thorough clean-up of corn fields with a view of getting rid of this costly pest. At the factories, all cobs of corn are inspected by women and if infested are rejected, thus ensuring a high-class product.

The corn crop is not as large as last year owing to the continued drought. Recent rains came to late to prove of much benefit. Field corn is doing well and some very fine fields of it may be seen in the county.

Local butchers are seeking to have country butchers using the local butter market—as a stand during the fall and winter months purchase a license. M. L. Cowan and Charles Patterson, local butchers, appeared before the Town Council this week and asked that a license of $25 be imposed on these butchers who sell all goods in competition to local meat vendors who are required to pay business tax as well as rent and other overhead.

Mr. Cowan contended that the Picton butchers were not very fairly treated in comparison with other businesses. Saturday, he argued, were the big days in Picton (also market days here), and during the fall and winter months amateur butchers made a business of having a stand open all day at the market.

These do not have to provide ice, light or heat and can thus afford to undersell the regular meat vendor. The market stalls are secured for very low rentals.

Mr. Patterson spoke briefly in support of Mr. Cowan's argument.

Councillor Hall commented on the butchering business, stating that if something was not done along the line, Picton would not long have many butcher shops.

Mr. Cowan further stated that having the market open to all county people with produce of any kind, Mr. Fraser, H. Ward, was requested to look into the legality of the question and the matter will be discussed at the next month's meeting of the Town Council.

The first instalment of town taxes is due on Oct. 15th and the second on Dec. 7.

STOWAWAY

by John J. Jacobsen

Like a canary suddenly released from its bird-bag prison, the big plane moved cautiously across the ground. Each foot it travelled, the faster it went, and finally it soomed up into the air with thousands of people cheering frantically. The good will boy in Berlin was on his way.

Jimmie Ashburn watched the hangars of the municipal airport at Chicago in ane and drift astern. Lake Michigan loomed up ahead, a great amount of silvery blue, pulling in the bright sunlight of the late afternoon. Faint threads of white showed where the miniature surf-lapped the sand and the pilot knew the shore. To the left, as they headed northward over the lake, the tall buildings making Chicago's sky line seemed to wave them on.

Outing down the speed of the big plane to ninety miles an hour, Jimmie quished the controls to Bruce Spiegel, his co-pilot. Mr. Spiegel turned face as he slid out of the pilot seat and smiled as he moved backward into the cabin. The affairs of the past week had been too much for him.

It had all started with Carl Jonsford, the pilot with whom he was supposed to start the trip, being taken mysteriously ill. The backers immediately securried around hunting for another flyer, but all seemed to be tied up. At least the best ones were, and the backers wanted only the best. Suddenly this Bruce Spiegel turned up and asked for the job. Desperate straiting his ability by putting a ship through some skilful air tests they decided to give him Jonsford's place. Jimmie had begun to wonder if it had been a wise idea.

They had been flying two hours when Spiegel gave a scary whistle of surprise. He pointed off to the right where low scudding clouds in dark as night, moved in on them menacingly from the northeast.

They had planned to reload the plane with gas and oil at Fort Albany in Canada, Prince Edward Island, Southern Iceland, and then to Berlin, making the entire trip in four hops, and possible three days if the weather permitted. Jimmie debated if it would be wise to go on or land. The clouds looked altogether too menacing.

He hurriedly finished a sandwich and took the feminine to give Spiegel a chance to eat and rest. They had almost reached the storm area when Jim decided to go on. As he glanced to see how his comrade was faring, he suddenly became aware of the mail sacks in the rear of the plane being shoved apart, and a head—a brown shingled head, fearing a wave and made a sly deep bow ares pee peering inquisitively through the aperture. The next moment the head followed by a trim and brown clad body, advanced from the depths of the mail bag where it must have taken refuge before the beginning of the flight.

Bruce looked up at Jim in astonishment. "Holy Moses," he gasped "A stowaway, and it's a girl."

"Girl or no girl," broke in Jim, angrily, "Off she goes when we reach Fort Albany. What made the stowaway, he added, "What do you think this plane is an aspiration ship?"

"Why not let her go along Jim?" put in Spiegel, a besmirching evil grin spreading over his clean features. "We need amusement you know."

"I ought to knock you down for that," Jim snapped back angrily. "You haven't a decent thought in your whole head."

Whatever Bruce was about to make was checked by the storm which began releasing its pent-up fury. You could feel the need for supremacy. Thrown around through the cloud tossed sky, the staunchest ship was blown miles off its course The instrument board became a piece of splintered wreckage when a loose bolt caught the glass. After wandering blindly for an hour through the storm, they were lost in the grey gloom of the night, somewhere over Canada. Just as the motor began sputtering Jim sighted a river and dipped the nose of the plane downward. It barely cleared the trees and hit the river in as nice a landing as could have been accomplished with the motor running. He turned the nose of the ship toward the nearest shore, and about a quarter of a mile from their forced landing the pontoons scraped bottom.

Once the plane was moored fast, Jimmie turned his attention to the stowaway.

"Now young lady would you mind telling us your name? he asked with a forced strained smile.

The girl was pale from the recent harrowing flight, but she managed to speak up bravely.

"My name is Peggy—Miss Peggy Mills. Please forgive me for hiding away, I suppose I endangered your lives greatly by my action, but I did want to get to Germany. I have a rich uncle there, for I have no friends in America and my folks are all dead.

Jimmie couldn't help smiling at her sincerity. She was very pretty and somehow he couldn't blame her. He managed to smile warmly.

"In a way I don't blame you Miss Mills, but I'll talk to you over later. Meanwhile you can help Bruce prepare a fire and some warm coffee while I take a look over the plane and see if I can find out what the trouble is."

It took him barely ten minutes to discern what was wrong. The feed pipe had clogged, cutting off the flow of gasoline. He had almost finished cleaning it, when he heard a sort scream. He jumped ashore and ran up to where the girl was struggling in Spiegel's arms.

Jim grabbed him by the shoulder and whirled him around.

"I told you to leave Miss Mills alone, didn't I?"

"Yah!" leered the co-pilot, "What business is it of yours?"

"That" Jim swung his fist chin high, in a long pivoting swing, and had the satisfaction of feeling a tingle of pain run up his forearm as the blow landed upon Spiegel's leer protruding jaw. He grunted in dismay, but the blow failed to down him. A left to the stomach almost felled Jim. As he gasped for breath, confronted with a stiff right to Bruce's mid-section. The co-pilot staggered a moment then dropped to the ground.

"You did a pretty good job—Jim," Peggy flashed him a warm grin. "Though if you hadn't hit the right I could have handled him with this." She waved a Colt revolver menacingly.

"Don't make me laugh. I'm afraid you wouldn't know how to shoot the thing." Jimmie was smiling.

"Humph—I'm going to tell you something. I didn't hide in your plane for the purpose I told you a few minutes ago. It happens that I'm working for the government on a case.

Bruce Spiegel is the man. His real name is Bruce Slade, and he's wanted back in the states for two murders. We weren't sure it was he, so I was sent to follow him. He thought he'd lose himself in the public eye, he could escape. He would have, too, if one of the pictures he gave himself away by standing in a slough, an old habit of his. Still we weren't absolutely sure of him, but when he ripped his shirt a few minutes ago, I caught a glimpse of a tattooed star on his shoulder. That was a sign of an identification. I mentioned his name, and he tried to choke me then you came—you know the rest."

Spiegel or Slade, as he was better known, was tied up, and then three beds of leaves were made around the fire and they all settled down to sleep.

The rays of the morning sun and the roar of a motor brought Jimmie to his feet. Spiegel had worked his way loose during the night. Jimmie reached the bank and made a futile attempt to grab a wing but missing As the plane swung around, the right wing collided with a branch overhanging the water. The plane shuddered as the branch gave away, and gathering speed with the current, Bruce and the ship nearly left the river. It wobbled precariously for a moment, then seemed upward.

The rim of golden sun that slipped over the tree tops sent soft rays bathing the fuselage of the plane.

"I wonder—" spoke up Peggy, but broke off as the right wing of the climbing plane crumbled. The bar of the branch had been too much.

Jim knew, tried to divert Peggy's attention from the tragic scene, but she remained calm, silently watching the plane come spinning down. It crashed half a mile away.

Ten minutes later a plane appeared in the west. It circled, peered in recognition of their signals and glided to a stop on the river. It took them only a second to hop aboard, and less to get into the air.

They circled over the spot where their plane was burning fiercely, a mass of twisted wreckage. Jim found a pencil in the pilot's jacket, and wrote on the back of a newspaper:

"I guess, Peggy, you've lost your man."

Peggy took the paper and scanned it, "I wonder if I haven't found him?"

Jimmie tried to answer but found it hard to put in writing, so he demonstrated his action.

CARDS CAN SET A WIN RECORD IN NAT. LEAGUE

Record is Held By Giants Who Scored 101 Wins 18 Years Ago

CARDS HAVE 96

By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer)

The St. Louis Cardinals were in possession of their second straight National League pennant today, having clinched the flag early yesterday afternoon without lifting a bat. Their only remaining goal before they tackle the mecessity of the Philadelphia Athletics in the world series October 1 is to be the first National League Club since 1913 to win more than 100 games.

They have bright prospects of bettering the mark of 101 victories set by the New York Giants eighteen years ago. Yesterday's 6 to 3 triumph over Philadelphia was no setback and they have nine more games today before the curtain falls. They are likely to go on winning their share, as manager Carey Street announced last night he intended to use his best pitchers in their regular turn right up to the last day.

Win Game Twice

Thanks to the Cincinnati Reds today, it appears, had a mission to her all. the Cards did not even have to win yesterday to sew up their fourth title in six years. The Reds attended to that very nicely, when they trimmed the New York Giants, 7 to 3, in the first game of a double header. Their 4 to 3 victory in the nightcap merely added insult to injury. Their first game made it impossible for the McGraw boys to finish closer than a half game to the top.

Red Lucas, sometimes referred to as Cincinnati's pitching staff, had the privilege of closing the Giants' and, incidentally, scoring his 13th triumph of the year for a last place club. He allowed 10 hits but kept them spaced, while his mates fell on Carl Hubbell in the first game. A second till was not decided until the eighth inning, when successive hits by Hendrick, Ford and Suke Brown broke a 3-3 tie and provided the winning run.

Bill Hallahan, who is expected to start the second game of the world series, pitched the Cards to their thirteenth win over the Phils, allowing only six hits. It was their seventh straight victory and their 13th in 13 starts. Chick Hafey hit his 16th homer in his only time at bat against Phil Collins.

Cubs Whitewash Reds

The Chicago Cubs took a firmer hold on third place by beating the Boston Braves in the first game, 6 to 5 and 8 to 7, and Brooklyn practically sewed up fourth place by downing the Pittsburgh Pirates, 4 to 0, in the other double header. The Cubs to their first victory over the Braves, but had a narrow escape when they rallied to score four runs in the ninth inning. The Robins hopped on Hemsley Cheeves for six runs in the seventh inning to win the second.

American League

By way of celebrating their clinching the American League flag the previous night, the Athletics rang up their 10th victory of the year at Cleveland's expense, 7 to 5. Big George Earnshaw went the route to record his 20th triumph. The Indians got off to a five run lad in the second inning. But the A's speedsters began settling down and held them scoreless three times while the Tribe batsmen were bereft of the "punch varsity" pounding Wes Ferrell for enough runs to win.

Alvin Crowder turned his eighth straight win as the Washington Senators took a 6 to 2 decision from the Red Sox in the opener. The victory put the Senators a game and a half ahead of the New York Yankees in their close race for second place. The Yanks were not scheduled.

By winning their third straight game from Chicago, the Detroit Red Sox bounced out of the American League cellar and built it to the White Sox. Ed Durham bested Ted Frazier in a great pitching duel, 2 to 1. Durham allowed three hits and Frazier but four. Two of the blows off Fraz'r, however, were doubles by Earl Webb, his 62nd and 63rd of the season.

NEVER SO OLD

Francis Oulmet, the Boston veteran, is this year monarch of all he surveys in the United States amateur golf world. Which is funny, when you come to think of it, since he won the title in 1914, which was a good many years before we began to hear about Bobby Jones. Bobby had his sway for a decade, during which time Oulmet was never serious in the picture. Now Oulmet takes up Bobby's discarded amateur crown. Championships are an old story for the thirty-eight-year-old player, whose specialty is giving the scholarly air of a college professor. He has played in nineteen of them, but with one exception since 1914 the last to Chick Evans in 1920 in the final he never went into the world. He still can HIT.

It might be an excellent idea if the directors of the Baltimore Orioles staged a box lacrosse game in Belleville's new Arena, if the game goes over and if then they could get into one of the many proposed box lacrosse leagues to be formed next season.

Tomorrow is the day the local lawyers and doctors have their annual golf match. The losing team will have to buy the dinners.

Belleville is to be honored tonight when Ruth Downing and Francis Oulmet, the Boston veteran, is this year monarch of all he surveys in the United States amateur golf world. Which is funny, when you come to think of it, since he won the title in 1914, which was a good many years before we began to hear about Bobby Jones. Prison Break Frustrated By Prison Guards

Lansing, Kas., Sept. 17.—Nine dangerous convicts were in solitary confinement at the State Penitentiary here today as officials revealed the ramifications of two frustrated escape plans. Hard-made firearms, prison concocted explosives, a secret telephone line and duplication of parts of a Ford motor car were evidence of the thoroughness of the prisoners' plans to break for freedom.

Congratulations are due Gilbard's Athletes today. They held the reputation of Eastern Ontario high. After a bitter struggle they managed to pull through with a win in North Bay yesterday. The score of 6 to 3 shows their class. They won by a wider margin in the Northern town, than they did at home. Gibbards cannot be classed as a home team as they have won their games on the road by a much wider margin than they have at home.

"Two in a row" seems to be the motto of the Gibbard boys. Every series in the O.B.A.A. playoffs to date the "Alphies" have won in two straight games. Coach "Wali" Grews used very good judgment when he pitched Fred Bentley against the Northerners yesterday. Fred buried a masterful game and his team mates gave him airtight support.

Gibbards are now in the intermediate finals for the championship of Ontario. Their opponents will be either Sudbury or Milton.

"Ted" Graham, the husky defence man for the Chicago Black Hawks in the National Hockey League was seen at the Kiwanis Karnival last night. The big boy looks ready and willing for the opening of the season this fall. He is camping for the summer over near Wellington-on-the-Lake.

Coach Harry Batstone had his Queens University football team out in practice early this week. All players reported except Bob Elliott and Jerry Caldwell. These boys are writing supple, mentary examinations and their fate is yet uncertain. If Coach Batstone loses these two boys he will have a tough hole to fill.

Work has progressed so rapidly that the laying of the corner stone of Toronto's new Maple Leaf Gardens will be officiated at by Lieutenant Governor W. D. Ross next Monday. The new arena is the largest in sports buildings and will be a credit to Toronto and the Maple Leaf Hockey Club.

On Tuesday the Philadelphia Athletics' won the baseball pennant under the leadership of Connie Mack. This year's title is the third gained in succession for the "White Elephants" to win. The Cardinals will have annexed their fourth National League pennant and their second in succession under direction of "Gabby" Street, when the season is over. The fans can now sit back and rest up until the World's Series starts.

Jack Dempsey, the Manassa Mauler, is staging a comeback, we see. If his legs can hold out he can't be as fat as his old "sock" a little bit better than he used to be then. At present he is, we will grant, better at the pushovers but they are no crown. Championships are an old story for the thirty-eight-year-old player, whose specialty is giving the scholarly air of a college professor. He has played in nineteen of them, but with one exception since 1914 the last to Chick Evans in 1920 in the final he never went into the world. He still can HIT.

Gas in the Stomach Is Truly Dangerous

Gas, Pain, Bloating and a feeling of fullness after eating are almost certain evidences of excessive hydrochloric acid in the stomach.

Too much acid irritates the delicate stomach lining, frequently causing chronic Gastric and Duodenal Ulcers. Food ferments and sours, forming a gas that distends the stomach and often seriously affects the Heart.

It is a serious folly to neglect such a condition or to treat with artificial digestives and alkalis that cannot neutralize the stomach acid. A better way is to get from your druggist some pure and inexpensive bismuth subnitrate and ask him to be directed upon to prove its value in less than five minutes. In most instances, relief comes instantly! Pleasant and perfectly harmless is Bell-ans-Bisurated Magnesia does give wonderful relief in nine out of ten cases. Ask your Doctor or Druggist.

OAK HALL

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 32. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

The sailors stood in a frightened group, with drawn revolvers. The wounded man writhed and shrieked upon the ground.

The young man, whose name was Clayton, picked up the fallen revolver. Jane, the girl, ran to him. "Who could it have been?" she whispered. Meanwhile her father and his scholarly companion had crawled into the primeval jungle.

"I daresay Tarzan of the Apes is watching us all right!" Clayton answered. "Go into the cabin while I go in search of your father." He gave Jane his revolver and when he saw the door close safely behind Jane and her servants, Esmeralda, he strode into the dense jungle.

When Jane and Esmeralda found themselves safely behind the cabin door, the negress's first thought was to barricade the portal from within. She turned to search for some means to do it. With her first look, she gave a shriek of terror, running to her mistress like a frightened child.

Jane saw the cause of her cry! Lying prone upon the floor beside them was the whitened skeleton of a man. A further glance revealed the second skeleton upon the bed. And then the tiny skeleton in the cradle! "What horrible place are we in?" murmured the awe-struck girl. Esmeralda trembled.

What might lie before them in this ill-fated cabin? She endeavored to shake off the gloomy forebodings. She bade Esmeralda cease her wailings, and the two of them barred the heavy door. Then they sat down upon a bench, their arms about one another, two thoroughly frightened persons, and waited.

KIDDIES ENJOY THE KARNIVAL

Armouries Given Over to School Children Wednesday Afternoon

Over 800 kiddies took possession of the Kiwanis Karnival yesterday afternoon. The school children had the time of their lives. At exactly 4.15 p.m. Master of Ceremonies "Slim" Burgess called the kiddies to order and they all took seats ready for the "big performance."

Jack Bendon entertained the kiddies with a very fine ventriloquist act. He had the usual doll and Jack an the doll carried on a 15-minute conversation, that brought many a laugh and plenty of applause from the school children. Later in the afternoon Mr. Bendon introduced his characters of his Punch and Judy show to the kiddies.

"Slim" Burgess then amused the kiddies with a few stories after which he introduced the kiddies that had entered in the school children's amateur competition. These several acts were enjoyed by the adults perhaps more than by the kiddies. The youngsters presented some very fine talent. There were twelve school kiddies entered in the competition and did they sing down by the house? In the boys' section an acrobatic stunt by Jim Lynch and Frank Yorne received the most ovation, and theirs are rejoiced first prize.

But the act that was the feature of the afternoon was the singing of "My Wild Irish Rose" by little Lillian Parkin. This little lady was about six years old but she was without doubt the best actor that appeared on the stage yesterday afternoon. After receiving the first prize the little lady stepped up to the microphone and thanked all present for their kind ovation. All prizes received a prize from the directors of the Karnival. The program of the amateur numbers were:

Song—Kathleen Moore.
Recitation—Maureen Cannon.
Song—Thos. Wilkinson.
Acrobatic Stunts—Jim Lynch and Frank Yorne.
"My Wild Irish Rose" — Lillian Parkin.
Song—Leo Bellapper.
Recitation—Jack O'Connor.
Recitation—Patrician Meagher.
Dance—Margaret Forester.
Song—Claire Naimath.
Solo dance—Marjorie Smythe.
"Slim" Burgess not only acted as master of ceremonies but also played the accompaniments for the above numbers.

LIQUOR LADEN CAR IS SEIZED

Constable Smith, Bowmanville, Takes 285 Quarts From Coupe

Between eight and nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, a coupe, loaded with, it is alleged, approximately 285 quarts of liquor bearing the stamp of the Quebec Liquor Commission, was seized together with the contents on the highway near Bowmanville, by Provincial Constable Smith of Bowmanville. The driver of the car, who gave the name of Sen Soskin, 92 Myrtle Avenue, Hamilton, was arrested and charged before Magistrate Campbell of Bowmanville with unlawfully having this liquor in his possession. At the request of the Crown the accused was remanded in custody for one week. The arrest of Soskin was brought about through the clever observation of a Provincial Traffic Constable from Eastern Ontario, who was travelling west on vacation. He observed his suspicions to Provincial Constable Smith at Bowmanville and the arrest followed. Soskin, it is said, refused to state his destination when arrested.

LITTLE BENNY

By LEE PAPE

Pop is still on his vacation around the house, and this afternoon me and him was out in the back yard and a lot of birds flew over the house, pop saying, When I was a young fellow I use to spend my vacations in the woods, and we'd shoot our dinner with our trusty rifles like hobmen and most children of nature.

Well G, pop, Ive got a air rifle, ony I havent got any shot for it because I aint allowed to have any, I said, and pop said, And even if you had there are no berds to shoot.

Sure there is, pop, I said. We're going to have chick for supper and its in the ice box rite now, and it looks just like a live one with the hed on it and everything, and all I haff to do is tie a string around it and swing it in the air from the back window, and you could pertend to shoot it for supper if we ony had some shot for the air rifle, I said.

By gollies I could at that, lets go up to the hardware store and get some shot, pop said.

Wich we did, and I brawt my air rifle down from my closit and quick got the chickin out of the ice box while Nora was anserieg the doorbell, and I tied a peece of string around its feet and started to swing it out of the back livin ground window, looking just as if it was flying upside down, naturel as anything, and pop kepp shooting at it with my air rifle and I kepp making it swing lik a bird trying to excape, having a lot of fun till the string broke and the chicken sailed rite over the fence into the Joneses yard, Joneses dog got it and started to run around with it, and I had to climb over and take it, away from him, and we washed it off under the hydrant and I sneaked it back into the ice box, and while we was eating it for supper pop broke a part of a filling out of his tooth by biting on something hard.

Being a air rifle shot but him not saying so.

MAIL PLANE CRASH KILLS 3

Plunged Into Water After Taking Fire in Mid-Air

Oakland, Cal., Sept. 17.—A passenger-mail plane of the Pacific Air Transport Line caught fire and plunged into San Francisco Bay Wednesday, carrying its pilot and three passengers to death.

Shortly after taking off for Portland the plane evidently caught fire and its pilot, Ray Boudreaux, of Medford, Ore., turned back toward the airport. He was attempting to effect a safe landing, when flames enveloped the machine and it dived several hundred feet, struck the water and sank.

The passengers were: Kirk Herre, of The Seattle Star; Seattle; W. E. Bissell, San Francisco; P. E. Unas, San Francisco.

The craft carried 400 pounds of mail. The cause of the fire was unknown, to airport officials.

TWO FAMILIES CLAIM BODY

Mrs. Jack SON and Mrs. Dymond Will View Boy

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17.—(By The Canadian Press)—Two families now claim the torn body of a youth about 17 years of age, found on the railway tracks at Thamesford, Ont., September 5. A train had passed over the body. David Jackson of this city today told local police it was that of his son David, who left here about that time for Windsor to seek work. Mrs. Jackson, the lad's mother identifies her son from a medallion found in the pockets of the clothing. The father has gone to Ingersoll to confirm identification. On the other hand, Mrs. Dymond of London, Ont., declares the body is that of her son, Leo Dymond, missing from London since September 5. Mrs. Dymond has also gone to Ingersoll to view the body.

MORE POWER IS ORDERED BY THE HYDRO

Eastern Ontario Demands Necessitate Delivery at Once

DUE OCT. 1st

6000 Horsepower Will Be Taken From The Gatineau Power Co.

In order to provide sufficient electrical supplies to meet the increased demands of the municipalities in the Eastern Ontario system, the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission at its board meeting decided to authorize the anticipation of its contract requirements with the Gatineau Power Company by taking 6,000 horsepower at once instead of on October 1.

Announcement to this effect was made by Hon. G. H. Cooke, chairman of the board. Due to the increased load in 1931 and the low water conditions existing on the Trent power system, the commission found that the present capacities and contracts were insufficient to meet these demands, Hon. Mr. Cooke stated.

The chairman commented on the fact that it had been found necessary to take additional power to prevent a shortage.

"It is unnecessary also instead of being overwhelmed for this district. It has been found necessary to call for delivery ahead of schedule," said Mr. Cooke. "This is an encouraging sign. Upon the repeated resolutions of the eastern municipalities that the commission provide adequate supplies of power to meet future industrial demands, the commission first entered into a contract with the Gatineau Power Company for 60,000 horsepower in 1927, to be delivered in blocks of 6,000 horsepower per annum, commencing in October, 1928. The agreement provided for an option to take an additional 60,000 horsepower within the first 10-year period.

"Up to the present year," continued Mr. Cooke, "the commission has taken delivery of 18,000 horsepower, today's authorization brings this amount up to 24,000 horsepower. The availability of this power has averted a possible shortage in this district as a result last June in industry, similar to that experienced a few years ago by the district in the Trent power system."

The action taken by Hydro engineers of the problem of annual increase in power needed by the eastern district came very close to the actual increase. In purchasing power, the commission looked to the annual increase of 6,000 horsepower by hand as an expert calculation. The fact that this figure has been exceeded is due partly to the low waters of the Trent power system, which, while not without precedent upsets the estimates of the engineers sufficiently to make an earlier delivery of power advisable.

GENERAL SYNOD APPROVES PLAN

Accepts Three Recommendations of Anglican Nat. Commission

Toronto, Sept. 17 (C.P.)—"There seems to be a risk that the Primate will become a bottleneck for the church," Rt. Rev. C. A. Seager, Bishop of Ontario, said in discussing the report of the commission.

"I trust that he will not become simply a diocesan bishop as administrator. That has happened in one of our great sister churches.

"The only way the primacy can be thrown open from the Bishop so that a Priest can become a Primate is to have a lined primate Sea," declared Bishop Seager.

When he have Mitered that, fact of a fixed Primatial See with the proper endowments then we can have a Primate elected by the Synod. But until that time the Bishops will have to elect the Primate."

Approved Plan

The General Synod of the Church of England in Canada today approved in principle the first three recommendations of the report presented by the Anglican National Commission.

1.—That the office of the Primate be enlarged so as to enable the holder thereof to have a greater influence in the general life and work of the church.

2.—That the Primate be elected by the General Synod as representing the whole church.

3.—That a fixed Primatial See be established at the earliest possible date.

This pronouncement followed a lengthy debate last night and this morning in which three members blocked proposals to revise the basis of consideration so as to enable the election of a new Primate by the General Synod. While both houses approved, the election of a Primate by the General Synod in principle the exact method to be used and the manner of amending the constitution has not yet been decided. Several members pointed out that the principle must be implemented with detailed legislation. The chair of the Primate of all Canada has been vacant since the resignation at Most Rev. S. P. Matheson, former Archbishop of Rupert's Land.

SEVEN YEAR OLD BOY STRUCK CROSSING DUNDAS ST. ROAD

Samuel Domenico Sees One Car and Neglects a Second

DARTS OVER ROAD

Watching a car approaching from the east and paying but little attention to another car travelling east, little Samuel Domenico, 7 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Domenico, Dundas Street, east, was struck and knocked down by a car driven by Carl Worth, 247 Flax Hill Road, Norwalk, Conn., on Dundas Street east, Wednesday afternoon shortly after seven o'clock. The little boy was rushed to the hospital in the ambulance and it is feared he has a fractured skull. He was rendered unconscious by the impact and on Thursday had not become conscious. Dr. Robertson is in attendance. The driver of the car which struck the boy, stopped his machine almost immediately and rendered every possible assistance. After the victim was taken to the hospital, Sergt. Booth, who investigated, took the driver and his companion, Fred Frost, 21 Lowe Street, Norwalk, Conn., to the police station. The car was impounded but the men were allowed to sleep in a hotel. There were a number of eye witnesses to the accident and they agree the driver of the car was in no way to blame.

Darted Across Road

Little Sammy was playing on the north side of Dundas Street and started to go across the road to his home, which is on the south side, when the accident happened. A car was approaching from the east, driven by Edmund Ferguson, 43 Victoria Street, Guelph, Ont., and apparently the young boy was watching this car. He had plenty of time to cross in front of the westbound car but he did not see the eastbound car in time. Mr. Ferguson, the driver of the car, stated to the police he was only 15 yards away when he saw the boy dart from the sidewalk and that he never saw the car coming from the west. So quickly did the youth here in front of the eastbound car, Mr. Worth did not have a chance to avoid striking him. The lad hit the bumper and was thrown to the pavement, sustaining a severe bruise on the right temple above the eye. Little Les Moncrief, who was near the scene gave a statement to the officer that she heard the brakes applied and saw the boy being dragged on the road. He was carried about twelve feet.

Driver Made Statement

The driver of the car made a statement to the police after the accident. He stated he did not see the child until he was struck. The party had driven from Buffalo on Wednesday and after eating in Trenton were driving along Dundas Street, at a moderate rate of speed. Eyewitnesses of the accident say that the car was travelling as no more than a moderate rate. Dr. Robertson, in attendance, has stated that he had sustained a severe bruise on the right temple but whether the skull was fractured could not be ascertained until an X-ray photograph was taken and last night the child was in no condition for that ordeal, so he was made as comfortable as possible in a hospital cot.

Mr. Domenico, the father of the child, was in St. Catharines at the time but his friends in the city were soon in communication with him, and Mr. Domenico hurried home to be with the boy. The accident was most unfortunate and it is believed the youngster has a fighting chance to recover.

Once a Constable, Now a Chauffeur

Toronto, Can., Sept. 17—(CP)—Maj. General Victor Williams, C.M.G., Commissioner of Provincial Police, announced today that Constable N. R. Hodgson, who some time ago was kidnapped by bandits at Walkerton and forced to drive them for miles, has been permitted to resign from the force. Hodgson however has been given a position as chauffeur in the Provincial Police Department, and attached to headquarters in Toronto.

Styles as in 1932

Fashion took a dip into the past for the new fashion gestures that made up the J. A. McMabb Style Revue at the Rivards Karnival last evening. The modern mid: must honor her history if she desires any smartness this year for she must be aware of the trends of the 1800's, the days of the second Empire and the favorite modes of the Empress Eugenie. McMabb's revue supplied a wide selection of all these and many more style notes, giving to the women of Belleville the offerings of leading stylists of New York and Paris.

Supplementing the costume show, the exhibit of Mrs. Dundas Delaney's caused exalted comment on the part of the women in the audience. Some outstanding examples of the fur designer art were shown in coats of splendid quality. The small little hats worn with the garments were supplied by Woodley's and contributed to the charming effect. A variety of rare beauty was displayed on the mannequins by McFee's Jewelry Store.

The return of elegance in mode that has been flippantly casual for so long has been completed this year. Last year the more elaborate note was subtly introduced in frocks for all occasions. This year all harshness of line has entirely disappeared leaving the silhouette softly feminine and graceful. The silhouette has indeed completed an interesting cycle to return to that of the seventies. Now the widened shoulder line accentuating the slimness of the waist, the puffed sleeves, the [illegible] line in evening dresses take one back to the days of coquetry and charm, of fans and demure glances of days when grandmother was young.

A different range of fabrics and a new array of colors for the autumn day and night gave an impetus to the fine art of evening and provided many a thrill to the fascinated audience. Velvets and satins appeared for the finale they were enthusiastically received. The Belleville girls who are acting as mannequins have merrited enthusiastic applause for the splendid way in which they have performed their duties. They include Mrs. John Kerr, Mrs. R. A. Roberts, Mrs. Ben Burley, Miss Mary Rainsford, Miss Georgina Ray, Miss Gladys Dennison and Miss Madeline Bell.

Mrs. Kerr created great interest in her showing of a Blackshire gown of deep blue faconne velvet. Its cleverly molded lines being accentuated by the absence of trimming. This was worn with a black bouclé coat, whose body and sleeves were of black Persian caracul and collar of grey wolf.

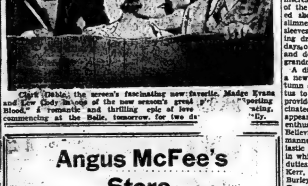
Mrs. Burley made her first appearance for the evening in a Sinbad crepe frock of radiance shade that used black velvet for the color contrast and was combined with a wrap of black spiral weave material fashioned with silver fox. A graceful afternoon dress of black georgette with flaring sleeves lined with green was displayed by Miss Bell with a little green coat of the new nubby weave material. On this coat the beaver collar was developed in the new let shape.

Miss Emerson showed the favored woollen dress in a model of brown with scarf of canary yellow, a coat of black bouclé with genuine Kolinsky completing the ensemble. Miss Rainford showed to advantage a Blackshire model of green faconne velvet outlined in satin at the draped neckline and featuring the three-quarter length sleeve. Her coat was of black diagonal weave material and Persian lamb.

An atmosphere of long ago was captured in the gown shown by Mrs. Roberts. In brown satin, the dress followed the Empress Eugenie mode in its long of mutton sleeves, its standup collar and shirred neck. This was given an added touch of beauty by the striking coat of brown boucle with entire sleeves and collar of Kolinsky squirrel. Miss Ray introduced a Blackshire model of black velvet, the neckline of which was formed of ropes of crystals, a dazzling effect on the bright green velvet gown. Her coat was of black wool crepe with blue fox collar.

The jewelry shown with the gown emphasized the importance of the selecting of just the right gems to be worn with the various types and shades of gowns. Crystals with the black velvets, marcasite necklaces for the shinier fabrics, sparkling bracelets for dark-toned costumes and bright costume pieces for sports and street wear were exhibited by McFee's Jewelry store. The feature of this firm's display being the marvellous diamond rings and bracelets worth thousands of dollars and giving spectators the thrill of a lifetime. The four thousand dollar diamond ring worn by Mrs. Lyster flashed with fire as it caught and reflected the lights of the hall. Handbags worn with the street costumes were in black, brown and dark green leather, with the large envelope shape leading in popularity.

As per little hats that topped off the costumes were displayed by Woodley's last evening and followed the last trends in millinery smartness. The Eugenie model has been modified and becomes all manner of shapes. The gay little Robin Hood felt, the more formal Empire model, and the Cherubic sports toque were fascinating in the color scheme of the mode.



The final grouping of the models made an artistic and compelling picture. In their lovely evening dresses and beautiful fur wraps the girls captured the hall and won tumultuous applause. Mrs. Kerr's fuschia taffeta gown had rows and rows of frills on the full skirt, and its puff sleeves contrasting with the low decolletage. Mrs. Burley's gown was an Empress model, featuring the dropped waistline line and rhinestone straps, and Miss Emerson showed a regal black velvet gown with rhinestone shoulder straps. Miss Mitford's little black taffeta Empire gown was the essence of demure grace as was that worn by Mrs. Roberts, in white taffeta with dark green velvet sash. Two striking black frocks showed the choice of black velvet with lace, as shown by Miss Rainbird, or an 1870 model of taffeta, displayed by Miss Ray.

The fur coats were worthy of great praise for the beauty of furs and the cleverness of their design. They included a Persian and Blue Lake rat) with ermine collar and cuffs, finished with ermine heads. Another coat of the same fur showed the latest New York touch, the right flare in the skirt and was trimmed with ermine inserts on the cuffs.

A white Chinese coney coat had inserts of brown coney, with lining in the same color scheme. Two jacquettes, one of black galyax with white lapin and the other with beige endorsed this particular style for fall and winter.

Natural Russian pony with two satin brown fox collar and a brown broadtail coat with deep flare, collar and cuffs of brown squirrel completed the fascinating display by Delaney's which had included the fur scarfs worn with the dresses.

WORLD FINANCES PUZZLE LEAGUE EXPERTS

Unprecedented Financial Crisis May Grow Slowly or Suddenly More Acute Say League Financiers

Financial Problem is Most Important Internationally

TARIFFS BLAMED

Unequal Treaties Lead to Accumulated Disequilibria

Geneva, Sept. 18. — The financial committee of the League of Nations reported to the assembly today that the world's financial crisis is unprecedented and "may well become gradually or suddenly more acute and more widespread."

This warning of a group of eminent financial experts was made the basis for an appeal for a larger appropriation to meet additional financial emergencies which may arise in the League this year and in 1932.

Sir Arthur Salter, British delegate, who for ten years has been director of the League's economic organizations, also emphasized the urgency of the financial crisis. He told the economic committee that the financial problem was the most important in international life.

Tariff systems and, particularly unequal treaties, he declared, are chiefly responsible for the present fiscal troubles of the world.

The United States' financial crisis lie the accumulated disequilibria in the economic sphere which arise for the most part from unequal tariffs," he said.

The doctrine of free trade propounded by the world conference of 1927 remains unchallenged in the opinion of the British expert. "Its failure is not to be credited by the fact that the world studiously avoided applying it."

"The medicine was good but the state world did not take it."

DIVERGENCE OF VIEWS ON DISSOLUTION

Danger of Appeal to People at Present Stage

IN DILEMMA

Situation of Extreme Gravity is Offered As Reason

(George Hazlebton, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

London, Sept. 18—Most people at Westminster are convinced today there will be a general election in the last week of October or early in November. The belief is the appeal to the country will be made by the National Government, headed by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, instead of a split up and return to the old three party system, the decision regarding an election is not likely to be taken for some time, however.

London, Sept. 18—There is to be no more borrowing for the relief fund, Neville Chamberlain, Conservative who is minister of health in the new cabinet, was emphatic on this point, when he detailed the unemployment insurance plans for the National government to the House of Commons today. Fortunately the dole fund was borrowing $5,000,000 a week to keep the treasury.

The government proposed to increase its ordinary payments to the dole fund, along with increased contributions from employed workers and employers, Chamberlain said. The benefits to unemployed would be reduced on the basis of three million unemployed. A figure which it is expected will be reached this winter, the unemployed fund would still show a deficiency next year, between revenue and expenditure, of $110,000,000.

This expected deficit, the minister stated would be met in part from current National revenues instead of continuing the practice of borrowing.

And from the Opposition benches, F. W. Pethwick Lawrence, former financial secretary to the treasury, announced labors are comprising hostility to the proposals. He said the National government's economy scheme was "class legislation of the most irresponsible illogicality." By reducing purchasing power, it won't only increase unemployment, he added.

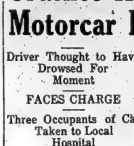
BABY BESSBOROUGH SMILES UNCONCERNED AS BIG EVENT DRAWS NEAR



The important ceremony in connection with the christening of the infant son of His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada and the Countess Bessborough, doesn't seem to trouble the central figure, who smiles blandly in his dreams, dreaming of those things which only a child can dream. The picture above shows Lord Bessborough leaving Government House, where he will represent His Majesty King George, who is to be the Godfather to the little fellow. The christening takes place in Ottawa on September 22nd.

Three Injured as Truck Crashes Head-on Into Motorcar East of City

Driver Thought to Have Drowsed For Moment

FACES CHARGE

Three Occupants of Car Taken to Local Hospital

ALMOST DUELLIST

Challenged to a duel by Count Hans Cserin, whom he had thrashed for getting familiar with his fiancee, Captain H. L. Lindsay (above) of London, England, as the challenged party, had the choice of weapons and decided to fight with machine guns in the air. But when the Captain's acceptance of his call to combat reached the ferocious Count the latter took the next boat home.

About 12.30 o'clock this Friday morning a head-on collision occurred between a truck and a coupe on the highway about six miles east of Belleville, and two occupants of the coupe, Miss Jeanette Reid and Miss Clara Fleming, of Shannonville, are in the General Hospital suffering painful injuries and shock. E. R. Milford a driver for the Dow Transport, Toronto, is alleged to have crashed into the coupe which was being driven by Frank Smith of Shannonville and he is now being held by the Ontario Provincial Police charged with criminal negligence and having caused grievous bodily harm.

Ontario Provincial Constable Frank was on the scene of the accident shortly after it happened and he was later joined by Sergeant Storey and Constable Campbell of the same force. Miss Ida Sons ambulance of Belleville was the first to arrive on the scene and Miss Houston was rushed to the General Hospital. The Belleville ambulance service also conveyed Miss Reid to the hospital. Dr. Cronk and Dr. Fitzgerald attended promptly to the summons and rendered medical aid. Smith the driver of the coupe, is said, to be not seriously injured, suffering mostly from a bad shaking up. Milford the truck driver is likewise said to be suffering only from the shock. An assistant driver on the truck, a man named Hall, received painful cuts on one hand and his injuries were attended to at the home of Mr. Reid, situated close to the scene of the accident. The truck which had a load of crockery and empty egg crates, turned over on one side, almost across the road; the coupe is said to be almost a wreck.

The driver stated it is understood that he must have fallen asleep and was awakened by a pair of bright lights coming towards him. He tried to pull to his own side but could not make it before the crash.

Later information obtained regarding the condition of Miss Houston reveals that she received severe lacerations of face and neck and one hand badly cut. It is understood that a blood transfusion will be made today.

Miss Reid is not apparently seriously injured and it is thought that unless something further develops she should be able to leave the hospital very soon. The injuries sustained by Miss Reid were to her back and cuts on the head.

Frank Smith suffered a nasty cut over his left eye and side of face was painfully scraped.

People who go to the seaside to recuperate after illness should indulge in sun bathing only on medical advice.

Can. Dollar Strikes Low on Wall Street

Officials of the Bank of Montreal in New York said they could ascribe no reason to the drop in the value of Canadian funds on local exchanges. The usual quarters the condition of the dollar was described as due to seasonal influences.

Wheat Pours Into Liverpool From All Parts of World

Special Arrangements For Accommodation of Supplies

Liverpool, Eng., Sept. 18. (C. P. Cable)—Coincidently with the first shipments of grain that starts today from Canada's Pacific ports, Sir Churchill Mackenzie announces that shipments of wheat from all parts of the world are pouring into Liverpool. Imports have been as large in recent weeks that special arrangements have been necessary to accommodate the enormous supplies coming in.

Since the beginning of September 5,812,000 bushels of wheat (Canadian and other) have been brought into Liverpool and the consumption has been only 2,400,000 bushels.

The total world shipments of wheat during the past three weeks have amounted to more than 46,000,000 bushels. Russia and the Danubian Basin have supplied near ly half this record export in this period, more than 22,000,000 bushels—and most of this quantity is coming to Great Britain.

Attention is expressed in Great Britain for Canada's courage in completing the financial project and starting the export of grain from there. The three charterers let it as a bold enterprise and adds there is reasonable ground for the high hopes with which the new Canadian experiments starts. Cautious optimism is justified, the Times says, concluding: "The building of the Hudson Bay Railway and the founding of the port of Churchill are acts elements of which Canada may rightly be proud."

PAPER IS SUSPENDED

Bishop Cannon Opposes Roosevelt's "Wet" Policy

New York, N.Y., Sept. 18—Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, south, home from Europe, intends to oppose Governor Roosevelt of New York for President at the next presidential election.

Mr. Roosevelt has proven he is a "wet," said the Bishop, "I absolutely will not support him if he is nominated. I would say as much as I could against him. I would do all I could to help defeat anywet, i am rather a good Democrat for a wet, but Mr. Hoover runs, I will support Hoover, unless he changes his prohibition stand."

MEN IN NAVY WILL TESTIFY

Grievances Will be Heard From Enlisted Personnel

London, Sept. 18.—(AP)—Naval port commanders in the principal fleet bases in Great Britain will begin hearing on Monday into the pay cut grievances among the enlisted personnel which caused postponement of the North Sea manoeuvres.

The Fleet has left Invergordon and the vessels will put in to Portsmouth, Devonport and Chatham. Commanding officers will testify and it is likely that some of the men themselves will be asked to present their side.

Mrs. Roundwood

London, Sept. 18.—(Canadian Press Cable)—"Abroad, the attitude of the men of the Atlantic Fleet has been grotesquely misunderstood as a revolutionary act," declared The Daily Herald, chief opposition newspaper, today. The Herald, declaring it was the only newspaper which stood firmly for fair play for the Naval men and other public servants, added: "The people of other countries were utterly bewildered when during the general strike, soldiers and strikers played football together. That is the British way."

And The Daily Herald, with other newspapers of different opinion, strongly urged there should be no further irritation, such as the refusal to obey orders which was the means of expression adopted by some of the Atlantic Fleet sailors in protesting against reductions in pay, which they feared would result in hardships for their families.

"People who act rashly under a strong sense of resentment only injure their own case," The Herald added. "The issues can be settled by constitutional means."

Meanwhile the country agreed with Sir Austen Chamberlain, First Lord of the Admiralty, who stated in the House of Commons last night: "The past is past. It is in the interest of everybody that the navy and out of it to forget what has happened." He said he was looking forward confidently, counting on the traditions of the senior service and the loyalty of the men. The latter indeed was never in doubt.

Moratorium on Children for 2 Years Urged

New York, Sept. 18 (CP)

Mrs. Margaret Sanger, birth control advocate, today called for a two year moratorium on childrgn, claiming infants born during the current depression were too heavy a burden on the resources of their parents.

"No woman should have any more children this year or until the industrial situation has returned to normal," she said. "Every child that is born now will only add to the financial distress of the family, impeding the health of the older children and adding a presumably ill-nourished and puny specimen of humanity to a world already overburdened with dependents.

GANDHI FAILS TO MAKE REPLY

Is Asked if Views He Expresses Are His Own

London, Sept. 18 (Canadian and Associated Press Cable) — Mahatma Gandhi failed to answer a question put to him in the Federal Structure Committee of the Round Round Table today. N. M. Joshi, one of the members, representing Indian Labor, asked Mr. Gandhi if the views he expressed yesterday on the projected Indian legislature were Mr. Gandhi's own views or those of the Indian Nationalist Congress. Mr. Joshi added that to his knowledge the Indian Nationalist Congress had never considered anything even remotely like India should be independent of Great Britain.

Lord Sankey, chairman of the committee, remarked to Mr. Joshi that he was sure the Mahatma would be willing to reply some time in the future.

The Federal Structures Committee today concluded the first phase of its discussions—on the question of methods of election in the New India. It will reconvene on Monday when it will take up the problem of the powers of the Federal legislature and relations between its two chambers.

In adjourning the committee Lord Sankey said he hoped it would be able to finish its work by next Friday evening when the minorities committee would meet. They would be able to draw up a complete report then, the report also yet to debate either in the committee itself or in the Round Table Conference proper.

5 Leaders Are Voluntary Prisoners Within Vatican

Detective Waits Outside Gate Leading to Editor's Office

OTHER PRISONERS

Vatican City, Sept. 18 (A.P.) Five leaders of the Catholic action organization are voluntary prisoners in the Vatican, for they dare not leave Vatican City because of their participation in the recent Italian Vatican controversy.

Among them is Count Della Torre, editor of Osservatore Romano, who has not left the Vatican since the dispute started about three months ago. An Italian detective stands outside the gate leading to his editorial officers night and day, presumably to arrest him as soon as he sets foot beyond the Papal confines.

Della Torre together with the Jesuit Father Rosa is slated for dismissal by the Pope as a concession to the Italian Government in recognition of the settlement of the controversy. The other voluntary prisoners are an officer of the Latin Guards who is said to have talked with the Pope with information for his speech against the head of the Fascist University group, and former leads of the Catholic Action connected with the defunct popular party.

GAS TANK EXPLODES

An explosion occurred in Mr. E. O. Hall's garage on Dundas St. on Saturday morning which fortunately did not result in a fatality, as was the Stirling News-Argus. A workman was in the act of welding a gasoline tank on the premises when all at once there was a bang! The force of the explosion lifted the tank somewhat to normal. It was discovered that the tank which the workman was being repaired on the north side of the building, not that to the south side, missing an iron pipe by the Ed Warren, who was working at the time. The force of the blast lit the pipe of the "males" and in his flight it hit his hip flask, leaving a gash that took about ten stitches to close. Fortunately Mr. Warren's body was not in a direct line or otherwise he undoubtedly would have been killed. The other part of the tank hit the ceiling and crashed to the floor with terrific force. No damage was done. It is believed that the gasoline was ignited by a spark from the tool and on the application of the welding torch there were sufficient fumes left to cause the explosion.

UNIVERSITIES ENROL 37,400

Report Shows $494 As Average Annual Cost Per Student

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—The Dominion Bureau of Statistics today issued its preliminary report on Universities and Colleges for 1930 showing a university grads enrolment of 37,400 of whom 24,961 (24,336 men and 8,777 women) attended the full session. Of these, 861 men and 321 women were post-graduate students, the remainder undergraduates.

There were 1,506 Bachelor's graduated, 4,798 bachelors' degrees, 632 masters' degrees or honorary masters, and 108 honorary doctors' degrees. From this it is estimated that 3,500 new male and 1,300 new female graduates are produced annually, while 13 p.c. of the men and 7 p.c. of the women graduates go to high school to teach. Student fees range from $75 p.c. of university graduates in the arts course, although in something the 40 years. The present proportion is probably not far from 2 p.c. which is the percentage reported for the 1930 session.

The report reports show that the average current cost of a year's instruction in the Canadian university (not counting the student's board, lodging, and personal expenditures for books, etc.) is about $494. Of this amount the average student pays $116 in fees, the $331 paid for him by the provincial governments, $94 out from the income of property set aside for the purpose, and $12 contributed by the churches or by sources, the foremost of which is the student's fees. In addition to the current expenditure listed above, the governments, for university property used, the value of which is estimated at $74,000 including lands, buildings and equipment. Including this, from a total of capital expenditure to be in the neighbourhood of $100 annually, the total cost of the university of accommodating a student has been approaches $600, a university course lasting four years costs the university about $2,400 of which it collects $464, or almost 20 p.c. from the student.

A LETTER TO YOU AND YOU!

I held a private preview screening this morning of "Sporting Blood" and I want to go on record that it is one of the finest pictures of this or any other season.

"Sporting Blood" is about horses, but it's much more than that. It's a story of humanity — its weakness and its pathos and its glory. It's the story of a horse sold down the river to a gambling ring—of a girl betrayed—and of a boy, played by the screen's fascinating new favorite, Clark Gable who helps them both back to redemption.

It's a picture you'll love and cheer and weep over!

MEN'S STYLE SHOW MADE A REAL HIT

Albert Adams, Clayton Hicks, Charles Semark and Art Savage, Models

TIP-TOP TAILORS

Accessories By Quick & Robertson and Jewelry By McFee

Man came into his own last night at the Kiwanis Karnival. Each year a style show has been held each of the evenings to display the models that will be worn by Lee Hommes during the Winter and Fall but on Thursday night, the Karnival Committee allowed the Lee Hommes to hold the boards and the style show arranged by the Tip Top Tailors went over in a big way. All the latest in men's clothes both in suits, coats for various occasions and evening dress wear was shown. One of the largest crowds of the week was out and the committee were entirely pleased after the good reports started to come in. The young men displaying the garments were Albert Adams, Clayton Hicks, Charles Semark and Arthur Savage. The suits were by Tip Top Tailors, the accessories such as hats and gloves were shown by Quick and Robertson and the jewelry consisting of cigarette cases, wrist watch and cigarette lighters were shown by McFee, the jeweler.

The boys first showed the fall suits and coats. Some were form fitting, others with tight backs and wide shoulder seams, while others had a raglan sleve. All the newest trends for fall, the dark greys and the blues were shown, these being the popular shades, that will be worn. A few new flannel suits were shown to add just a touch of summer, although that season is just around the corner. Of more interest to the men were the styles in fall and winter overcoats. The models shown by the tailored team will be popular, while the box back coats will be worn extensively. A number of imitation fur coats were shown and apparently the belted coats, will again be popular with the young man. The models were felt hats suitable to all these suits and browns, greys and dark shades will be worn this year. The brim of the hats is slightly wider than last year and are worn down more over the face with the angle more tilted than ever. A few dress coats were shown but they are principally in blue with a deep velvet collar.

The closing scene of the style show was neatly arranged and brought an enjoyable entertainment to a close. A bridge table was arranged at which were seated Miss Edith Rainbird, Miss Madeline Bell and Mrs. John Kerr arrayed in evening dress by A. E. Hepburn Company, accompanied by one of the men models. Later the party was joined by other men models and after a short little a tete in the drawing room, the whole party left to spend an evening in a night club. The boys were receiving calls while the girls added beautiful fur coats and wraps by Delaney before their departure.

Elliott Burgess added materially to the style show by his pleasing chatter and expert description of the various models worn. The style show was a distinct success.

PROBE N. YORK CO. CONTROLS

Stirling Electric Consumers Given Large Saving

Toronto, Sept. 18—Contracts for supply of road materials and construction of pavements in North York township from August 1st, 1922, the date of inception of the municipality, to September 1, 1931 will be investigated by the judicial investigation shortly to be held, it was learned last night.

Judge Denton, senior judge of the township, was asked to investigate contracts over this nine-year period in a resolution adopted by the town ship council at a special meeting last night.

Contracts to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars have been let by the township in the period since 1922. It is thought not all of these will be probed, but only those about which there is any suspicion or concerning which definite charges are made.

October 15th has been set as the tentative date for the start of the probe.

Monoxide Gas Used By Chicken Thieves

London, Ont., Sept. 18.—County police believe that chicken thieves in this district are using carbon monoxide gas to overcome the birds and stifle their noise, so that farmers are not aware of the thefts of poultry until the following morning. It is surmised that a pipe is attached to the exhaust of a car and when the motor is started the gas is pumped into a coop, the birds falling helpless to the floor. The police say they have also reason to believe that the thieves have a general slaughter house in the district where the poultry is dressed and prepared for market. John Brady of Cardor reported that his entire flock of 100 chickens had been stolen, and Wm. McIntyre of Metcalfe lost 60 birds. In county police court today Albert Johnston pleaded guilty to attempting to rob the roost of Max Schreiber of West Nissouri, and he was remanded by Magistrate F. T. Zeque until Sept. 23 for sentence. Johnston was captured in the act by Schweitzer and his daughter Ruth.

Because of the prolonged drought period in the middle areas of Western Canada and the United States the situation, according to the Federal Government, has become serious. The regulations announced here last night were of a temporary nature and will lead to international action by the two countries.

PIRATE CASE SENT TO JURY

District Attorney Has Facts He Will Not Yet Reveal

New York, N.Y., Sept. 18 —District Attorney Alexander O. Blue, of Suffolk County, is to refer the death of Benjamin P. Collins and yacht pirates to a grand jury in the hope of obtaining indictments against the slayers.

"I now have a clear picture of what happened on the Penguin and after the events of the Penguin were over," he said, adding that he had information he did not care to reveal. He announced that Pelle de Martini, private detective, and one time an ace of the New York police, had been retained as his special investigator.

Martini figured prominently in the Hall-Mills murder trial as a defense investigator.

Two unidentified men boarded the Penguin at Lloyd's Neck, Long Island Sound, a week ago last Wednesday, threw Collins overboard and kidnapped his wife. His body was washed up last Wednesday.

Coroner William B. Gibson of Suffolk, in announcing an inquest for this morning, said he would have liked to call Mrs. Collins as a witness, but Mr. Blue had ruled against this. Several policemen and N. L. Noteman, who found the Penguin drifting in the Sound, were asked to be the first witnesses.

EAST IS EAST

Gandhi with his Indian nativity and with his European training is best fitted to show off the contrasts between the East and the West. It seems hard to bridge the gap between the occidental and the oriental for the ways of the two are so different from centuries of segregation and differences in education. Custom has made two divisions of the human race of these peoples, but at the rate at which the world is opening up and the hidden places being revealed, the east and the west cannot but be brought more closely together.

STILL HOPING

The upswing in wheat and the turn yesterday in security markets have made some to have hopes that realization of the too great depth of the depression is beginning to dawn on many people.

People are however so hesitant that doubtless the swing upward when it does come will be under way before they know it.

THE KING AND WORSHIP

King George, who, though brought up in the air of ostentation does not parade like some fallen monarchs used to do, takes his religion as a very personal matter. The king's sincerity which is marked by his every act shows in his desire to escape the floodlight of idle curiosity when he goes to worship. It is said that he may build a private chapel where he may worship whilst at Balmoral because of the curiosity of the thoughtless.

No one has any more right to break into the king's devotions and worship than to break into the solemn religious devotions of the humblest of his subjects, for the king is as humble as any of those over whom he reigns. The king feels inordinately the burdens which rest upon him as the head of the empire and he is in very truth the most subject of all British subjects for he feels for all and what rests on all rests on him.

Those who know the solace of religion cannot but realize how much His Majesty feels the need of prayer and devotions. The king is not on show when he goes to church for he knows that in the realm of the spiritual the kingship is but a circumstance of life and does not weigh more than the office of a postal. Those who harrass and worry the king by their denunciations of curiosity fail to realize that the king goes to worship in all humility. The king has no false ideas of divine right, he realizes that all men are brothers of one clay and that their worship ought to be that of the one God.

HIS NEW LIFE

Somehow there has come a turning of the ways in the life of a long-term convict in Portsmouth penitentiary. He has passed all the examinations set by the department of education and would if free be able to attend a university. He is seeking to register for an arts course in Queen's.

Something went wrong in that young man's early years but now his mind is turned to the more important things of life. If all imprisonment would only lead to such as this, among the greatest advocates of the straight life would be those who had stepped into the sypath for a time and recovered their footing.

No doubt this man's conversion is sincere. No one willingly takes upon himself a course of study without purpose when he is not required to do so and struggling through studies which are more difficult to him at his age than if he were a youth in the midst of congenial companions.

He through some one's good ministrations has seen the folly and the sham of a life of crime against organized society. Many others unfortunately find imprisonment debasing and become rebellious against society.

His life is a proof that the wages of crime are exacted.

But what has occurred in his case is ground for encouragement for parents whose sons has gone astray and for penologists who endeavor to find the way through a prisoner's barrier of conduct into the greater field of usefulness which even a man who has been serving in a prison can perform.

Those who minister to men and women in prison are perhaps sowing seeds which will bring a harvest of repentance of evil doings.

The problem is how to find the key to the hearts of men!

SOMETHING BETTER

By Aline Michaelis

Oh, beauty is sown at the heart of the world
And it flowers on every hand,
As it flaunts itself like a flag unfurled
In the wonders of sea and land!

And men's eyes are gladdened by mountain heights
And the glory of dusk and morn,
By the changeful cycle of earth's delights
That ever afresh are born.

But something is fairer than aught they see
As they pass through the maze of the days,
There is something touched with divinity,
Not akin to the world and its ways.

It is something apart from man's fleshly garb,
Something better than all the rest,
That flinches never from goad or barb,
Nor falters at any test.

At the heart of the world there is beauty sown
And it flowers throughout the whole:
But the rarest loveliness earth has known
Is the bloom of the valiant soul!

"THE MAN I MARRY must be good-looking. He must be six feet tall or more, must be a preacher, have certain rigid standards, play the trombone, a good singer, and he must be a good holy man." Such were the specifications submitted by Aimee McPherson, evangelist and goddess of the Square Deal Temple at Los Angeles. Aimee is now Mrs. David L. Hutton, and her husband will have some time living up to the specifications, if Aimee insists on the original plans. This is Aimee's third husband and she should know what she wants by this time. He took the part of "Pharoah" in a biblical drama in which Mrs. McPherson also took part. He took the part of the famous Egyptian king so well that Aimee was satisfied he could play the part of a husband reasonably well. Yuma, Arizona was the scene of the wedding and the wedding party flew there from Los Angeles. The reason given why the wedding was not solemnized in Los Angeles was the fact that several days notice has to be given before the marriage can take place there—so the love birds just flew over to Yuma when they were in the notion and had the chains riveted. Mrs. McPherson is credited with a personal fortune of $600,000, and was responsible for the building of the Temple at an expense of somewhere near a million dollars and an overhead which would worry a seasoned circus man. Mrs. McPherson, who has been married twice before admits thirty-nine years while her husband is somewhat younger. They begin a series of evangelistic services in Portland, Oregon this week.

BUSY BUSINESS MEN make up the membership of the Kiwanis Club, but they are not too busy to put in a hard week's work making Kiwanis Karnival a success, besides much preliminary work and clearing up afterward. All this hard work they make into play in order to raise money to do good with. Many tears are wiped away and the fear taken from many eyes as the result of the quiet good works of the Kiwanis Club. This winter, undoubtedly, will reveal many places where food, fuel and money will bring smiles to troubled faces and thanks to the great Giver of All Good that He has placed the milk of human kindness in the heart of man and the will to do good. Here is a chance for all to help—give the Kiwanis Karnival a big boost in the closing days so that it may be the big success it always deserves to be.

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS

Lovers of the picturesque must thank the happy chance that gave Logden at the same time the presence of two illustrious figures, one typified the ancient and primitive, the other the consumative flower of New York civilization and modern decorative art. With their differences and distances in intellectual and philosophical outlook we are not now concerned, dealing only with externals. If most wool-stained Briton had dropped into one of Lady Bleasington's parties when the young Disraeli was at his peak of dandyism, he would have been less of a contrast than are the simplicities of Mr. Gandhi to the splendors of Mayor Walker. The Manhatma and his loin-cloth, his home-made shawl, his sandals's recall to a world in which he has long been highly visible a line of holy men and saints given to poverty and contemplation. He still keeps his day of silence. He is the ascetic East. It is the West that is temporal.

See the Mayor, in part, outgracing the brilliant togs of Sherriff and Lord Mayor with his own rich grace gilding the gilded coach he rode in.

He has on a pea-green tweed coat with saxe-blue buttons.

No doubt other primary and artificial colors commingled in a perfect radiance. For the Mayor is an artist. As the old saying is, he clothes his clothes. Far from blaming, if any one has, we praise him for his courage and sincerity and devotion to the aesthetic code. There are statesmen who "dress down to the people" and imagine that there are fools who can be taken in by sham negligee and rusticity of guise. The more luxuriantly the Mayor dresses, the better his friends in both hemispheres like him. It is only as symbols of the old and new, of renunciation and the pride of life, of the machine age and cottage industry, that the saint and the statesman who have looked at side by side. We don't know what the Mayor's opinions of Indian home rule are, or of homeweaving on its economic side. But his artis's soul must be wounded by the prospect of a return of processes which might possibly slow the production of even the two taxicab-load which are the great impediments when he is far from his base of supplies.

On reflection, however, one sees that "Our Jimmy" would have nothing to fear if the civilization of which he is the ornament should change overnight. On a bullock or Carthaginian cart, camel-back or elephant-back, he could still ride up Broadway amid ecstatic cheers, wearing his lolo-cloth, his shawl, his sandals, with hot less compliments than he wears his pea-green tweed and the rest in London.—New York Times.

COAL MAY BE NEXT

The Pittsburg Post-Gazette, which serves a field that is even more interested in coal than oil, declares there are some points of similarity but admits it is a mistake to draw too close a parallel. "Obviously," it says, "any artificial restriction of production over the three or four largest bituminous-producing states would shortly raise prices, but it would contribute little or nothing to any lasting improvement of the industry's troubles. It would bring additional distress to mining communities temporarily and would injure some companies more than others." The Post-Gazette does not contend that the proposal should be barred from any consideration whatever, but admits it may have to be weighed with other suggestions that have been brought forward. It prefers to believe there could be effective, though less drastic, intervention by state or federal governments. It is generally recognized that any governmental intervention might have unfavorable political reactions if, because of faulty planning or uncontrollable errors, it should end in failure. "It may be the safe thing to dodge it," says the Post-Gazette, "but that is not leadership, and the public's stake in the emergency is such as to demand some constructive effort—whether or not political risks are involved." Canadian people, who continue to be eager or less dependent on the republic for fuel, will have more than a passive interest in the problem that bears their big neighbor.—Hamilton Spectator.

LEARNED A LOT FROM ST. HILDA

President of American Bandmasters' Ass'n. Amazed

Praise for St. Hilda's Band is made indeed, when it comes from such an authority as Edwin Franko Goldman, conductor of the famous Goldman Band which delighted music lover at the Canadian National Exhibition two years ago. He came to Toronto from Sigwin, where he was vacationing, just to hear the band from England, and he says:

"I have never heard anything superior in brass bands, and I would advise all people who have never heard this band to go to the Exhibition and hear it. They can only profit by it. I have never heard anything like it, and nobody is too old or too good to learn. I have learned a lot from it."

What amazes Mr. Goldman is the fact that the men of St. Hilda's Band are, or were, miners. He expressed the opinion that their transformation was a remarkable and almost unbelievable feat.

"Many people think that bands are inferior to orchestras," he said, "but that is not so. There is no question of inferiority. Each achieves something different."

Beauty and Frill grace in a Silver and Gold Adorns Princess Throne

Miss Jasmine of Southern France is at the Karnival this week in a beautiful creation of silver and black and is attracting marked attention from the young men while the ladies, young and old, are naturally gravitating to the booth where she holds forth. Miss Jasmine, for she takes the name of the Perfume she hails from far-away France and fills full to a nicety, also the special costume which was imported by the management of the McGovern Store for the purpose of suitably introducing Jasmine Toiletries to the patrons of the Karnival. Starting the billowing, dainty fabric in silver sequined, the costume corresponds with the Jasmine goods which are handsomely put in silver and black containers of rare beauty.

Fashion Fancies

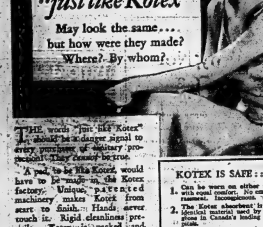
A return to yet is indicated for the coming season in that always reappears as the Autumn season approaches. Extreme tailoring and severities is a wrap of pinkish-beige broadcloth with threads and topped by a high double collar of mink.

What's the idea for using an old shoe tie to hand. Why not, if you have an old leaver coat have a shirt made of it with wide revers and wear it under a nice loose wool sweater. A shade of rose beige. You will then be duplicating one of the best models of the new season.

Smart learn new tricks as this fur-trimmed jacket important for new fall wool suits. A new coat of black woolen uses seal to that it gives a perfect suit effect.



Nearer and nearer in our affection is the slipping frock of white chiffon, with a subdued sparkle in the coat of trimming. Thus, a white chiffon frocked with tiny crystal beads has a simple white satin belt with rhinestone buckles. The blue is marked by diagonal cutting that gives a moulded effect.

Wool gathering is a popular pastime these days as we gather together woollen outfits. Nice for sport wear or vacation is a white bouclé sweater, a white flannel skirt, a white crocheted beret, a white bag of spongy woollen and a white wool top coat.

We are set on satin for Autumn. Typical of the preference is a suit of brown satin with a blouse of cream satin embroidered with soutache braid and worn with a brown jacket, each over the perplexed waistline.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Doesn't Feel at Home

Dear Miss Fairfax:—

I am a daily reader of your column and so believe you can help me. We moved to this town not quite a year ago. The few people we know have been very nice to us but I do not feel at home with them. My mother doesn't allow me to go to public dances, so I don't have very much chance to meet any one. We have had two or three parties since we moved to this house, but only the old crowd was invited. I am 18 and by no means beautiful, but I would like to dance and believe in having a good time without going to extremes.

The Lonesome Girl.

A! 16 you have got plenty of time to wait before you find yourself the belle of every ball. You might try speaking to some of the neighbors' girls who live near you, and getting acquainted that way if you like. Side your time and don't be in too great a hurry to know people. In selecting friends it is always wise to "make haste slowly."

Heave-Loving Girl

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 years of age, and very home-loving. I have a girl friend who tells me to snap out of my home-loving ways and go out and have a good time. I have been out with her many times and always have a good time, like to go out with her, but the boy next door interests me more. He seems to be very quiet and therefore my type of man. He is just six months older than I. I have never gone out with him but once, and he is a good sport.

Would you advise me to listen to my girl friend and have good times with all the boys, or would you settle down with the boy next door?

C.B.

If you are a home-loving girl I think the best thing you can do is to follow your own instincts rather than go about with the girl friend and the crowd of boys she seems to have at her beck and call. You seem to me to be getting along very well with the boy next door. Don't try to hurry things too fast.

No-Treats Here

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We are two sisters and go with two brothers. They each make twenty-five dollars a week. We realize this isn't much, but they live at home and only give their parents five dollars a week.

Now this is the problem: We go out with them three or four times a week, but they never ask us to go to a show or any other place of amusement, but make their own plans for the evening which usually is a visit to some friend's house, or a ride. We enjoy their friends' company and the rides, but would also enjoy a show once in a while; and if you can we'd appreciate it. If you'd send them a new suggestion to attract our attention away from the ice cream parlor or even the drug store. We're so tired of their old methods of playing cards.

We enjoy their company and think that we are getting tired of riding around every night.

Unless these young men are very beautiful to look at, I don't see that their attention means very much to you. And the fact that they are likely to be the main-stays of the future doesn't insure you a home at the present. My advice is to look about for nice young men who are less gifted with the doubtful quality of penny pinching.

The Popular Scientific Food—Liver

By Barbara B. Brooks

Not long ago, the feeding of liver was found to have a very remarkable effect on people suffering from secondary anemia. Overnight this time anemia had baffled the medical profession. It had become almost incurable. But with this new discovery, the disease became, in some degree, controllable and the eating of liver became a fad. People began eating this meat at the suggestion of doctors or because they had been cured of its merits. Consequently liver became important in the butcher shop. Its importance has consistently risen until now it is often difficult to obtain.

With its partial boom, liver began to appear on the menus of the best hotels and restaurants. It became a delicacy in many homes where formerly scraps of it had been thrown to the pets. New ways of preparing it were discovered. It was made into loaf, into meat soups and sandwich fillings.

Calf's liver is now the best kind because of its delicate flavor and tender fibers. However, the less expensive types of liver, such as pork, can be made very good with careful preparation.

It really is necessary for some housewives to learn various ways of cooking this food because frequently as much as a pound each day is advised by the doctor in connection with the treatment of pernicious anemia. No matter how good food may be, it has to be taken in many ways if it is to become monotonous unless it is tactfully prepared.

This new recipe for a steamed liver loaf is very good. It tastes very much like "pate de fois gras" which is an imported preparation of goose livers.

Steamed Liver Loaf

(Mock Pate de Fois Gras)

1 pound liver (beef or pork); 1-2 pound salt pork; 1 medium onion; 2 sprigs parsley; 2 eggs (beaten); 1 cup fine corn flake crumbs; 1-2 cup milk; 1-4 teaspoon pepper.

Boil liver, put liver, salt pork, onion and parsley through food chop, add corn flake crumbs, milk and seasoning that has been mixed with the eggs. Put in a well greased dish. Cover and tie waxed paper over top. Steam for three hours. Serve hot or cold.

Yield: 8 servings.

Baked Calf's Liver

Select a fresh calf's liver weighing about three pounds. Have the butcher lard and roll it. Put in a roasting pan, and roast for one hour in a modern oven (375 F.). Serve with brown gravy.

Fried Liver and Bacon

1 1-2 lbs. liver; 8 slices of bacon.

Slice the liver into half-inch slices. Fry the bacon. When crisp remove from frying pan. Sprinkle the slices of liver with pepper and salt and dredge with flour. Fry them in bacon fat about ten minutes. When done, garnish with the bacon. Liver may also be broiled.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beckman
Freemeeking "Mona".

Dear Mrs. Beckman:

1. Will you please tell me the correct way to pronounce menu? Webster's Dictionary gives ma-noo-ay and I hear it called men-u also.

2 I have a book of etiquette in which says a woman should not give her order direct to the waiter, but should tell her escort and then he gives the order to the waiter? Is this correct? It seems rather Victorian for the present "day and age.

3 When a woman is traveling alone, what should she do with her luggage while eating? Should she check it when she goes into the dining car? Seems bothersome to take it and rather risky to leave it in your seat.

E.E.

1 A difficult word, this from the French, but one that we have to use so often that we must at least make an effort to pronounce it as nearly correct as we can. The accent is usually on the last, and the s short as in lend. And, when we have more than 1,000 to choose from, this is the syllable that gets the accent.

It is the u that is difficult to pronounce—as if it were a combination of u and i. It is the same combination of sounds that we find in the German umlaut, the two dots over a vowel; the combination of the vowel itself with the sound of e. To pronounce it, you find yourself pulling the corners of the mouth back a little. I wish that I could make it clear to you, but just has to practice that u-e sound! The next best pronunciation is to say it as in new-te.

2. This book has it right; the woman gives her order to her companion and he gives both orders to the waiter. If the woman's order differs from his he gives hers first, as he relays them to the waiter.

It isn't that it is Victorian, dear friend, it is that it is gallant. And, my dear, gallantry has always shown that she is appreciative of the fact that a man is glad to have a companion is host. When you are host you like to have shown that she is appreciative of the fact that you are

RED SOX STAR EARNS RECORD FOR DOUBLES

Earl Webb, Outfielder For Boston, Broke Geo. Burns' Record

MADE 65th

Burns' Record Was Made in 1926, He Being 1st Sacker for Cleveland

By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer

Boston, Sept. 18—Red Sox, both individually and collectively, are giving the home town fans something to talk about in the waning days of the 1931 campaign.

First, they pulled out of the American League cellar two days ago and, then, yesterday, one of their number set up a brand new record for two baggers in a season.

When Earl Webb, crack right fielder, hit his 65th "double off Hallowenstat of Cleveland, in the second half of a double header, he passed the all-time mark of 64 set in 1926 by George Burns, Cleveland first baseman. He had tied the former record in the first game.

This big successful effort to pass Burns' great mark, Webb has been a big-base specialist in recent weeks stretching every possible hit to the middle cushion and going past that bag for nothing less than a home run. He has made only three triples all season, but has 14 home runs to his credit.

Webb's first double of the day helped the Sox beat Cleveland, 9 to 2 in the opener, but his record-break er could not avert a 2 to 1 defeat in the nightcap. Johnny Hodapp's single in the 10th with the bases full gave the Indians the winning run off Wes Ferrell.

Improved kept seven Boston hits widely scattered.

Yanks and Senators Tied

The New York Yankees and the Washington Senators yesterday became involved in a hot fight for second place in the American league the Yanks climbing into a tie for the coveted position by beating St. Louis twice, while Washington was dropping its opener to Detroit.

Charlie Ruffing and Bill Dicker co-starred to give the Yanks a 11 to 6 victory in the first game, Ruffing allowing nine well spaced hits and Dickey leading the offense with a pair of home runs that drove in seven. Vernon Gomez, rookie left-hander, yielded only three hits in the nightcap and this time Babe Ruth parked a pair, his 41st and 42nd of the year, to give the Yankees a 6 to 4 victory.

Art Herring pitched Detroit to a 3 to 1 win over the Senators, blanking them until the ninth inning. Jonathan Stone socked a home run for the Tigers in the first game, but Chicago White Sox idle at Philadelphia.

National League

Chicago and Brooklyn locked horns in the day's feature bout in the National League, the Cubs finally pushing across the winning run in the last of the ninth after the Robins had scored twice to tie it in their half. The score was 4 to 3 and gave the Hornsbymen their eighth straight victory. Danny Taylor's single drove in the decisive run off Thurston.

The veteran Tom Zachary allowed only five hits as the Boston Braves down Pittsburgh 1 to 0 in the first game of a twin bill, but the Pirates came back to take the second 4 to 3, behind Glenn Spencer. Bill Harris, Pirate recruit, was handed his first defeat in three starts in the opener. He had only allowed two runs in 27 innings.

No less a star than Paul Derringer was knocked from the hill as the New York Giants inaugurated their final series at St. Louis with a 7 to 2 victory. Mel Ott supplied the money punch in the fifth innings, his 29th home run of the year with two on base. Bill Walker went the distance for the Giants holding the league champions to six hits.

The Phils broke a 10-game losing streak when they beat Cincinnati 8 to 3. Les Mallon led the attack with three Red pitchers with three singles.

MERMAID QUEEN

Did you ever stop to figure out that most of these marathon swimming champions come of Teuton stock? Vierkoetter, Martha Norelius, and this year Margaret Ravlin among many. The breed seems to provide the tenacious endurance required for the body-and-soul-wracking competition of these long distance swims. Miss Ravlin, who is one of the finest girls you could want to meet, drank during her training occasional glasses of ale, another old Teutonic custom. Incidentally she and George Young are linked by guess as a possible swimming team for life. They both deny it, naturally, but even that broadway sage, Walter Winchell, reports it. Don't misunderstand me, but when I say that George would be getting a nice girl, I mean nice girl.

KEYS MAKE GOING TOUGH FOR BEARS

Keystones Hands Bears 9 to 4 Defeat. Latter 1½ Games Behind

DID NOT PLAY

Leafs and Rochester Have Four More Games to Play

Undaied International—By The Associated Press.—Thanks to the heading Keystones, who have no chance of getting even as high as fifth place in the International League Standing, the Rochester Red Wings are about ready to take another pennant.

Reading handed Newark a 9 to 4 setback in their final clash of the season, while Rochester's opener against Toronto was rained out and left the Bears a gathe and one-half behind with only three to play. The Red Wings have four more to go before the season ends, all of them against fellow Maple Leafs, which have been slipping badly lately, and need only two victories to be sure of a tie for first place if Newark wins all of its three remaining battles from Baltimore.

This is how the race stood today

	Won	Lost	To Play
Rochester	96	66	4
Newark	97	66	3

Three doubleheaders against Reading in succession apparently had proved a bit too much for the Bears' pitching staff and four hurlers failed to halt the Pennsylvania sluggers. They drove Don Brennan from the mound in three innings, piling up a 5-1 lead, then continued to hit Lil Stoner, Manager Al Mamaux himself and Myles Thomas to pile up a total of 14 safeties. Jim Poole put the game away for the Keystones when he clouted a homer with two aboard in the third.

Charley Willis, who went the route for Reading, was nicked for 12 hits but Andy Cohen was the only Bear batter, who could make his blows count. Andy drove in all four Newark runs with a single in the third and a homer in the third and a homer also in the fifth.

Baltimore and Jersey City likewise suffered from rain as their night encounter. The final of the series. Was washed out. Montreal and Buffalo were not scheduled.

IDAHO STATE TITLE TO JACK

Boise, Idaho, Sept. 18 — Jack Dempsey battled and carried five rounds through seven rounds of boxing here last night to win the Idaho State championship for gaining crowds.

The bout packed the fairgrounds grandstand and a crowd of capacity seats to a total estimates by officials at 6,000 turned out for posing in Idaho.

Dempsey laid away Jack Smith of Oklahoma in 57 seconds. Lewis O'Tert of San Jose, California, played two rounds as did Battling Lamoreaux of Preston, Idaho. Jimmy Gallon of St. Anthony, lasted one round by virtue of Dempsey lifting him off his knees as the bell rang.

Mickey McCafferty, 140, Pocatello Idaho, came back into the ring for one round with the former world's champion after having disposed of Art Palmer of Salt Lake City by a technical knockout in the third round of a scheduled ten round bout. Jack Dempsey never swung at him, contenting himself with dodging the flashy welterweight.

"BOUGHT" TONIGHT AT THE CAPITOL

Last night at the Capitol "Bought!", Constance Bennett's latest and greatest picture received acclamation from a large crowd. That matinee was well attended, too. The mad career of a mannequin, so superbly portrayed by Constance Bennett, who longs for "high society", but who is compelled to practice deception and disown her parents, in order to sell herself to the highest bidder, is the theme of "Bought".

The work of Constance Bennett in this drama, making her she is the highest paid star of the screen. Her father, Richard Bennett, supports her for the first time, and Ben Lyon plays opposite. The picture is an adaptation of "Jazz daw's Strut," by Harriet Henry.

"Bought" and the supporting programme of comedy and interest, ends tonight at the Capitol.

"FOURTH ALARM" AT THE CAPITOL SATURDAY

Dedicated to the Heroes of the Flames

A drama, packed of action, story and inspiring scenes captures the screen at the Capitol on Saturday and Monday, matinee daily. This drama, "Fourth Alarm," is a seat-gripper, and will be enjoyed to the utmost by both young and old.

"Fourth Alarm," starring Edmund Stuart, Ann Christy and Tom Santschi, does not deal entirely with firemen, because there is a stirring story of romance, society, pathos, comedy and tragedy from the pen of Wood Littleton, a veteran of thrilling photoplays.

The story deals with a wealthy chemist, who flaunts the regulations by manufacturing high explosives on the sly. His daughter, Helen, is of the fast set, and is constantly getting into hot water through spending. Following up close behind the hook and ladder, media way to a fire, with a young fireman, Dick Turner on the rear steering control, Helen loses control of her car and to save her self from certain death, Dick steers in the opposite direction to that man at the front. There is an accident and Dick lands in the hospital with a broken leg. Through the girl, Dick gains promotion, and finds himself detailed to inspect the ware house of the chemist. Here he finds the high explosives, and is torn between duty and love for Helen.

The sequence, the terrific fire resulting in the fourth alarm being turned in, and the smashing climax will prove "The Fourth Alarm" to be the very picture for an evening's ideal entertainment.

"Witch Doctor's Magic"

In addition to the feature on Saturday and Monday, a further episode of that immensely interesting series, "Chandu the Magician" will be shown. This episode, "Witch Doctor's Magic" will cause awe and wonderment at the weird and wonderful methods employed by the mad amazing character in the world, the Witch-Doctor.

"The Voice of Hollywood," a trivelogue, "Wirewishppers," and the News will complete an all around excellent program.

CLARK GABLE AT ELLIS IN "SPORTING BLOOD"

Laurel-Hardy In New Comedy

Thrills of the racetrack and the schemes and methods of crooked gamblers serve as a colorful background for a love story in "Sporting Blood," Tuesday and Wednesday, which is the feature attraction at the Ellis today and Saturday, matinee daily.

Based on the Saturday Evening Post story "Horseflesh," by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan, it was adapted to the screen by Charles Brabin, its director, Willard Mack, author of "Slick In," "Gang War," "Common Sin," and other plays and Wanda Tuchock.

Though not a racetrack play in the usual sense of the word, it shows the inside business as a background for its central theme. Thrills of the Kentucky Derby, intimate glimpses behind the scenes at a track and its gambling halls are incidental to the love story that runs through the play.

Gable Featured

Clark Gable, of "The Secret Six" and "A Free Soul" fame and Madge Evans, heroine of "Son of India," play the lovers, and Ernest Torrence, Lew Cody, Marie Prevost, Harry Holman, Hallam Cooley, J. Farrel McDonald and others are in the cast.

The story deals with the career of a racehorse,passing from owner to owner, finally into the hands of a crooked race manipulator, then into the hands of a gambler's "moll" and her lover, a blacklegs dealer. These, in their efforts to rehabilitate the horse, find regeneration for themselves.

The dramatic highlights include the great Derby, the discovery by the girl that a crooked jockey has been placed on her horse, her frustration of the plot by cutting the animal's reins, the pathetic death of the famous racing mare, the heart-gripping sale of the colt, the dramatic "bumping off" of the gambling magnate, played by Lew Cody, and the vivid scene in the great gambling hall.

Stan Laurel and Babe Hardy are appearing on the same program in their latest Rombi-shell of joy, "Come Clean", a funny Mickey Mouse Talkartoon, and the ever popular Paramount News, with its important news events including Bon and George Young, will also be exhibited.

GRAF ZEPPELIN ON A CRUISE

Friedrichshafen, Germany, Sept. 18 (A.P.)— The Graf Zeppelin, leviathan of the trans-Atlantic airways, left early today for Pernambuco on her second non-stop cruise to South America within three weeks.

She was carrying no passengers, including Harold Knight of New York and James McVittie of Chicago, 250 pounds of mail and 2,000 pounds of provisions.

Captain Ernest Lehman was in command, pinch-hitting for Dr. Hugo Eckener who was attending a conference at Innsbruck.

The Graf will wait five days in Pernambuco for return mail as she did on the last cruise, which ended September 7th. A third cruise is planned for the middle of October.

SHELL

STOP AT THE SIGN OF THE SHELL

THERE'S a fascination about the North in the Autumn—here and there a dash of red, yellow and russet against a deep green background mirrored in a tranquil lake where a lone blue heron stands majestically on guard.

There's a bracing chill in the air, scurrying clouds scamper across the setting sun, a thin wisp of blue smoke curls leisurely toward a reddening sky. The splash and thrill of a fighting bass adds the final touch.

The harvest moon in all its glory leaves a silver path across the lake, fascinating tales of record fish, of trapline, beside a roaring fire, peaceful pipes and a solemn vow to return in the none too distant future, outside the haunting call of a loon echoes and re-echoes across the lake. "And so to bed."

Many such places are within easy reach of everyone, inexpensive, too, just ask the Shell man, he has up-to-date information on these places, gathered for your convenience and entirely without obligation.

Current Sport

By The Observer

Starting the 1931 baseball season with a team that had been strong at the finish of last year and now participating in the Intercounty Old Timers, the Provincial title is the ambition of Clifford's "Athletics" of Napanee. "Frank Gibbard, the energetic sponsor of the team, need very good judgment when he engaged Walter Gerow of the Belleville Nationals to coach his team. The result seemed to be said in favour of the work that Walt. Gerow has accomplished with the Gibbard team. Each player on the club go to bat for Gerow and the result is that Walt has perfect harmony prevailing among the players.

Gibbard's may not play the Rednay "Sod-Busters" in the intermediate finals. For the information of the sport fans it should be known that Napanee is a small town north west of St. Thomas. The "Sod-Busters" have a fine team this year as they have eliminated Milton, last year's Allendale finalists, in two straight games. The hearty wishes of the Intelligencer sport desk Gibbard's in their efforts to win a provincial championship.

The first game of the intersocialo finals between Rodney and Gibbard's at Napanee will be played at Napanee at 2.30 p.m. on Saturday with the return game in Rodney next Wednesday afternoon. Word was last received this morning.

The wrestling fans of Belleville have a race track in store for them next week. They are fast forward to stage a wrestling bout in the Belleville arena in the near future. If the project is a financial success, a tournament inland staging one next each week until the hockey season opens. The matches will be under the supervision of the Ontario Athletic Commission and nothing but "top-notchers" will be seen in the ring while. The ever growing sport has gone over big in the big centres and it has been suggested that the sport fans of Belleville should take the opportunity of seeing the "grapplers". Later, when plans will be completed we cannot say as yet. The promoters are endeavoring to give the fans the very best artists that can be procured.

Two ex-team mates, who once played together on the famous world's champion Ottawa hockey team, have received distinction in the hockey realms. Sprague Cleghorn has been named manager of the Montreal Maroons while Frank "Duick" Nighbor was signed as manager of the Canadian team of the International Hockey League. Many of these players are veterans of many a campaign and their knowledge of the game is no way limited. The younger players under their tuition, will gain a world of experience from these seasoned veterans.

Today's game between the local lawyers and doctors has been postponed until next Thursday. It was at the request of the "medical men" that the match was held over. The lawyers are now wondering who will have to get up on the mound saying over the "case". (?)

The annual meeting of the Macedonia Hockey Club was held in the office of the President, George E. Fairbrd, this evening, when plans for the coming season were discussed and the officers elected for the current year. Last year's activities were highly successful by the President, who expressed his best wishes to the boys, one of the club during the coming season.

For the election of officers for the current year the chair was occupied by H. F. Bowen, and the following will direct the activities of the club this season: President, George T. Fairford; Vice-President, C. D. Lyon; Secretary-Treasurer, J. J. Kerr; Manager, Dr. H. A. Kelly; Trainer, Gerry Hall; Assistant Trainers, Frank Reynolds. A. Countryman.

CHURCH RELIEF WORK

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 18.—From all over Canada, reports are reaching here of relief activities, according to Rev. John Coburn of Toronto, organizer of the National Emergency Relief Committee of the United Church of Canada.

BRIDGE ST. W.M.S.

On Friday the regular monthly meeting of the Bridge Street W. M. S. was held. Mrs. Risbridger read and opened the service with the hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers" followed by prayer. The minutes of the June meeting were read and adopted and the business arising received. The corresponding secretary reported the sending of several letters of sympathy. The supply secretary reported that articles for the missionary box be sent to her home before the 18th of the month. Mrs. Bishop read a letter of appeal for contributions of cloth ing for needy people in the West.

Mrs. W. R. Deacon took charge of the program and opened it with the hymn, "Hark the Voice of Jesus Calling." Mrs. Geo. Beckwith read a scripture lesson from the Third Psalm and Mrs. Fred Hoskins contributed a delightful solo. Dr. Bishop was present and gave an interesting address on Medical Missions, giving report of some features of the meeting of the World's Alliance of the Y.M.C.A. which was held in Cleveland, Ohio, during the summer. Mrs. Bishop and Mrs. Deacon were the delegates from Canada.

Dr. Bishop said that it was a "parliament of the nations", most representative and diversified that he had attended. It was unique in that there was present there was no race superiority, and the problems discussed were those of humanity.

Dr. Bishop spoke of the problems of language in a convention composed of people with such a diversity of languages. Five interpreters were given in one of three languages, English, French, German and were at once translated into the other languages by the interpreters at their elbows.

The hymns were all printed in the language spoken and were so sung.

In all previous gatherings of a like nature, the leadership had been held by members of the white races, this was not the case at the Cleveland convention. While Dr. John R. Mott occupied the first place, Dr. Kanjiani Nasimi, a Hindu, was the second place, a man of arresting personality who spoke the most perfect English and did it with flawless diction.

Mrs. Bishop closed the meeting with prayer, after which a cup of tea was served by members of Mrs. Deacon's group.

Woman Speaks Before Synod

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17.—For the first time in the long history of the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada a woman's voice was heard yesterday from the platform as the deliberations of that body.

Worrell, Archbishop of Montreal, Primate of the General Synod, to a seat on the platform. When the report of the Missionary Society was being presented, other members of the Executive Board of the W. A. were honored with seats on the floor of the House.

Addressing the joint sessions of the Upper and Lower House, Mrs. Ferrabee declared the need for the spiritual and educational work of the W. A. was to be found in the Finance Department.

"We believe in prayer," she said, "we give as we pray and serve."

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

Leaning over the railing Adela extended her hand, and Jilo raised it to his lips. "Ah, pues de la!" He murmured the old courtly Spanish phrase and his voice was the voice of one speaking to some holy being. A little throb of pain caught Radcliffe's ear as he watched. Children of the desert, those two, sharing a world where he was indeed an alien. Then he smiled and, reaching down, grasped Jilo's hand.

"Well done," he said. "You are a true brother of the North Wind."

Jilo's delighted smile grew broader. "A thousand thanks to the big American."

He felt the strength of Radcliffe's grasp and nodded in approval as he saw his horny callosities, while about him clustered his vaqueros. Slowly Jilo's own huge fingers tightened and Radcliffe tried to straighten, but the Mexican's hand held his own now with a steel clasp. Again Jilo's eyes were gleaming.

"Men say," he smiled lazily up, "that the big American is a great wrestler, that he has a grip like the mountain grizzly. It would be good sometimes to see which of us should first taste the desert's dust in such a contest."

Ted felt the girl's eyes upon him. He forced his lips to smile. "When ever you like, Jilo mio," he replied easily.

"Bueno. Let it be now, then. Let us see if there is one on the border stronger than Jilo."

Morales interposed with a frown. "Silence. This gentleman is our guest." He turned to Ted, "Jilo has the manners of a goat. Excuse him him is like strong drink. You will forgive him?"

Again Jilo smiled. "But surely so strong a man must be glad to test his strength."

Ted was neither looking at Morales nor listening to the other's words. That iron grip from below was pulling him still lower along the rail. Some answering spark kindled within him. It was as if two naked souls had recognized beyond all uncertainty the weakness of an enemy. Suddenly hot blood surged to his head as he saw there looking down at the Mexican's challenging eyes. Placing his free hand on the rail, he vaulted over and stood on the side Jilo's horse. Then, without effort, he pulled the Mexican's right arm about the Mexican's waist and pulled him slowly from the saddle.

They stood face to face now, in the center of the crowded, hushed circle, directly beneath the little group in the stand. Alert, poised, bending easily, eyes still smiling warily. As the Mexican step ped back, Ted threw his cheek aside.

"Ready?" he asked.

Jilo raised his black eyes. "Si. Always ready."

They swung together with a thudding neck-hold. The cords on Jilo's throat stood out, his breath whistled. Mercilessly the hold tightened as Ted slipped his right hand forward, locking his arms together.

Adela Morales isn't afraid of anything on earth. Apprehensive, perhaps. I think she sensed danger to you in Jilo's anger."

"But he wasn't angry."

"Neither you nor I can say what was in Jilo's mind. Not a very wise act, you know, to risk making an enemy of him, and I think Adela was troubled with the same thought. You see, Jilo happens to be jealous of you."

"Of me? Don't be an ass."

"My boy, Jilo would be jealous of Saint Anthony if Adela smiled on him in just the same fashion that she once or twice has smiled on you."

Then Don Bob laughed a little envious laugh at the quick flash on Ted's cheek and lighted still another of his cigarettes.

"But what do you make of Morales and his lady?"

"About father? I think he lied."

"I, too. But I'm wondering why he should be so painstakingly civil to you unless perhaps because of Adela."

"Can't it because Morales finds it less burdensome to be friendly than otherwise? He strikes me as one of those who would rather forget all the unpleasant things of life, like the suffering he himself causes."

"Perhaps. Always provided he can get what he wants without causing him trouble. But the real thing counts with Paco Morales. He is one of the world's realists. That's why I think he hadn't rolled that fifty to read. It hurt him in the eyes of his men, I'll bet. The prestige of Morales."

"Bob, you don't for a single moment mean that these people are dangerous to you? It seems so unbelievable that this suave, courtly old fellow could ever think in terms of cold steel and murder. You don't mean that, do you?"

"I mean Ted, you're in Mexico. You are in the borderland, where Morales is the law. Listen to the many signs of bad omen. For one thing, I think you're growing fond of Adela, and that won't be particularly appetizing to either Jilo or Morales."

"Not even when they realize that I'm unselfishly and cordially be inclined enough to fall in love with one of the richest girls in Mexico?"

"That might make them feel better, but it wouldn't make a bit of difference to Adela."

"God bless her for that. And for your own peace of mind, I'll ask no one to share my home and fortune until I first acquire a home and fortune."

Morales and Jilo will both commend your resolution, old son. In the meantime, dash into those clothes. It's half-past cocktail hour and that is one of the sacred institutions here."

But it was Ted who finished first. Running down the heavily carpeted stairs he came upon Adela standing by the tall mirror window, beyond which the last yellow streaks of sun light were turning to purple and violet. He stopped, held breathless by the radiance of the picture. For Adela, perhaps to please her uncle, had come down to dinner dressed in the fashion of the haciendas of Spain. The gown itself was of shimmering black lace that shattered the fading sunlight into a thousand flames was surmounted by a great amber comb, edged in jade. From her shoulders fell in soft folds a fringed Spanish shawl, pure white in color, except for a wide scarlet embroidered on it a single red rose, about which clusters of yellow leaves matched the jade of the comb. So she stood there, tall and slender, looking out over the darkening desert, dimming, it seemed to him, even the sunlight with her loveliness. Once his lips parted to speak, but closed again.

She smiled up at him. "What were you thinking?"

He answered slowly. "I was thinking you're the most beautiful thing in the world."

Her eyes made him feel suddenly awkward and impatient at his own clumsiness.

"You learn Spanish ways very quickly, Ted Radcliffe."

He shook his head. "No, that wasn't Spanish. It's simply what I was thinking—on my honor, if I offended, I'm sorry, but I meant it quite innocently. I meant just those that to me, standing there as you are now—I have never seen anyone so beautiful."

She laughed into his eyes. "And by way of apology you repeat it four times. No, I am not offended. Perhaps I'm pleased. Every girl likes whether she believes it or not. Only it sounds so terribly easy to say that sort of thing, and I don't like you to be too ready at saying nice things to me." She looked toward the stairs. "What do you think, Don Bob?"

He came slowly toward them. "Just now I think you're a very beautiful little lady," he announced gravely.

"That's downright plagiarism," objected Radcliffe, "I said it first."

CONTROL OF WHEAT HERE

United States and Canada Ochrol Visible Supply

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17.—A special Scratch to The Globe from Ochrol says:

A report published by the Agricultural Statistics Branch of the Bureau of Statistics confirms the Chicago wheat pit reports that the United States and Canada contain a large portion of the world's visible supply of high-grade wheat.

According to information available here, there will be an exportable surplus of 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in Russia this year, both of low grade as high as the Canadian wheat.

As to Argentina, it is too early to tell what the harvest will be, as the crop there is only as far advanced as the Canadian crop would be in June.

The Australian crop is just through the ground.

Up to the present time, Canada has made no arrangements for the marketing of wheat in China, but the United States is disposing of about carload to the Orient by the arrangement of credits through the International Stabilization Government.

Hon. Herbert S. Marler, Canadian Minister to Tokio, visited China recently and, although the object of securing a contract for Canadian wheat but the situation was such that no sales were arranged for at that time.

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Meanwhile the cowardly crew of the "Arrow" pulled rapidly for the ship. Tarzan watched. The most wonderful sight of all to him was the face of the beautiful white girl Here at last was one of his own kind. He decided to follow the young Clayton and learn his errand

Presently Tarzan came up with him. Clayton was lost. At intervals he called aloud. Tarzan decided he was searching for the old man. Suddenly Tarzan caught the yellow glint of a lion's hide moving cautiously toward the unsuspecting young man. It was Sheeta the leopard, creeping for the spring!

And then, shrill and horrible, there rose upon the jungle stillness the awful cry of the challenging ape. Sheeta hesitated, then turned, crashing into the undergrowth. Clayton's blood ran cold—he felt the icy fingers of fear upon his heart. Never had so fearful a sound smote upon his ears.

Clayton could not know that to that very voice he owed his life nor that the creature who hurled it fourth was his own cousin—the real Lord Greystoke. He stated trembling back to where he thought the cabin lay. Darkness was quickly settling in. Heavenal—to die here alive.

Presently he heard a faint sound. Then he saw it! The little body of a huge lion. Agonized he watched —powerless to fly. Came a noise above him, as sirrow hit the beast, who sprang in pain and terror. Then a naked giant dropped from the tree above—squarely on the brute's back!

BANK WARNS ELECTION MAY CREATE RISK

Premier Informed Appeal To British Voters Danger

FALL IN EXCHANGE

London, Sept. 18.—The London Daily Mail this morning says the Board of Governors of the Bank of England have taken the unprecedented step of visiting the House of Commons to inform the Prime Minister that the National Government must remain in power at least two years, as a change in the exchange is to be avoided.

The Mail for several days has been conducting an energetic campaign against the Conservative proposals for an early general election. Its story this morning was published under heavy headlines.

"The affairs of the nation reached a position of extreme gravity on Thursday," it said. "Information was conveyed to the Government from the City (London's financial centre) that a grave exchange situation exists ..... and it would appear, on reports that conveyed to the Government, that the crisis at this time has a profound effect on British credit. This crisis has come about all other considerations save those of national existence must be put aside."

Lord Revelstoke, Governor of the Bank, the paper said, acted the Government to make a declaration of announcement that he would be no general election, and that the Government remain in power for the full possible term of two years. It said that his board gave Premier Ramsay MacDonald "an alarming estimate" of the extent of fall in the exchange which would follow any announcement that an election had been decided upon.

Liberals Oppose Tariffs

Liberal Party members of Parliament, at a party meeting in the House of Commons tonight, voted on a strong and unanimous hostility to any proposals for an early general election.

Sir Herbert Samuel, Acting Liberal Leader, and Home Secretary in the National Government, presided and he and other members present there should be no election until the summer of 1932, when the National Government was formed has been achieved. This purpose, he stressed was to restore confidence in the pound sterling. He added that the Government's task is to accomplish its task of securing the safety of the national financial position.

It was understood the views expressed at the meeting, although not embodied in a resolution, would be conveyed to the Prime Minister. The tariff question was not discussed.

Earlier in the day, however, the Liberal Party Executive Committee adopted a resolution which expressed its opposition to tariffs, although reaffirming its support for the National Government. "Recovery of world trade is hampered, not aided by payment of international war debts and reparations, but also by tariffs which disturb the exchange of commodities, between nations, reduce the purchasing power of the people, and have failed in other countries to remove unemployment," the resolution said. "General tariff is this moment would be no solution for our difficulties."

The well, flowing at the rate of more than five million cubic feet daily, caught fire, while it was being cleaned. PAST IS PAST WITHIN NAVY

No Punishments To Be Imposed On Men Involved

London, Sept. 18.—"The past is past," declared Sir Austen Chamberlain, First Lord of the Admiralty, in the House of Commons this Thursday evening. "It is in the interests of the Royal Navy and those outside the Navy to forget it."

Sir Austen was opening his debate on the mutiny in naval pay which the Labrour Opposition had demanded for since yesterday. But to the surprise of everybody the debate was short-lived. The speech of Sir Austen and the Labour benches failed to materialize. After the Admiralty statement, the two private members who followed, Col. Lane-Joynson, the mover, by general consent allowed to drop.

"It speaks well for general discipline," said Sir. Austen, "that the matter should have passed so quietly with its distinguished speech in the usual routine of duty." He announced the intention of the Admiralty to investigate all cases of hardship arising from pay reductions, and he intimated that men involved in the unrest would not suffer penalties.

The matter was forwarded to the future, Sir A. concluded confidently on the traditions of the Navy. He paid a tribute to the Commander-in-Chief of the Fleet, who he said, had handled the affair well.

Earlier in the day Sir Austen stated that if any more naval ratings refused to obey orders they would immediately be dealt with under the Navy Discipline Act.

VARIED ACTS WELL RECEIVED

Vaudeville Show Given at Karnival Best of Entire Week

Programme of vaudeville on Thursday night was perhaps the most varied bill that has been presented at the Kiwanis Karnival this year.

The Bow Sisters in their acrobatic posing and high kicking numbers received considerable applause from the patrons, and those little girls presented a very neat act and were well received by the public.

Myrtle Rosellen, world's champion lady saxophonist, delighted the audience with a ten minute exhibition of clog dancing. The little lady has the stage all to herself and a hardwood floor as she had to perform on the stage that is supplied at the Karnival. Had she been given an open platform the result would have been much better.

Jack Lyle entertained the patrons with a very funny tramp comedy act. He is a comedian and he gave a comedy talk act. It might be added that Mr. Lyle is a volunteer in the R.K.O. circuit and his comedy talk was over with a bang last night.

Ernie Bruce, with his usual Scotch uniform, gave the patrons many a laugh. He played the saxophone, and funny sayings kept the patrons in an uproar all evening. It might be added that "Slim" has made such a name for himself that he has been engaged as master of ceremonies for next year's show.

Tonight's vaudeville promises to be the best of the week. All that are what is known as big time and the patrons are assured of a real high class entertainment.

HYDRO RATES WILL BE DOWN

Not All Contracts in Nine Years Past Will Be Probed

Stirling, Sept. 18 — Electric power users of Stirling will be greatly benefited by the news learn that they will receive a rebate which approximately amounts to two months' bills—this applies to only customers who were supplied years last year, says the News-Argus. There has been a slight change in the rates, the domestic users being the only customers materially affected, and these will be lowered.

This was a meeting of the Stirling Hydro-Electric Commission, held in Toronto and considerable business was passed bringing into effect new rates to users of electricity on the Stirling Hydro-Electric System. The new rates are designed to grant a rebate to consumers of the system during 1930. The change in rates and the rebate has been approved by the Hydro Electric Power Commission and will bring Stirling's tariffs into line with the standard system and basis of billing as used by Hydro municipalities throughout Ontario. The effect of the new rates will be particularly felt by domestic consumers where the saving will be in the neighborhood of $800.00 per year. It is estimated that over $1900.00 will be distributed to the consumers during the year.

Presented With Gift

On Saturday evening, August 29th, the home of Mrs. James Ryan was invaded by a large number of friends and neighbors who met to do honor to her daughter, Mary, who is soon to be married and was presented with a beautiful eight day clock and many other useful articles. At nine o'clock the gathering was called to order by Ben Bleecker and the following address was read by Miss Vera Hoar:

Dear Mary,—We have learned of your approaching marriage, and as your neighbors, friends and old school mates, we could not allow such an important event in your life to pass without some recognition on our part.

We have come to pass this one night with the most cordial feelings of affection and esteem, not only for yourself, but your family as well, your mother, Leo and Madeline.

We have always known you, Mary, intimately, from childhood, and have never had occasion to change our minds concerning your true worth. We have found you always willing to help in the activities of our neighborhood, be it work or pleasure. You have proved to be considerate to your elders and from your every day life among us, we have seen what a good daughter you have been in your home, a fact which augurs well for the happiness of your future home.

Before we part, we would ask you to accept this gift, not as a token or reminder of the love and affection of the neighbors and friends present, but Sidney home. And along with it, we wish for you and your husband to be, many years of happiness, health and prosperity.

Signed on behalf of your friends in Sidney—

Myrtle Reid.
Aletta Horton.
Mildred Reid.
Willis Faulkner.

After the reading of the address, Miss Ryan made a very suitable reply, thanking them all for their many kind acts. Speeches were made by Ben Bleecker and Harry Faulkner. A dainty lunch was served at the close.

Don't go through life so fast-you'll miss a friendship saved by the time you're fifty.—John Galsworthy.

PRESENTATION

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Forestell,

Dear Mary and Wilfred—

We, your friends and neighbors are gathered here tonight to convey to you our most sincere wishes for your every happiness in your voyage through matrimony.

We realize, Mary, that your leaving here will not only be a loss to your home but to our community. Most of us here have known you from childhood and have learned to love you by your quiet manner and sunny disposition, so we feel that when you go to Mo-Mo-ing for not less than as many friends there as you have left here.

Mr. Forestell you are but slightly known in this community, but those of us who have the pleasure of knowing you intimately have always found you to be of a steady and reliable character, we wish to extend to you our sincere congratulations in the judgement you used in picking Mary as your life mate, and believe we have got the best one who can be depended upon.

Mary you will have new ties, duties and responsibilities to contend with but we know you are capable, trusting every one with success as you always have.

We hope you accept these gifts not for their value but as a token of our friendship. Remember and also you use them they will bring back happy reminiscences of your friends and neighbors here.

Signed on behalf of the community:

Mabel McAvoy.
Mrs. Fredrick D. Carroll.
Stafford Roley.

Mr. Forestell and Mrs. Bride thanked their friends and invited everyone to visit them at their home in Sidney. A dainty lunch was served by the ladies to one hundred and fifty guests present. The rest of the evening was spent in dancing until the wee small hours of the morning, after which the gathering broke up all wishing the happy couple a long and prosperous wedded life.

JAPAN DECIDES TO CEASE AGGRESSIVE ACTION

Situation Easier Today Chinese and Japanese Hope to Localize 'War'

Statements of Japanese and Chinese Are in Conflict

CABINET MEETING

Chinese Officials Generally Preserve Air of Silence

By The Associated Press

Diplomatic relations between China and Japan were acutely threatened today by the outbreak near the capital of Manchuria by Japanese troops and the bombing of the Japanese force in China proper.

Japanese troops attacked and captured the walled city of Mukden and another force landed at Chinchow on the south east of the Shanhaikuan Peninsula, midway between the southernmost Manchurian province and Shanghai.

The Japanese attributed their action to the alleged destruction of a section of the South Manchuria Railway, operated by the Japanese government, in a brawl, now. The Chinese contended that the railway was destroyed by the Japanese themselves as a pretext for the attack on Mukden.

The Japanese Cabinet in Tokyo issued orders that the situation should be "localized" and prevented from spreading. Chinese foreign office officials in Nanking said they had received no official information as yet, and expressed hope that the trouble would be "localized."

Situation Easier

The situation today was reregarded as somewhat easier. The Japanese government announced that Tokyo would make every effort not to enlarge upon the affair. The cabinet let it be known that all the Japanese reinforcements landed at Mukden would be withdrawn as soon as the situation returned to normal.

Several hours passed without clashes, first at Yetiaying and then at Kwanchengtze, three miles away, as rival fighting on a large scale according to reports.

At one time, however, both sides were preparing to bring up heavy artillery. The Japanese were reported to have fired not more than a dozen shells and the Chinese had answered some light artillery, but it apparently had no effect whatever.

The village of Peiliying and some nearby barracks apparently were destroyed, but whether by Japanese artillery or fire was not clear.

Reports on Bridge

Reports were made on the railway bridge allegedly attacked by the Chinese and a train proceeded across it soon afterward.

Japan has about 20,000 Nationals in Mukden and about 13,000 troops in Manchuria. These troops include the railway garrisons. It was indicated here that the Chinese troops in the Mukden region number about 14,000 and the Japanese railway force in Manchuria about 331,000.

Dispatches from Mukden said the Japanese troops had raided the home of General Tang Chao, chief of staff of the Manchurian army. They failed to find the general, however, but arrested ten members of his staff.

Troops under Marshal Tang were officially reported to have executed Captain Shintaro Nakamura and another Japanese as well as a Korean soldier and a Russian in Mongolia recently as spies.

Nanking, China, Sept. 19 (AP) — Surprise was expressed by persons experienced in official circles in the Chinese capital today upon receipt of press reports that Chinese and Japanese troops had clashed at Mukden.

Lacking official confirmation, Chinese leaders attributed definite command.

C. C. Wang, foreign minister, said in the absence of official reports he was also unwilling to believe the affair was strictly local and would not develop into an international issue or lead to a break in relations with Japan.

Although Chang Hsueh-Liang, the Governor of Manchuria and Vice Chairman of the Nationalist Government of the Nationalist Government, received reports concerning the Mukden affair, he thus far has failed to relay the information to Nanking.

Hence the Nationalist Government has not officially learned whether the trouble was a purely local military clash or premeditated occupation of the Manchurian capital by Japanese forces.

Northern Jobless Seek Work in Toronto

Toronto, Sept. 19. — Hopeful of finding work, unemployed men are coming to Toronto, according to observations made by Relief Commissioner George Ramsden said today a party of seventy-five jobless had reached the city from Northern Ontario on Thursday, followed by another fifty yesterday from the same district.

LLOYD GEORGE MYSTERY MAN OF G. BRITAIN

Silence Retained A 11 Through Recent Political Crisis

THREE COURSES

Liberals Revolt Might Upset National Government

London, Sept. 19 — Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George, Liberal leader, has become the mystery man of the British crisis.

One hour dissolution of parliament is imminent with the National Government pledging it will go the country on a national programme; the basis, a general election slips into the background. Members are excited over the possibility another rumor of the flight from the pound, then the hubbub is stilled with a terse statement from the "city."

And through it all, Lloyd George, the one man usually ready with a pungent epigram, the man who forged to the front in the war days, the spokesman of the "Limpet Chair" one writer calls him as he sits at his country home in Churt, Surrey, remains silent, holding his tine.

The portrait of a serious operation Lloyd George disappeared from the parliamentary scene just before the Summer recess, which started July 31, was the talk yesterday in National Cabinet, are both emphatic that Thursday's and Friday's negotiations which led to the National Government's formation, Mr. Lloyd George was consulted and his approval secured. His son and daughter—both voted in the House of Commons with the government.

His Silence

But throughout all the clamor of the last fortnight Lloyd George has remained ruthlessly silent. Correspondents wait dutifully at Liberal headquarters for him to come up with a message from "Ll. G.". But no message comes—or at any rate, none is made public. Reporters ring at his condition that do not agree.

The new public career he before Prime Minister MacDonald when the new National Government has completed the task for which it was formed—stabilizing finance. They are:

1—The course originally indicated by the Liberal leader in his address.

2—Continuance in office with the policy of protection.

3—Dissolution of parliament, general elections at the end of October with the National Government again standing as the country on a new national party on a program of national reconstruction, including tariffs.

The last course has been generally rejected. The second would mean continuance of the present Government of Sir Herbert Samuel and other Liberal free traders; possibly the first that branch free trade, Sir Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer opposes on the night cessitate reconstitution of the government.

To the third course Liberals are divided. Those who support Liberals say an early dissolution means an. under "coupon election" that that of 1918 when the coupled the Liberal lapse of the Liberal party and ushered in the era of protection by which they are opposed.

Two Factions

And as the pawns are moved at Westminster, the Liberal party itself may win one victory when may be returned. The party champs are strengthened in each hands, still the electorate speaks. He holds the balance of power in the House mons even more than before. A Liberal free trade revolt might easily defeat the government. But again that would mean the dissolution the Liberals do not want.

PHEASANTS ARE KILLED BY HUNTERS?

Complaints Made That Birds Destroyed By Duckmen

FARMERS ANGERED

Farmers Raise Birds From Eggs From Department

It has been brought to the attention of the authorities that duck hunters are taking pot shots at pheasants in Sidney Township and those responsible, if caught, will be hailed into court and heavily fined. Some time ago the Canada geese in the Belleville district were shot and it cost the perpetrators a considerable sum.

The pheasants now running at large in Sidney Township have been raised by farmers in that district, eggs and live birds being sent to the district by the Department of Game and Fisheries. It is the purpose of the farmers to increase these pheasants so that in a few years the hunters of the district may enjoy a day's hunting the same as ducks enjoy in the Niagara Peninsula. At present there is a close season for pheasants in this district. It is to be hoped that the practice will cease.

The pheasants that have been ruthlessly shot are harmless creatures and should be protected.

Open Controversy Between Churches Over Birth Control

Possibility Canvasses By Delegates at Secret Meeting

Denver, Colo., Sept. 19.—A secret meeting of the House of Bishops held this week in the Triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The session, called to consider the action of the Lambeth Conference of England "on certain subjects" was believed to have been a discussion of questions regarding birth control, divorce and marriage.

The call to the House of Bishops were waived to permit the attendance of Dr. Charles Clifton Washburn, Jurist Bishop Irving Peake Johnson of Colorado, in urging the secret session, termed the action of the Lambeth Conference "on certain subjects" embarrassing to him, and to the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Delegates speculated over the possibility of an open controversy between the English Church and the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States on the question of birth control.

It was intimated that many United States Bishops, outnumbered at the Lambeth Conference, felt they were put in a false light through their attendance at the meeting which voted in favor of the exercise of birth control in certain instances.

Just what action the House of Bishops would take was a matter of speculation, but some convention leaders believe a plan may be evolved for a meeting of the United States Church and that element of the British Church in the United States.

At the same time, church Liberals prepared to oppose the stand of Conservatives, whose views were outlined last night in a radio address opening the convention. Bishop Ingle had expressed himself publicly on an open letter from Henry B. Booth, lay delegate from Detroit, accusing the Bishop of advising delegates to go to the convention with "closed minds".

Then just for variety there will be a business calling contest, and if you can call your husband by his first name louder than anybody else, then the cash prize will be yours. This will also be watermelon night for the Kiwanians themselves for they will have the stage and compete in an old-fashioned watermelon eating competition. This should be worth the price of admission alone.

LLOYD GEORGE MYSTERY MAN OF G. BRITAIN

Silence Retained A 11 Through Recent Political Crisis

THREE COURSES

Liberals Revolt Might Upset National Government

London, Sept. 19 — Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George, Liberal leader, has become the mystery man of the British crisis.

One hour dissolution of parliament is imminent with the National Government pledging it will go the country on a national programme; the basis, a general election slips into the background. Members are excited over the possibility another rumor of the flight from the pound, then the hubbub is stilled with a terse statement from the "city."

And through it all, Lloyd George, the one man usually ready with a pungent epigram, the man who forged to the front in the war days, the spokesman of the "Limpet Chair" one writer calls him as he sits at his country home in Churt, Surrey, remains silent, holding his tine.

The portrait of a serious operation Lloyd George disappeared from the parliamentary scene just before the Summer recess, which started July 31, was the talk yesterday in National Cabinet, are both emphatic that Thursday's and Friday's negotiations which led to the National Government's formation, Mr. Lloyd George was consulted and his approval secured. His son and daughter—both voted in the House of Commons with the government.

His Silence

But throughout all the clamor of the last fortnight Lloyd George has remained ruthlessly silent. Correspondents wait dutifully at Liberal headquarters for him to come up with a message from "Ll. G.". But no message comes—or at any rate, none is made public. Reporters ring at his condition that do not agree.

The new public career he before Prime Minister MacDonald when the new National Government has completed the task for which it was formed—stabilizing finance. They are:

1—The course originally indicated by the Liberal leader in his address.

2—Continuance in office with the policy of protection.

3—Dissolution of parliament, general elections at the end of October with the National Government standing as the country on a new national party on a program of national reconstruction, including tariffs.

The last course has been generally rejected. The second would mean continuance of the present Government of Sir Herbert Samuel and other Liberal free traders; possibly the first that branch free trade, Sir Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer opposes on the night cessitate reconstitution of the government.

To the third course Liberals are divided. Those who support Liberals say an early dissolution means an. under "coupon election" that that of 1918 when the coupled the Liberal lapse of the Liberal party and ushered in the era of protection by which they are opposed.

Two Factions

And as the pawns are moved at Westminster, the Liberal party itself may win one victory when may be returned. The party champs are strengthened in each hands, still the electorate speaks. He holds the balance of power in the House mons even more than before. A Liberal free trade revolt might easily defeat the government. But again that would mean the dissolution the Liberals do not want.

Letters to the Editor

PLEA FOR LABOR

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir—

I notice in last night's paper that there is a big storm afoot with regard to start work on North Front Street pavement operations. I went around to see if that was true and sure enough there was a huge big affair that looked as though it could do the work of dozens of men and probably do it more quickly, but in these times of unemployment and the hardships that go with it, do we want this? for I venture to say that this new monster will virtually take the food away from hundreds of needy just for the sake of saving some time.

The broad of the world today is the result of trying to do things more quickly and cheaply and it would seem to me that this is a golden opportunity for the council to step in and call a halt on this steam shovel procedure and put some men on the job.

Yours,

"INTERESTED."

Styles as in 1932

Fashion in a romantic mood organized the audiences at the Canadian Department Store Style Review given by the Rivenia Karnival last evening. Inspired by the more colourful pages of history, the gracious age when romance was young and gowns were elegant, the costumes that passed in review had a charm that appealed to the imagination of the audience. Millinery in keeping with the trends of the mode was supplied by the C. D. R. while the costumes for coats and the magnificent jewelry were exhibited by Delaney's and the Angus McPee stores respectively.

Nearly all line and fabric made the garments shown by the C. D. R. outstanding in fashions for the coming season. The rich new shades, warm browns and deep blues, the unusually popular black, and the varied tones of the evening gowns gave the Review its brilliant appearance. Coats, fashioned with flaring cavalry models added to the figure, hats that exploited the beauty of the millinery world added to the success of the Canadian Department Store review. The collection of gowns and precious stones shown by the Angus McPee store were the highlights in the Style Parade last evening. Flawless appointments of hair were noticeable throughout the evening by the manequins. The opening scene of the evening gowns the display of jewelry reached its climax, for the first time in public in the local evening gown, Mrs. Kerr was wearing a thousand dollars worth of jewelry, the most expensive array ever seen on an manequin in Belleville. An aquamarine drop diamond bracelet, and diamond ring mounted in platinum, the evening jewelry. Many of the models showed the latest innovations in hair dress, a caste complement to the stunning dresses they wore. Miss McPee also showed costume jewelry for every occasion, and a variety of accessories, sports and even the tailleur. The leather handbags shown in the latter were also supplied by this jewelry store and were smart additions to the costumes.

Afternoon, bridge, dinner, sports and dance frocks were shown. Introduced was a clever variation of the popular bolero, a short jacket of velvet in Porto brown shade. It is sun ray pleated, sleeveless and widened shoulder line and the dress was a model in satin of the hard creation. A model in rust and black after Chanel, adapted for the new mode was also featured front was a clever touch.

Dinner gowns were shown in black for women and one unusual model was fuchsia cut, had the new draped neck giving dignity to the gown. Black velvet while lace was a happy combination in a dinner or semi-evening gown. Models in this class also this particular dress had a removable jacket for the "after the play" duty. Black satin was a medium much used for the dinner gowns combined with flesh georgette enervated with rhinestone buckles. Sunset manner was greatly admired.

Sports Wear

For sports wear Chanel's homespun in rust wool showed the importance it assumed in the 1932 wardrobe.

Coats Last Word

The coats modelled were the last word in fashion and were worn with grace by the manequins. Black proidominated and was shown in a model of black broadcloth trimmed with rich mink tails, an exclusive fur for this season's wearing apparel. An Empress Eugenie model was developed in black velvet trimmed with lavish trimmings of electric seal.

English boucle in green made a striking cost with high waisted effect and full skirt. A model in camel kit fox, a soft, luxurious fur, struck a note of distinction in collar and cuffs of a navy Blum velvet coat.

An Empire model used Blin's Vision Royale in brown with puff sleeves, sharp collar and deep shirt border of electric seal. Other outstanding coats included a beige fur cost of Lucille with the new side fastening effect and the higher waist effect. Gray squirrel was used for trimming a new cost of beautiful lines.

Evening Gowns

The glamorous evening gowns won the instant applause of the audience. The first to be shown was introduced by Mrs. Kerr and was of black Lanvi crepe featuring Paul Poiret's plaeuna line and was worn over a petticoat of white. Miss Bell was seen in a filmy gown of flame georgette with the new Vionnet bell butterfly sleeve, a charming dress shown by Miss Ray was of Second Empire creation, developed in sky blue satin with peplum outlined in rhinestones.

Mrs. Burley's gown was of Chanel's circus model, in this cut giving it a youthful air. Mrs. Roberts also introduced this shade in chiffon velvet with a circular flare, a swing effect was achieved in the bias trimming of green by Mme Rainbird while Miss Emerson wore for contrast a cleverly cut black dress trimmed with white georgette and rhinestones.

Gowns Costs Lovely

The Delaney furs worn through out the evening were all truly luxurious and gave a twinge of envy to many a feminine beholder. They included a Hudson Seal coat with novel collar of seal and Kolinsky and a model of the same fur featuring a large collar of beautifully matched mink, the new flared quill cuffs and unusual back arrangement.

A black French carsaul coat had a Kolinsky collar, with a scarf fitted line to the wrap showing its 1932 style note. Imitation leopard, with Persian lamb collar and cuffs had the fitted lines that followed the latest fashion trends. A silver muskrat coat had a collar of Kolinsky, beige fur and was fashion blended muskrat used the blouse back and flared skirt effect. POTATOES PRICES

It seems reasonable to ask what potatoes are worth, and why. If Long Island potatoes bought wholesale in New York are worth $1.75 with insurance and freight added, to Cuba, and then become worth $2.50 how much would the grower get? If Prince Edward County potatoes wholesale in Toronto at 60 cts. and the grower gets 30 cts. what is the commission of the grower, the goaty Getting tubers from the field to the kitchen appears to be the major task in the industry. There should be some way of simplifying it.—Telegram.

Weddings

ALEXANDER—WALLACE

The beautiful new edifice of the United Church at Newtonville was the scene of a pretty wedding on September 9th, when Hilda May, eldest daughter of Rev. Thomas and Mrs. Wallace, was united in marriage to Mr. Herbert T. Alexander, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Alexander of "Crescent Farm," Burke's Falls. The church was decorated with flowers and ferns.

The bride entered with her father and was charming in a gown of egg shell satin, fashioned on Princess lines with bodice of lace. Her long veil was carried by her sister, Miss Mabel. It was prettily arranged in cap effect and held in place by a ribbon and a coronet of orange blossoms. Her shower bouquet was of Ophelia roses, lilies of the valley and maiden hair fern with streamers of knotted ribbons. She wore a white gold bracelet watch, the gift of the groom.

Her sister, Miss Elsie Wallace, was bridesmaid, attired in peach net over silk and large picture hat and carried roses and fern.

Mr. Ivan Alexander attended his brothers.

Rev. T. Wallace, father of the bride, officiated, assisted by Rev. T. William Sterling of Colborne, uncle of the bride.

Immediately following the ceremony, Miss B. Thompson presented to Mr. and Mrs. Alexander on behalf of the congregation a tea set and kymnary. She spoke of Mrs. Alexander's help in each department of the church. During the signing of the register, Mrs. George Wallace, sister-in-law of the bride, sang very sweetly, Mrs. Lane presiding at the organ.

Following the ceremony, the immediate families of the bride and groom and a few intimate friends repaired to the parsonage. The dining room was decorated in pink and white, where four young girl friends acted as assistants in serving the buffet lunch.

For travelling the bride chose travel tweed in blue with matching accessories.

After a motor trip to western points the happy couple will reside at Maple, Ontario. The father of the bride was formerly a pastor on the Sidney circuit.

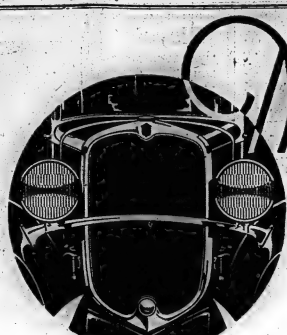
The late Mrs. Wellington was born in Madoc Township on June 20th, 1858, the daughter of William and Sarah Devolin, and was the last surviving member of a family of seven children. On November 14, 1877, she became the bride of Stephen Wellington and came to Madoc Village to reside. Here she spent nearly all her married life with the exception of a few years spent in Detroit. During the past year, she has spent much of her time with her daughter, Irene, in Weston, where she passed away after a very brief illness. All that medical skill and loving friends could do was of no avail.

The late Mrs. Wellington was a woman of many splendid qualities and was loved and respected by all who knew her. The funeral services were held from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Gordon Munro, Durham Street, Madoc, on Monday, September 14th, at 2 o'clock p.m. Rev. G. W. Rivers, pastor of Trinity United Church, conducted the service and preached a very comforting sermon from the text, "Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth," (ron Luke 8; 52. The bearers were Messrs. William, John and Robert Devolin, Mr. Armstrong and C. Henderson. The floral tributes were beautiful.

The following members of the family remain to mourn the loss of a dear and affectionate mother: Wilson, Mrs. John Hinch; Emma, Mrs. Vernon Reid, Ompah; Pamela, Mrs. Gordon Munro, Madoc; and Irene, Mrs. Lorne McConnell, Weston.

Three daughters and her husband predeceased her several years ago.



ST. HILDA'S BAND HIGHLY PRAISED

Noted British Organization Comes to Belleville Thursday

Tribute to the St. Hilda's Band has been paid by an American who has himself had years of experience as a member of the Sousa Band, as solo cornetist and as composer, J. E. Knoll of Erie, Pa., presented his newest band composition, "Hands Across the Border," to James Giver director of the St. Hilda's Band, dedicating the piece to American-Canadian friendship as embodied in the Canadian National Exhibition. The number was played with the composer present last week.

"We haven't a brass band in the United States to touch them," Mr. Knoll commented. He expressed his delight in the cornets' rendering of certain portions of the composition, which he had thought, could not be interpreted adequately except by clarinets. Mr. Knoll has composed more than 80 band numbers, none of which he has published, but which he has written specially for important bands. Sousa played one of these in a concert series of six programmes this year.

St. Hilda's Band comes to Belleville on Thursday, Sept. 24, under the auspices of the officers of the Argyll Light Infantry. An interesting feature of their appearance here will be in the fact that the band has been induced to play for dancing following the concert.

WORLD DRAMA

A great world drama is being staged in which crisis after crisis is being forced upon civilization. What the resolution will be cannot be foretold except that in all probability if previous experiences of the races count for anything, all will turn out well. Fears of a world on the verge of financial chaos while we are surrounded on all sides with the blessings of the products of man's great aid, the machines which have been invented and perfected in the past generation, are enough to stagger the mind. What the last great crisis is to be as said above remains to be seen.

Before the world gets a breathing space in which to adjust itself there is a new crisis forced upon it. For ages conditions moved along fairly sedately, today is a time of volcanic and dynamic revolutions of change in the thoughts and conditions of men and women. A solution cannot be given one issue before another crisis faces and the intricacies and entanglements grow more and more involved so that experts and economists at last have no criterion by which to judge events.

But all is not dark. For instance, the Bishop of London foresees emergence from this great melting pot of ideas. He sees a united world church. In view of the many schisms in religion, such may have been accepted with complacency by the majority of people such an event as that which the bishop predicts would be worthwhile.

This old world has been so accustomed to conditions that it has not the resiliency to adjust itself easily to the new thoughts and moods which are unsettling mankind. But it will have to adjust itself to these or go into the discard, and it will not go there, that is certain.

WHEN THE HURLY-BURLY'S DONE

Readers have a great deal to think about in this present day with such scenes are being enacted in the old world capital London, England. Here is met the upper brilliant Mayor of New York, James Walker, there is found the sober Britisher in the person of Premier MacDonald and there is found the loin-cloth son of India, Mahatma Gandhi. They each represent worlds—Walker the newer world sense of freedom and world leisure, MacDonald the bearer of mother civilization's burden and Gandhi, symbol of the little understood Orient.

"When shall we three meet again, "In thunder lightning or in rain."

"When the hurly-burly's done."

This is the time of lightning and yawning chasms in the organized world and these three racial elements are playing a part in the great pageant.

When the lightning and the rain of the present tempest have past no doubt these three types will meet again, or perhaps they will never be separate again. That at least the ties will be closely cemented where barriers were, is the hope of the world.

BETTER TIMES

Financial Times of Montreal believes that the initial phase of recovery industrially set in some time ago. This opinion has been gathered from executives of industrial companies. The Times says "This improvement has been shown in consumption goods industries, as distinct from production goods industries. The consumption goods industries are more directly in contact with the consumer and feel more quickly the impulse of demand. The food, clothing and shoe industries are among those mentioned as having felt the impetus of a forward movement in the consumption. Those industries, on the other hand, that manufacture goods more specifically for other industries which in turn make and sell consumption goods lag behind in feeling the impetus of increased demand. It is only when consumption goods manufacturers have to purchase equipment or the materials they process that the producers' goods industries will reflect the stimulus in buying power." When the gradual return to better days comes, there will doubtless be adjustments, which will absorb the best brain hours of the mercantile world.

Signboards are disappearing according to report from Ottawa along the routes of the highways. No one will be sorry except a few. Many a landscape has been obliterated and many a curve has had a billboard staring the motorist right in the eye. Billboards have had their fling long enough in the flush of the tourist trade but sober view finds that many of the signs and attractions on the highway were not in the interest of the highway travelling public. The public must keep up the agitation against the board.

TRANSLATIONS
By Alice Michaelis

The corn translates the sunlight,
The lark translates the dawn,
And there will still be food and song
When you and I are gone.

When every field of waving green
Does homage to the sun,
When every lark's ascending note
Gives thanks that night is done.

Then loveliest are sunbeams,
Then morning is most fair,
Because of these translations
Before us everywhere.

The rose translates the sunlight,
The mockingbird, the moon;
And there will still be love and dreams,
Though we may pass too soon.

POLIOMYELITIS is on the wane and the end of the wave is in sight, said the Commissioner of Health of New York City in referring to the epidemic of infantile paralysis which scourged that city this summer. At the delayed opening of the schools the Health Commissioner issued the following "Ten School Child Health Hints," which every parent should read and heed:

Have your child examined by the family doctor.

See that he has the required health certificate.

See that he is immunized against diphtheria.

See that he is vaccinated against smallpox.

See that his teeth are in good condition.

See that his feet are fitted with proper shoes.

See that his clothing fits comfortably.

See that he has a nourishing noon-day meal.

See that he has a lunch in the afternoon.

See that he gets one quart of milk every day.

MIND READING ALOUD

To four Yale men of a shortish generation ago the death of Eva Fay will bring up memories, says the New York Times in recalling an instance of this peculiar character's public history. She was a mind-reader, like her mother-in-law before her.

The four were just at the age when nothing had such zest as unscrewing the inscrutable. When Eva Fay came to New Haven with her husband, they determined to put her to the test. Having sworn the rest to secrecy, one of the four wrote with a fountain-pen on the thin white edge of a dollar bill the question:

"Will she come to Nehasane?"

That was the name of his father's camp in the Adirondacks. When the act came on, he held the bill in the hollow of his hand and concentrated on the question. Eva Fay, on the stage sat Eva Fay, under her blanket, crying out the questions she read from the mind of members of the audience.

Pretty soon there was an agitation under the blanket and she cried out:

"I see a man in the fourth row. He has on a check suit. He wants to know, will she come, will she come, will she come — to some strange place with an Indian name. I see it now, Nehasane!"

The four trooped out, too excited to wait for the answer. Three of them felt forever committed to a belief in the unbelievable. It was not until some days later that the fourth confessed that Mr. Fay had whispered to him as he strode past up the aisle:

"Come, now, young feller, be a good sport, what the h—l is that last word?"

THE BENEFIT OF THE RURAL SCHOOL FAIR

Rural school fairs have been in full swing in Hastings County during the past ten days. There are ten fairs held thereby this county, all holding a strong appeal and comprising one of the most important events of the year in the community in which they are held.

For the farm boy and girl attending Public School the Rural School Fair affords in its many phases a real opportunity to make a start in the Show Ring.

The School Fair, as an institution was 21 years of age last year. The first Fair was held in 1909 with 3 schools and 47 children taking part. In 1930 there were 565 Fairs in the province, 4747 schools and 122606 children taking part. Fairs during 1931 today are much more extensive than they started out to be some years ago. The idea in such a school Fair is to encourage agriculture in which one finds Cooking and Sewing, Writing and Art, Farm and Home Decoration, First Aid and Public Speaking Classes alongside an extension of agricultural products is to give the boys and girls the opportunity of demonstrating their particular capabilities and inclinations.—Shining News Argus.

THE MOON'S COMEBACK

That irrepressible theatrical weekly "Variety" has compiled some statistics showing that in the past ten months of this year there has been about the moon. The world is again becoming moon-conscious.

There has been "Moonlight Saving Time", "Reaching for the Moon" "Moonlight on the Colorado," "Wabash Moon". The Moon Comes over the Mountain", "Carolina Moon." Even Ziegfeld's newest "Follies" features the Follies version revival of "Shine On, Harvest Moon", a ditty which brings tears to pre-war eyes.

No other period is necessary to show that the world is returning to normalcy. Things are on a pretty solid footing when even folk, the greatest consumers of popular songs, can find an appeal of sentiment and simplicity in lyrics about the sky, "like a rainbow, now bent in heaven".

Songs about the moon are not new, because there is nothing new under the moon. Call it Carolina or Wabash it is the same moon which shone in Shakespeare's time in much the same sweet of Canada may sing about the moonlight on the Colorado, but they in their hearts of hearts say, in the words of Shakespeare, it is the moon, "Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams.

I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright." —Ottawa Citizen.

CANADA'S STEADY GROWTH

The Dominion census of 1931 was taken during a period when the most wide dimensions that had been in evidence for more than a year. In the circumstances, disappointing returns would have been in the nature of things. It is a fact, however, that in the three statements of census taken at four year intervals a story is told of steady growth in all parts of the country. In most cases the increases in population fall short of the estimates made on the count already taken it appears that the Dominion census total is 10,000,000. In the statement of population just published, the increase from 1921 to 1931 to 129,103, which may be considered satisfactory growth. Three Rivers, the half-way house between Quebec and Montreal, a very old community on the banks of the St. Lawrence, has grown from a city of 22,300 in the year of 1911, to 30,000 in 1921 to 29

SHIPWRECKED CREW IS BACK

Hardy Traders Brought Back to Civilization

Sydney, N.S., Sept. 18 (C.P.)—After nearly a year in the Arctic wilderness transportation back to civilization a shipwrecked crew of hardy traders from Peterhead, Scotland, were landed at North Sydney Thursday by the Canadian Government steamer Beothic, which had brought them from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police post at Lake Athor.

The crew, Skipper Watts, left Scotland last September to trade in Baffin Land. Ice floes off John Leonard died at sea and four days later the vessel was wrecked on a ledge off the bleak coast of Baffin Land.

The other members of the crew, Cecil Done, H. Turner and Tom Armstrong, all of London, and Bert Bolinds of Peterhead, got ashore and lived for a month in a shack that had been abandoned by the mounted police. All they could find to eat was some meat of dead walrus they found frozen near the shack. All they saved from the wreck were a few cigarettes. The following February Eskimos found and took them to the police post at Lake Arbor where they remained until the arrival of the Beothic.

Lives on Berries and Wild Fruit When Lost for 7 Weeks

John Stojan Believed Lost Emerges Safe Today

CIRCLE FOREST

Keene, N.Y., Sept. 18 —Weary and emaciated after forty-one days of living on berries and wild fruit, John Stojan, a Russian laborer who was believed to have perished in the Adirondack wilderness, emerged safe today.

His clothing was tattered and he was completely worn out from seeking an opening in what seemed to him an endless forest. He was working on a state highway construction job when he disappeared on August 1st. Searching parties scoured the countryside for him for two weeks, then abandoned the hunt.

Stojan evidently travelled in circles, because the point where he was last seen before today is only a few miles from where he returned to the open country.

THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE ISSUE

Resolution in Modified Form Adopted By Synod

Toronto, Ont., Sept. (C.P.)—Confronted with the problem of the election of a new Primate, the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada today began its fifth session in Toronto. The lower house of the Synod last Tuesday failed by the votes of three Maritime clerics, to give unanimous assent to a motion which would have changed the basis of constitution and get up legislation enabling the election to be taken out of the hands of the House of Bishops and turned over to the Synod.

This lack of unanimity means that completion of the process approved in principle, will have to be postponed until next assembly of the Synod in 1934, unless some other method of putting the plan thru is discovered.

Theological Colleges

The recommendation of the Anglican National Commission regarding the Theological colleges, reorganization of which blocked by representatives of the colleges on Wednesday, was approved in much modified form last night.

The revised recommendation, introduced by the committee to whom the original resolution was referred read as follows:

"The General Synod regards a system of theological education, of the highest order and state of efficiency, as being essential to the like of the church. It recognizes the existence of the theological colleges as an outcome of past conditions, and rejoices in the evidence of increasing organization and cooperation between the authorities and these colleges.

"It urges the fullest possible development of these principles of consultation and co-operation to the increase of efficiency, coupled with all reasonable economy, and declares that no additional theological college be established."

Size of Diocese

After a spirited debate in which both Bishops and clergy took part, the General Synod adjourned last night without voting on proposals that the various dioces of the church should be made approximately equal in strength.

This motion was embodied in the report of the Anglican National Commission, presented by Rt. Rev. C. A. Seager, Bishop of Ontario. It has been found by the field commissioners, he explained, that many diocese were absurdly unequal in size and in number of clergy. While no rule of change could be made at once, he urged, in the words of the commission's recommendation, that equality in strength should be "as far as possible the ideal before the church."

Against this view several delegates led by Rev. Principal W. B. Vance of Vancouver, protested statistics could not measure the strength of any diocese, or the needs of its clergy for the supervision of a Bishop.

In defence of the commission's recommendation, both Bishop Seager and F. H. Osborne, K.C., of Ottawa, said the commission was being misinterpreted. They were well aware of all that had been pointed out by the opposition, including the fact that ecclesiastical provinces and not the General Synod must control the erection of new dioceses.

They only desired an expression of opinion.

Another recommendation suggests that no new diocese should be established without the concurrence of the General Synod, but Bishop Seager insisted this should be debated later.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

A moment later Morales and Jito came from out the patio and Ted watched them with keen interest. A striking pair, those two. The Spaniard posed with the consummate ease of a born gentleman, the Mexican almost overgracious, so huge he was, in his white silk shirt and the black sombrero. He seemed out of place in all that finery, clothing. He should have been some satyr, with himself lying sprawling on a river bank.

Thankfulness Jito extended his hand. "Que va?" You are a strong man, my friend. My neck still aches." He brushed and moved that great columnlike neck back and forth. "Once while I was at school in California there came a Yale wrestler, a very big man, big as big farm lad. One night we wrestled for three hours and he could not put me another about. Then! My neck hurt that night too, but at last I won. You are stronger than Avery."

"In Senor Radcliff's memory I salute you, Jito!" said Morales politely.

Jito shrugged. "It is so! I said before, with the game of wrestling there are rules and forbiddings and other tricks. But what beat I you again, for I am not clever. Yet I think it is the secret of killing—that their will to rule. That was their religion. Now what beat I you, Avery? Try to mine. Not so many years ago the peons had to be the slaves, the slaves of my grandfather. They should kill me and I should kill them, name they are, for I am master, and this, as I see it, is right, and the will of God. And now comes this bandit dog and to the peon says: 'You are free, and I am equal to you. Yours is the right to own cattle and grain and land, yours is the right to marry and give your daughters in marriage, and if anyone comes between you and your liberty, kill him, for how little I fear this great master of yours. I kill his men, I burn his ranches, I take his best cattle, I kill his vaqueros, I kill—'"

"And, senor, he does all these things so that our people whimper and grow discontented and take sides and believe perhaps that it is too can do these things and rise up against me. Already I have many urings Already my Jito has had to with fear to them when they refused to pay me. Yes, Morales was sheres that are our due. These are the bad times, and with the border country, and if a leader, strong and brave, can hold hand these people—"

The senor shook in a moment's passion. "—for me and for all that is decent and good. It will be the end. Rather than that I might should see myself dead. And I believe that I will be. Pancho down this dog—this son of a dog."

Jito's face had grown pale and was jerking in anger. Quickly Adela came to his side, took his hand stroked his cheek.

"Be not excited, my uncle," she whispered in quick Spanish. "You must not do this. Please, for me." And she patted and caressed him back to calmness, yet his hand still shook a little as he filled the other glass of the straw-colored wine.

"You must forgive," he said at last. "It is the only subject in which I let myself become a foolish old man. That is my folly. But to answer your question in a word, I hate this Coyote because he breaks my power. He damages my scheme of things." Resolutely he shook off the moment's weakness and was again able to smile, but the look of anxiety still remained in Jito's and Adela's eyes.

All sat had gone from the little group. The dinner was finished and most in silence, and later Adela spoke to Ted of her uncle's outburst against the bandit.

"My uncle means in life," she told him as they stood outside the patio, "is to convince the ranks his has built up. It is for that he wants me to marry and have children. It was his tragedy that he himself had his children stolen—you will learn this sooner or later. He is here—gossip—except Jito, whose mother I never knew, also has come nearest to taking the place of a son, per he cannot inherit. I wish he could. And now El Coyote threatens to arouse the people and topple over my uncle's kingdom. So for that he has hated the bandit with such hate as I am afraid to think of. He broods. It is unhealthy. I have watched that fall coming for the years since this bandit came."

"But isn't all this thing that your uncle stands for destined to fall sometime?"

For a while the girl made no answer, looking out into the night. At last she turned and nodded quickly. "It is true," she said. "It seems almost impossible for me to say it, but it cannot be otherwise. Only it will be the end of my uncle and all that he represents. And for me it would mean—quiet ease? What would you say I am fit for, Ted Radcliff, in that busy world that you come from and that some day is going to engulf us here? I often wonder what I should be good for. I should be ever so much worse off than you when you found yourself cast adrift without warning. You have been brave not to let it make any difference to you."

"I shouldn't say it hasn't made any difference. So far as my future goes it may have made a great deal. For one thing, I am very nearly penniless. That's bound to create an important difference. Whether I go back East or stay here. It shouldn't get it's bound to. Today Bob was joking with me about the need to marry a rich girl. At the present moment I haven't even the right to fall in love and in the old days, I believe, I was one of the world's eligible young men, I didn't avail myself of the opportunity—"

"Adela was watching him with a little frown. "You only mean that if you fell in love you wouldn't feel you had the right? That just because you lacked a few miserable dollars you would kill that love?"

"I'd go away, I suppose."

"In that case," she replied in her calm, judicial way, "should say you were what Jito calls 'one very much fool.' That has love to do with anything but love?"

Ted looked startled. Once when I never had to think about the importance of three meals a day. But Adela, with a very much air, would it, for a man to ask a woman bluntly if she loved him? Was she sake? Love, if it means anything, must mean that—and more, also.

Again she smiled. "I think you'll forget all about it, however, when you've really loved, Ted Radcliff."

"You're an expert, then, on that subject?"

Adela, as Spanish are born with a knowledge about love. I have been there all my life. I have been—"Really?"

"Of course." Her eyes, like stars in the half-light, challenged him. Her voice trembled. She seemed very near and for a moment all his senses set to wait breathless with expectancy. But the half-light changed, watching the white arm that rose to her pale cheek, saw that her own hand covered hers. He bent forward and his lips touched her trembling hand. For a fleeting instant he felt the touch of soft, light fingers in his hair, then Adela swerved away.

Silence for a time. At last he asked in a voice not yet grown steady: "Is it impertinent to ask if you have been man like myself should tell you that you're a great girl?"

Adela turned with a half-sigh from the window. "I should think it very exciting," she answered.

Frankford

Frankford, Sept. 18 — On Friday evening, September 11th, over fifty friends of Miss Anita Finnegan gathered at her home to bid farewell to her before her departure for Toronto to her training as a nurse in Kingston Hospital. Miss Anita was very popular among both the young and old in this area and will be much missed very much. The evening was spent in music, games and dancing and every one present enjoyed an enjoyable evening. Anita was presented with a very handsome gift and the following address was read by Miss Harriet Gage.

Dar Pried Anita—

It seems hard that in the months pass, we are called upon more frequently to bid necessary farewell to some loved one who has been a friend and chum to us all. You have been among us for many years and it is with sincerest regrets that we meet here tonight. But these regrets are tempered with joy in the knowledge that you are going into a larger sphere of life, and taking up worthily the finest profession possible for girls.

We fear that as many of our young people go out from Frankford that the greatest number of new friendships formed gradually sub, merged the older ones and they often lose the friendships of youth. We hope this will not be the case with you.

Such babies! Such softness, fragrance, such skin softening and cleansing!

As Loyal Chileans Rallied to Quell Revolt

With ships of the Chilean navy ready in open revolt, this army of citizens answered the call of the government to help the military forces in anticipation of nation-wide revolution. The recruits are seen here undergoing their first military drill in Santiago. The uprising was quelled after a week of intensified fighting.

Your work will necessarily keep you busy but we hope that you may find the odd moment when time will enable you to write some old friends of the home town to let them know "all is well."

Anita, be courteous to all but intimate with few, and let those few be well tried before you give them your confidence. True friendship is a plant of slow growth, and must undergo and withstand the shocks of adversity before it is entitled to the appellation. Let your best feel for the affection and the distress of every one, as will be given much did in your work. Above all be cheerful. The people whom we have seen succeed best in life have always been cheerful and hope ful, who went about their work with a smile and took the chances and knocks of their work like men. The people, taking the rough and smooth alike as it came.

And, now, Anita, we do not wish to weary you. We know that you are leaving us for a short time only, but to be certain that you will think of your friends in your mind all the old friends and school chums of your youth, so that you be among this gift, small as it is, remembering that in itself it is nothing but that the idea back of it is everything, and that it is worth anything only in the memories it brings forth.

Signed on behalf of your friends, Mrs. Kenneth Paul, Miss Edna Ketchenon, Mrs. J. W. Rose and Mrs. T. J. Ketchenon spent a day this week in Kingston.

Mrs. J. W. Rose returned home last week after spending a couple of weeks with friends in Brighton.

SAILORS IN JOVIAL MOOD

Are Told to Put Any Grievances in Writing

London, Sept. 19.—Sailors of Great Britain's Atlantic Fleet, were privileged today to submit their grievances in writing, addressed to the various base commanders who will meet Admiral Field to recommend adjustments to the Admiralty.

The commander of the Endeavor at Sherrness lined his company up on deck yesterday and told them if they had any complaints to put them in writing and submit them to the master-at-arms for transfer to higher authorities.

"The men were in a jovial mood and apparently were willing to wait for the decision of the Admiralty on their protests. They were given week-end shore leave as usual and no incidents of a disorderly nature were reported.

The cruiser Durban, enroute from Sherrness to Brisk to become the flagship of the newly-formed South American Squadron, was called into Portsmouth on that her crew might be represented at the Admiralty's investigation. The cruiser York and some destroyers have arrived at Sherrness from Invergordon, Scotland, scene of the recent agitation.

BRINGING UP FATHER, By George McManus

School Additions Will be Completed in Three Weeks

Board Will Be Proud of Them Says Sites Chairmen

COLLEGIATE ROOF

Conditions over which the contractor and the chairman of Building, Site and Repair had no control have caused the delay of finishing the additions to Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandra schools within the specified time, was stated to the Board of Education, when that organization held their first regular meeting after the summer holiday Friday night in the board room of the Collegiate Institute and Vocational School.

Answer Given

"The contractors have done everything possible," said L. E. McLean, chairman of the committee, "to complete the job within the specified time and I look to see the buildings all completed in three weeks' time." At the present time the classes are going on but there is some more work to be done and the pitterpatter of the schools affected does not have their schools organized and the work is proceeding. The contractor was held up for a week by the jalopean in awarding the contract and when he was ready for the fir tuin and some flooring it could not be had and thus the delay. I think the Board of Education will be proud of their additions when completed. This explanation was given by Mr. McLean when Trustee H. W. Greenleaf asked when the schools would be finished.

Not Often

The meeting last night was one of the shortest that has been held in a long time and there were no contentious questions to deal with. The School Management Committee had met from time to time during the summer and when it was time for the schools to open, the teachers who had resigned and filled the several staffs had all been replaced. The work of the committee had been kept up to date and on Friday night the Board of Education carried unanimously the several reports turned in by this committee. There was nothing of importance in the reports except the engaging of several teachers. The Sites, Building and Repair Committee had met from time to time also and their report was adopted.

Coal Purchased

Coal for the year will be bought from the Schuster Company, their being the lowest tender. Peacehontas mine run, nut and slack at $6.71 and three-quarter inch slack for $6.56. Col. W. N. Ponton asked if this was the lowest price and George F. Ostrom, chairman of the committee, stated that it was the lowest price given. A report of the school inspection held before the holidays was read and the members of the board were quite enthused with the reports, so much so that they ordered a letter to be sent to the several principals congratulating the schools on their work. Of Warner Baxter and Elsie Ferguson, prominent in Cecil B. DeMille's greatest dramatic triumph, "The Squaw Man" coming to the Belle, Wednesday.

Queen Mary School, the Inspecting Officer stated that it is the most efficient school that he had inspected of any of the public schools in his jurisdiction.

A delegation, consisting of Mrs. W. N. Ponton and Mrs. S. D. Lazier awaited on the Board of Education asking for the use of a part of the Collegiate Institute for their meeting of the Girl Guides which will be held some time in October. The board granted the request. This gathering will be the largest ever to be held in Eastern Ontario and the convention will last for three days.

The report of Principal MacLaurin of the Collegiate Institute and Vocational School was read. In this report the principal asked for the authorization of the Board for a new Latin text book for the Upper School, explaining that the Department of Education did not have an authorized text. Col. Ponton was against the move stating that it would be a hardship on the parents to purchase a new book at $1.50. Mr. A. R. Schryver thought the Department of Education should put some stamp of approval on some text for the Upper School. Also in the report was a request for an increase in salary for one of the office staff and also that fifty new lockers be purchased.

In Favour of Lockers

The question of lockers also brought a protest from Col. W. N. Ponton but before the discussion was finished and an explanation offered by the Principal, the Board was quite in favor of the expenditure. Mr. MacLaurin stated that a requisition had been made last year for 100 lockers and only fifty had been purchased. The enrolment at the school was now near the 900 mark and why should 850 have lockers and the other forty none? He also stated that he was teaching a class of 52 in chemistry and physics and thirty of the students had to stand up on account of no desks. These are not luxuries but necessities.

The Board passed the request along to the purchasing committee with power to act at once although they were instructed to secure the best prices available.

The report from the school nurse was read. Although the schools have been in operation less than a month, a few dental cavities have been held and the health of the pupils is excellent.

J. W. Barlow, in speaking to a report from the Sites, Building and Repair Committee with regards to certain alterations at the Collegiate he stated that the committee would not recommend this work until the board had passed on the same. The Board was in favor of the work being done as the expense involved would be trifling and the work in the collegiate speeded up. The work to be done is the dividing of a room in the basement for the holding of supplies for the Vocational School.

Adopted Finance Report

Mr. John Elliott, chairman of the Finance Committee, stated to the Board in presenting his report, that the accounts had been fully enquired into and hoped that the Board would pass the report in its entirety but were privilege to ask questions on any item. The total amount expended from June 15th to September 15th was $17,160.96. A total of $6,139.71, being for the two new additions being erected. An item of $328.85 for expenses in connection with the Entrance examinations was questioned by Col. Ponton, this member wishing to know why inspector Clarke received a total of some $80.90 of this amount when he was appointed by the Department of Education. Mr. MacLaurin explained that the fees were all set out in the regulations and that board had to bear the expense. The High School Board could make the entrance examination separate if they wished but the Board had kept the expenses to a minimum.

Caretaker Was Laid

Trustee H. J. Allin wanted to know how the contracts for the cement walks were let and Mr. Osborne explained they were given on a square foot basis at the best price obtainable. The Department of Public Works at the time was going to do the work but they were late in starting and the building committee thought the work should be done at once. There were no tenders asked for but the price was fixed by the engineer. In regarding the roof at the Collegiate Institute was gone into and Mr. McLean explained the repairs were only temporary. The cost of the repairs done this year was something over $300.00 and the repairs will last for three years. To put a permanent repair job on would cost about $5,000. The painting and painting of schools was also let on a time basis, the Board supplying the material.

A number of applications for position on the teaching staff was received and sent on to the School Management Committee. R. J. Graham wrote to the Board asking for a supply of names of people who had served in the Great War and this request will be granted. The magazines now in use in the Library and other parts of the Collegiate were renewed on recommendation of the board. Mr. M. W. Mott asked that pupils who wished could take certain periods of elocution from Miss Leslie Tuite the parents to pay for the instruction, and the Board looked with favor on the request. Col. Ponton explained to the Board that arrangements had been made with Rena Hunter with respect to musical instruction in the Collegiate Institute and that work in this respect would continue during the term.

Those present at the meeting were: William Harvey, chairman of the Board; H. W. Ackerman, H. J. Allin, J. W. Barlow, E. J. Butler, K.C., H. W. Dickens, John Elliott, H. W. Greenleaf, George F. Lent, Rev. W. S. MacTavish, George F. Ostrom, Col. W. N. Ponton, K.C., Fred B. Smith, A. R. Schryver, and C. C. C. Slewar. L. E. McLean, F. J. Butler, K.C., was in the chair during the committee of the whole Board.

REVISION OF CANON WILL STIR DEBATE

Primate to Retire at 70 But May Be Retained In Office

FIXED SEE

Toronto, Oct., Sept. 19 (CP)—A lengthy debate is expected today following the introduction of a motion yesterday directing a committee of the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada to confer on the subject of the Ecclesiastical Province of Runamital see which will automatically become the headquarters of the primates upon their election.

There is a possibility, however, that the debate will direct representation on the committee from the Ecclesiastical Province of Rupert's Land, covering the Prairie Provinces, with a view to aiding in electing a primatial see in that territory.

After three days of uncertainty regarding the problem the General Synod yesterday put through its lower house, in slightly amended form, the draft of a canon or by-law, which, when given final effect, will provide for the election of the church's primate by the Synod as a whole, and not by the house of Bishops as heretofore.

At the conclusion of yesterday's session some dissatisfaction was expressed over leaving so much power still in the hands of the Bishops and Professor J. F. Day of Wycliffe College, protested enlistment of an electoral college drawn from members of the church as a whole and composed of equal number of Bishops, Clergy and Laity. This was rejected, however, after it was pointed out that the Bishops had already gone toward meeting the wishes of the lower house for a Synodical election and that, after all, the Bishops were in a position, now the capacities of nominees and the needs of the church to elect.

Further consideration of the report of the Anglican National Commission was given last night. Plans for a centenary fund were made by several speakers. One speaker declared bluntly the church was out of touch with the outside world," and that there was too much of church and not enough Christianity."

Rigid to revise the activities of an old committee on church union were taken in incorporating another recommendation of the National commission.

A recommendation "that the whole missionary work throughout Canada be maintained on a proper standard as a unit and that division of the mission into missionary, and self supporting, cease," was passed. This did not mean, it was explained, that diocesan mission funds would be abolished but that the central office would be given a comprehensive review of mission ary effort throughout the country.

Recommendations dealing with the need for a closer relationship between clergy and laity and the more intimate consideration of terms were under consideration when the house adjourned.

Too Cold Outside For Sixteen Last Night

Sleeping out in the open Friday night would not have been very comfortable unless a few blankets had been available in which to roll up. Not having the blankets, slept on mats, some quite young and others of middle age, decided to seek shelter at the city police station. One youth evidently had travelled some and was aware of the hotel rule that all valuables must be left for deposit in the hotel safe otherwise the proprietor will not be responsible, for this morning, when leaving, he stopped at the Sergeants desk and requested his money which amounted to ninety cents.

MOSES GROVES HANGS UP A NEW RECORD

Made New Record at All-Time Free Southpaw In Am. League

NEAR ANOTHER

Has Only to Win One More to Equal Bagby's Record of 31

(By Cayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer)

It's been a poor old week this week when the major leagues have not provided some sort of excitement. In the short space of four days, both pennants have been clinched beyond further argument and two American League stars have set new all-time individual pitching records.

Rube High Mark

Robert Moses Grove, great southpaw of the champion Philadelphia Athletics, became the greatest record breaker in two days yesterday when he pitched his 30th victory of the year at the expense of the Chicago White Sox, 6 to 1. Walter Johnson of Boston broke the all-time mark for two-baggers the previous day.

Grove is the first southpaw in the history of the American league to achieve thirty victories in a single season and only the second pitcher to accomplish the feat in the current decade. Walter Johnson of Washington pitched thirty-one games each year in 1912 and 1913, a right-hander, a Mr. Coveleski of Cleveland in 1920.

If he does not pitch another game, Grove's present record of 30 wins and but three defeats gives a winning percentage of .909 will establish a new high mark, which probably will be the record that will stand for some time, in other leagues to accomplish the feat in the current decade. Walter Johnson's previous high mark was .741 Eagle Grimes, right-hander, in the National League at Cleveland in 1930.

If he does not pitch another game, Grove's present record of 30 wins and but three defeats gives a winning percentage of .909 will establish a new high mark, which probably will be the record that will stand for some time, in other leagues to accomplish the feat in the current decade. Walter Johnson's previous high mark was .741 Eagle Grimes, right-hander, in the National League at Cleveland in 1930.

In posting No. 30 Grove allowed the White Sox only four hits, and struck out six, running his strikeout total to 175 for the year. His closest rival, George Earnshaw, has shifted 161. Grove's record for Urban Faber, retired hurler, is now started a two run rally that provided his margin of victory.

Washington and New York remained in a deadlock for second place in the American League as both won their games. The Senators had to go twelve innings to nose out Detroit, 4 to 3, Harold Marshall scoring the winning run, when Earl Whitehill unloosed a wild pitch. It was tough on Ben Cantwell, however, as he had allowed only eight hits while his mates had made but six.

The Yankees looked like the Yankees of old for the second straight day as they clobbered the Boston Red Sox, 10 to 4. Babe Ruth supplied the highlight with a towering home run his 43rd of the year, leaving him only one behind Lou Gehrig.

Red Sox Take Two

The struggling Red Sox had six pitchers in the games from the Cleveland Indians, 6 to 1 and 8 to 4. Jack Russell of the Indians down with five hits in the first and Red Ruffing subdued Joe Sewell and his mates in the second game, while Lou Gehrig and Earl Averill each connected for a pair of Cleveland circuit.

National League

Chic Hafey scored all the way from first base on Pepper Martin's single in the fourth inning as the St. Louis Cardinals squared their series with the Chicago Cubs at 1 all. Giant outfielder, was knocked unconscious by Burleigh Grimes' fast balls in the fifth inning. While he was "out" he fractured his wrist in the hospital by several stitches.

Alternating in the box, Jakie Mungo and Babe Herman's Dodger hitting enabled Brooklyn to break the Chicago Cubs' eight-game winning streak by a 7 to 5 decision. Hitch home run and his single drove in all the Robin runs off Charley Root.

Boston and Philadelphia split a double bill. Ed. Brandt, Braves' southpaw, stopped the Pirates, 4 to 2, in the first game with a two run rally of the year. Phillie Boley, of the Phillies, was ordered off the field when he won the nightcap, 4 to 1. The Phillies made it unanimous as his home run and three singles in the second game.

Philadelphia and Cincinnati were not scheduled.

Yesterday's Stars

Bob Grove, Athletics—Pitched thirtieth victory of season, defeating White Sox to five hits.

Chick Hafey, Cardinals—Scored from first on single in ninth inning to beat Cubs 2 to 1.

Jack Russell and Tom Oliver—Former held Indians to five hits in second game and batted in four runs with two doubles and three singles as Boston took two from Cleveland.

Ed Brandt, Braves, and Henry Heine, Pirates—Their mates' pitching enabled teams to split double header.

Babe Ruth, Yankees—Hit 43rd home-run of season, and scored three runs as Yanks defeated Red Sox, 10 to 4.

Babe Herman, Robins—Batted in all Brooklyn runs with homer and single in 7-3 triumph over Cubs.

Fred Marberry, Senators—Kept Tigers' hits scattered for 12 innings to win 10th victory of season.

Among private motor-cars in Britain the average horse-power is 14.11, the average weight 2,240 and the price £280. Sailing and the general average salvage 7,000.

THREE TRUMP CARDS

Bonia Cardinals, with the aid of the best season pitching they've had in years, will do demonstrate this year they can upset the Philadelphia Athletics' apple-cart despite their defeat in the big series last year. The Cards comprise a powerful squad, and the experts don't forget that Gabby Street has given them every hope of success. We were talking to Vince Barton, the Edmonton-Toronto boy who is behind the hurling staff with the Chicago Cubs, and it is his opinion that the Athletics will fall miserably in Grove and Earnshaw do not deliver. This will hardly be likely, but bad for Quaker Town.

ACROBATICS AT KARNIVAL

Vaudeville Programme Pleases Patrons of Kiwanis Karnival

The vaudeville on Friday night at the Kiwanis Karnival was the best entertainment of the week. Each act received many rounds of applause from the patrons.

The act presented by the Watson Sisters was very well received by the public. The Watson Sisters have been playing at the Kiwanis Karnival for the past three years. Their double and single singing and dancing acts received many rounds of applause from the public.

Frank Perri, with his Spanish pastor gave an interesting singing and playing the guitar. He imitated Rudy Vallee and the world's famous entertainer.

The last act of the evening was without a doubt the best act that has been seen at the Karnival this week. It was an acrobatic act by the Mundy Bros. and consisted of a trio of handbalancing was a feature that has never been duplicated in Belleville. The "Mundy Brothers, Earl, at the age of nine years seemed to attract the attention of the patrons more than the older brothers, who gave the public a wonderful exhibition of acrobatics and hand balancing. The trio's act received the most applause that has been heard to date at the Karnival.

Saturday Night At Kiwanis Karnival

Saturday night's vaudeville at the Kiwanis Karnival includes the husband calling contest, the watermelon eating contest and three acts of vaudeville. The acts that are to be seen on the stage are Ray and Grace in a clever musical act; Verna Dare in a wonderful dancing number by "Bill" Burgess will entertain the public with two numbers, that have never been heard in Belleville before. Again last night "Slim" help set carry the show with his many wise-cracks and comical sayings. The patrons are very glad to hear that "Slim" is engaged again next year as master-of-ceremonies. The program will be the most varied of the week.

RELEASED FROM SCHOOL

BOY DROWNS

Peterboro, Sept. 19—Everett Buchanan, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Buchanan, Dummer Township, was drowned while in bathing at the Norwood mill pond at 11 o'clock Friday.

The little lad's home is about two miles north of Norwood, but he attended the Norwood Public School. School was let out early yesterday on account of the school fair, and Everett, with three of his chums went to the mill pond to have a swim.

They had been in the water only a few minutes when the Buchanan boy called out for help, and could get beyond his depth and went under. The others, immediately gave the alarm and the body was recovered about fifteen minutes later.

REDWINGS CAN COP BUNTING WITH ONE WIN

Defeat Toronto Twice On Friday, Almost Assured of Title

NEWARK WINS

Have Chance to Tie Race and Force a Playoff

(By The Associated Press)

The Rochester Red Wings can't lose the International League pennant before the season ends Sunday, but there still is a chance for the Newark Bears to tie them and force a playoff for the title. Rochester today was two games ahead of Newark and each team had two to play so even if the unlikely happens and the Red Birds lose to Toronto today and tomorrow and the Bears beat Baltimore twice, things will only be even for the year.

What appears more likely is that Rochester will take advantage of today's chance to clinch the flag. One victory will do it, and the Red Wings walloped Toronto twice yesterday to run their latest string to six in a row. The score in the double victory were 9 to 1 and 7 to 4.

Rochester Wins Twice

The combination of light pitching and timely hitting, that has carried the Birds to the top with 14 victories in their last 16 games again proved successful. For eight innings of the opener, Carmen Hill and Johnny Allen fought on even terms with the Maple Leafs scoring a run in the seventh. Then in the last half of the eighth, pinch hitter George Puccinelli walloped a triple, his mates Allen shortstopping and the Red Wings scored all their six runs.

The second clash, Ray Moss was given a 4-1 lead in the second inning and coasted through with the aid of another tally. Hal Finney, Toronto hurler was shaved in the seventh according to the rules of the Toronto press.

Newark Wins

Newark, meanwhile, managed to keep its lax, faint hope of winning by a big sixth inning rally, that netted seven runs and a 9-5 victory over the Baltimore Orioles. Neither starting pitcher lasted through the slugging spell which brought the bears 14 hits and Baltimore eleven. Bill Meeker went on the mound for the Orioles took the lead and Thatcher and Smythe both succumbed as Newark put on its scoring spree in the same inning. Myles Thomas and Hopkins finished the game. Seven hits, with a base on balls and an error brought the tally ning rally.

The Montreal Royals all but clinched fourth place in the standing as they scored their eighth straight victory, beating Buffs' 8 to 0 behind Johnny Ogrodowski's seven hit pitching. Toronto still has a mathematical chance of tying Montreal Pomorski recorded his 11th victory of the season, while Hunter Gilbert, the league's leading School with a triple and three singles for a perfect day at bat.

Barton of Sprucedale, was found on Peterboro Priday by the police and its recovery reported to Detective Mr. Barron by the Belleville Police Department. Today's game at Napanee was postponed on account of a baseball tournament being held by the Millers club against the Rodney team. The latter is expecting Jimmy to be the eligibility of two Rodney players, while Milton claims, for every quality under the O.B.A.A. residence rule. It seems too bad that after, when they have kicked that a team is playing players who do not qualify, do not protest before the series start. On the other hand if the Rodney club are breaking the O.B.A.A. rules they should be dealt with in no uncertain terms. When the series for the finals will start is not known now but no information regarding the driver.

A real treat was in store for a few fortunate citizens of Belleville last Thursday evening. It seems as though right after the vaudeville show at the Kiwanis Karnival, Bath Springs, Canada's only lady professional swimmer in the record breaking swim at the C.N.E., decided that she would like to go for a swim. Accompanied by Mrs. B. S. Donovan, Bath, she headed for the T.M.C.A. pool at about 10 p.m. Mr Jos Wright, the genial manager of the "Y", reopened the building and threw the whole aquatic privileges at her feet. The little lady had no time in donning her bathing suit and then dove gracefully into the cool waters of the pool. By now other citizens had heard of her presence and quite an audience had gathered. Ruth put on the finest exhibition of diving and swimming. She was as graceful while diving as she was while swimming. Bathing is very neat in the water and just seems to swim with ease. She gave a demonstration of different styles of stroke and explained their advantages. Every one present spoke words of praise for Canada's premier swimmer.

Some pessimists have predicted the downfall of the American League in winning world's series, so meanwhile, National League rooters have taken note of the situation and, among themselves, they are predicting a National League victory in the world's series this year. Due to past misfortune and unexpected defeat when victory seemed their portion, they are not marching up and down the streets and proclaiming the Cardinals victors before the battle. But if they are right this year, the post-up enthusiasm of five less years will boil all over the diamond.

It is their belief in part that

(a) The Athletics are not as strong as they were last year.

(b) Jimmy Foxx is in an all-year hitting slump.

(c) The Athletics have two great pitchers, but the Cardinals have half a dozen fine pitchers.

(d) Derringer, a great young pitcher, has strengthened the Cardinals this year.

There are also those optimists who say that the American League can't keep winning indefinitely. It sounds logical, but it is hard to know in advance just when the parade will halt.

The scene Clayton witnessed there in the twilight depths of the African jungle was burned forever into the Englishman's brain. The giant man before him encircled the lion with his powerful right arm while with his left hand he plunged a knife time and again into the beast's unprotected side.

It was all accomplished quickly. The lion sank lifeless. Then the strange figure that had vanquished it stood erect upon the carca.s and throwing back the wild head of coarse hair, gave out the fearsome cry that a few minutes earlier had so startled Clayton. Then he gathered up his weapons.

Clayton spoke to the stranger in English, thanking him. The only answer was a steady stare and a shrug of the mighty shoulders. The man drew his knife, deftly carving a dozen strips from the lion's carcass. Then squatting upon his haunches, he proceeded to eat.

Clayton could not bring himself to share the uncooked meal upon which strange host was so apparently reveling. Again he essayed speech with the ape-man who replied in a strange tongue, his monkeys chattering. Then he arose, motioning Clayton to follow him. He widered and confused, Clayton

The ape-man, seeing Clayton declined to follow, grasped him, by the coat, drawing him toward the carcass. The Englishman decluded he was a jungle.

SIMON'S

The Modest Maniken

by N. Florence Lee.h

Leslie Manning moved with sinuous grace, as a model should move and not with the bright, artificial smile a model should wear as she slowly passed the long lo.vom of Wickers, the finest dasartment store in the South.

Men and women stared at her openly, whispering flattering comments, appraising her from her silver slipped feet to the real pearls which encircled her throat. The evening gown she was showing was of orchid tulle, very frothy at the ankles, very tight about the hips. She turned, threading her way between rows of tables, toward the opposite end of the room.

But now her heart was pounding, and her cheeks were flushed. She was passing his table; but the tall dark-haired young man didn't even glance up. Oh, it was cruel! How could he be so oblivious to her when her heart had gone out to him, when first she saw him?

Leslie was a model from accident and necessity. She had wealthy relatives, but her father had quarrelled with them years before, and she was too proud to turn to them for help when she lost her position. Instead, she accepted the only job that was offered her, and began dressing in Wickers.

Her unusual beauty and grace of carriage attracted the attention of old Mr. Wicker, and she was promoted to the position of model. She felt ashamed and cheapened; and recently she had increased her troubles by falling in love with a man who came regularly three times a week to the tea room, but who obviously didn't know that she existed.

That evening she found a yellow envelope waiting for her in her mailbox. It was a telegram from her grandmother Betty Manning, and said simply:

"Arriving eight o'clock Friday for a visit."

"Heavens alive," exclaimed the astonished girl, and with frantic haste began straightening the tiny apartment.

Her feelings were mixed. She had visited her grandmother quite old lady learned that she was a maniken—a common palmed-up show girl—that would be the end.

The visit started propitiously, however. Betty Manning was delighted with Lessie's cooking and with her apartment, and praised her

"Tomorrow," she added, "I want to look up an old school friend, Lucy Smith, so don't expect me home until night."

"Don't get lost, darling," Lessie said, and kissed her goodby. For that day at least, she told herself she need not worry about her grandmother coming to the store.

Slowly with sinuous grace, Lessie paced the tea room. She was smiling, but her heart was heavy, for she could think of no way for a modest maniken to meet a patron of the tea room! The trio was playing LaPaloma. There was a low hum of conversation and the tinkling of china. The turquoise blue evening gown rubbed about her ankles, his table. Lessie paused, sighed, and turned as if to run, then forced herself on, for seated at the young man's table were two handsomely dressed elderly women —and one of them was Grandma Manning.

Grandma Manning glanced at her, then started and half rose to her feet. "Lessie," exploded the old lady. "What does this mean?"

Lessie paused at the table, smiled sweetly. "Hush, grandma. I'm not allowed to talk."

"But Lessie!"

The young man had arisen. "If you would be kind enough to present mother and me, Mrs. Manning."

Grandma Manning sniffed. "This is my grandaughter, Miss Lessie Manning. Mrs. Smith and Mr. Eustice Smith."

"I am delighted to meet you, but please excuse me now."

On and on..... She could feel eyes boring into her back, and was conscious of the usual ripple of admiration. Was this a fantasie de dream? Grandma Manning knew him; his name was Eustice Smith, and she had been introduced to him. But Grandma Manning knew now that she was a maniken.

Round and round the room, weaving back and forth, that all the diners might see and admire the backless turquoise taffeta evening frock. Past Eustice's table.

"The gown is exquisite," Mrs. Smith murmured, and smiled at her.

Eustice looked at her fairly, the started, wondering gaze of a young man who unexpectedly sees an heavenly angel. Oh..... and oh....

Mrs. Manning was waiting for Lessie when the girl reached home.

"So you do your clerking in a backless gown and jewelled slippers?" she began. "I almost had a stroke when I saw you!"

"It's a swanky sheaves of it," Lessie admitted, and burst into tears "But grandmother," and she poured out a torrent of explanations.

"Humph," sniffed the old lady after she had finished. "I'm a lot more broad-minded than I used to be, and it isn't your fault you're so—reasonably good looking. Come into the bed room, child, and let me show you the dresses and things Lucy Smith helped me select."

"Who—are the Smiths?" Lessie ventured.

"Lucy's husband owns some tobacco factories, I believe. She was terribly tickled to death to have me, and they are coming to lunch with us tomorrow. I told Lucy you were a good cook."

"Wh—at!"

"I'm proud of you," Grandma Manning admitted. "You're so different from your silk and water cousins." Eustice said he had never seen you before," she added, "and he sounded quite delightedly. He began asking up for lost time immediately."

"Oh, grandmother, I—I like him which, for some bright reason, only shrewd elder ones.

"I had just finished telling Lucy and Eustice all about your hard struggle to find work, and we had decided to find you a nicer job or buy something, when I saw you.

"Please don't make that sort of met-

"He thinks the joke is on me. Anyway, he himself gave an invitation to come around this evening, but I told him he'd have to phone and ask you."

"I haven't a decent frock to put on, grandma."

"Yes you have. I bought you a pink dress with a back in it and a petticoat, today."

The telephone sounded, a long, compelling ring. Lessie flew to answer it, and when she spoke her face was radiant with happiness and her clear voice.

"Yes," she said, "yes, Mr. Smith, any friend of Granny's is welcome. At eight-thirty, darling?"

Obituary

MARVEL BROWN

On Sunday evening, September 13th, 1931, following a period of failing health, Marvel Brown passed peacefully to his eternal reward. Mr. Brown was the youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Brown, 3rd concession Thurlow township, was born May 31st, 1846. He grew up on the farm and spent practically his whole life on the old homestead, there proving himself to be a citizen of thrift and integrity and worthy of the respect and confidence of his neighbors and friends. His real christian experience began about fifty years ago during some special services being held in Bethany Church. He was deeply impressed of his need of a Saviour and finally found peace and life in surrendering his will and life to God. He then became a member of the Methodist Church. From that time on, he developed an increasing sense of God's grace and mercy and was enabled to rejoice in the hope of a perfect salvation through Jesus Christ. He was not content to be simply a member but willingly shared in the various responsibilities of the church's work, as trustee, class leader and steward for a number of years with much success, and only when important changes made it necessary, did he lay aside these varied duties. His latter days were spent quietly and happily with his daughter, Mrs. Edna Hamilton, who spared no effort to make the evening of his life bright and cheery. On Sunday, September 13 he seemed to be better on the previous day as he talked with friends who called to see him; but toward evening while sitting in his accustomed chair, his immortal spirit suddenly took its flight to fairer realms where the sun never sets. Interment took place on Tuesday. The funeral service was held in Bethany Church, where he first dedicated his life to God, on Tuesday, September 15th. Rev. W. R. Merrifield, pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. E. Farnsworth and Rev. J. A. McQuillan, former pastors of the charge. The floral tributes from the family and friends bore eloquent testimony of their love and esteem for the one from whom they loved and lost awhile. He leaves to mourn his loss, three daughters, Mrs. Geo. Hamilton, Thurlow; Mrs. John Morris, of Brampton and Mrs. Ross Irwin, of Belleville.

MRS. THOMAS COULTER

Gilsead community has again suffered another bereavement by the death on September 8th of one of its most highly respected citizens, Mrs. Thomas Coulter. Mrs. Mary Ann Coulter was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Wiles Pairman and was born to them on the 7th day of April, 1846, in Thurlow township and had resided in the township all her life, where she was so well known and highly respected. She was brought up in a very early devotion to a Christian life, consequently joined the Methodist Church at Plainfield during her childhood days. From that decision she never faltered but sought in her home, church and community to exemplify her faith and commend her Saviour to others. In association with her pastor-husband she was intensely interested in the W.M.S. organization and its enterprises. In missionary effort, and was closely associated with its endeavors when Gilsead was a part of the auxiliary comprising the whole circuit. She had served the position as vice-president of the Gilsead auxiliary on different occasions. Has been president of the Ladies' Aid Society and taught faithfully for many years in the Sunday School. In womanever she was needed she willingly did her part in the interests of others and the church she loved. Her labors were many and effective, therefore she will be greatly missed not only in the home, but in the church and community. Since retiring from the farm on the 8th concession she has lived with her daughter, Mrs. J. O. Huffman, with her father-in-law every possible attention and loving care, yet despite every effort on her illness her strength rapidly failed and on Tuesday afternoon, September 8th, she passed peacefully away to her Eternal Rest. The funeral service was held in the home on Thursday afternoon, conducted by her pastor, Rev. R. H. Merrick, assisted by the Rev. E. Farnsworth. The floral tributes were beautiful and silently expressed the tender love of those left to mourn. To her immediate relatives she leaves her devoted husband, Thos. Coulter and her daughter, Mrs. J. O. Huffman and one sister, Mrs. John Pitman of Carmel.

Huge Selling Wave From European Exchanges at Opening

MARKET FIRM

New York, N.Y., Sept. 21.—The three of world-wide financial unrest converged upon the New York Stock Market today, but were supplied spectacularly in a history making session.

Word that Paris Bourse the only other prominent Exchange open for business, the New York market was the principal Exchange upon which the world could liquidate securities. Officials of the Exchange were besieged from many cities at home and abroad to refrain from operating for Opening. Officials insisted, however, that the United States could and should maintain an open market for securities regardless of what happens elsewhere. They did not to forbid short selling temporarily.

After tumbling to 7 points in the first hour, the share market staged one of the best rallies in weeks, many principal shares rising to more than 6 points above last week's final. In some quarters it was pointed out that the market had been discounting the British crisis for the past week or more and that with affairs in such a climax, however unpleasant some aspects of the situation might be, a load of uncertainty had been removed.

Morgan Optimistic Sees Hope in Move

(By DeWitt MacKenzie)

(Copyright 1931, By The Associated Press.)

London, Sept. 21 (AP).—J. P. Morgan today expressed to the Associated Press optimism regarding the situation arising from Great Britain's sensational abandonment of the gold standard. He said it was a "hopeful and not a discouraging event."

Mr. Morgan made this statement in reply to a question from a correspondent who sought him out in his private office not far from the Bank of England.

"This step seems to be the second most important step in the work of the National Government, the first having the balancing of the budget, Mr. Morgan said.

"The completion of the Government's work will be the restoration of trade in this country.

"This being the case," Mr. Morgan continued, "it seems to be a hopeful and not a discouraging event and one which brings the great work of the Government much nearer to accomplishment."

War Office Not in Accord With Foreign Office

SITUATION ACUTE

Do Developments Justify Sending of Reinforcements?

Tokyo, Sept. 21—More Japanese troops moved from the Korean border today toward Manchuria, where soldiers of the Empire were battling the southern portion of the Chinese State in a military war.

As the troop movements continued, the Japanese Cabinet met in extraordinary session but adjourned without reaching any decision regarding the Manchurian situation.

It was disclosed, however, that the War Office and the Foreign Office were not in accord on Manchurian policy and that the question had become the most acute in many years.

The chief point considered by the Cabinet, according to journalistic reports, was whether developments had justified the sending of reinforcements to Manchuria as proposed by Minister of War Minami.

May Oppose Tarriffs

Sir Herbert Samuels, leader of the British Liberal Party in the House of Lloyd George, and holder of the portfolio of Home Secretary in the National Government may throw a monkey wrench into the economic machinery by opposing a tariff.

HEAVY STORM VISITS CITY

Rainfall Accompanied By Heavy Thunder and Sharp Lightning

"Oh, listen to the patter of the rain upon the roof," and a certainly made some patter to the accompaniment of considerable roaring of thunder and flashes of lightning. The copious rainfall, which commenced late Saturday night and continued, with short cessation, until shortly after noon on Sunday, resumed its downpour in greatly increased quantity and strength during the early part of Monday morning. Citizens hastened to put down windows to save curtains from being drenched or in any event dampened; others from fear of the lightning. Some there were, however, who no doubt, rolled over content to "let it rain, let it pour"—in fact, they would like more than a little thunder storm to diminish them.

All merriment and levity aside, it did rain exceedingly last night—it was quite a bed storm as is shown by the report of rain fall vouched for by the authorities at the city water works pump house.

There is a philosophy which teaches that philosophy itself—is a disease.

Molester of "Army" Raises Row in Station, Cuts Man

James Cullen Secreted Razor in Thin Bag On Neck

HELD FOR PRINTS

About eight o'clock Saturday evening, James Cullen, no permanent address, being in an intoxicated condition, became very disorderly and molested the Salvation Army while conducting their service at the corner of Bridge and Front Streets. Constable Evans arrested him and took him to the police station where he still continued to be very noisy. There were several complaints at the station of their own accord, for shelter. These men were in a group in a room in which the cells are located. One of these lodgers, it is thought let Cullen out of his cell to join them. It was not long before Sergeant Scollo heard a great row and when he and Chief Kidd entered the cell room they found Cullen making an assault with a razor on Corporal Mike Devine, a man about 46 years old, who gave his address as Kingston. Cullen was secured and Devine was taken to the station and Devine was taken to the station Sunday morning. Cullen was searched before being locked in the cell, and the non-detection of the razor was owing to it being in the big leather bag which was suspended around his neck by a light leather cord.

In city police court this Monday morning Cullen was remanded in custody for one week. The police desire to make enquiries as to his past record and as desistance to-ward this end fifteen finger prints were taken this morning.

PROJECT OF ESPLANADE IS NEAR CRISIS

If Options Prove Too High Scheme May Be Abandoned

HOPE FOR AID

Special Committee Meets Tonight to Deal With Question

If what are deemed too high prices are asked for properties along the proposed route of the esplanade on the east side of the Moira River, there is every possibility that the proposition will fall through and perhaps the last opportunity will then have disappeared for putting through the proposition which many believe will add to the solution of the question of motorcar congestion and also to the construction of a new business section along one side of the esplanade.

Tonight the city council special committee will meet to discuss the question. It is believed that aid from the relief fund of the Ontario government can be secured for relief work which will make possible the undertaking which might under other conditions be too heavy to be undertaken.

It looks as if it rests with many of the owners of the property whether this new scheme will be constructed.

Options on some of the property have been secured and estimates on the cost of the construction of a river wall and of a temporary roadway have been secured.

Whether or not the result of the parleys on this proposal which has been before the people for some time.

Mosley Assailed With Sticks, Stones

Glasgow, Scotland, Sept. 21. — Sir Oswald Mosley, British Independent political leader, was assailed with sticks and stones last night as he left Glasgow Green, after addressing a crowd of about 40,000 persons.

He was struck on the back of the head with a stone, but only slightly injured. Cries of "Down with the party" that occupied the platform, however received slight repartee cuts, while others had their clothes slashed.

During the address the crowd interrupted Sir Oswald continuously, singing the "Internationale" and "The Red Flag" several times at intervals. Free-for-all fights were in progress in the crowd at various times, and cries of "traitor" greeted the speak as remarks could only be restrained from the Labor Party.

Democrat Favors Beer and Wine Referendum

Washington, D.C., Sept. 21. (AP).—A Democratic platform declaring for light wines and beer and a prohibition referendum is favored by Joseph Shouse, chairman of the Party National Executive Committee.

Other legislation which he would have Democrats advocate in the coming session of Congress includes abolition of the farm board tariff revisions, re-enactment of the Wagner bill to establish employment offices nationally, the five-day week for Federal employees and opposition to the use of the injunction in labor disputes.

Shouse's views, which he described as entirely personal were published by the Woman's National Democratic Club in The Democratic Bulletin.

JUNIOR BOYS ENJOY PICNIC

Went To Oak Lake To Spend the Day in Fun and Frolic

Leaving the Association building shortly after nine o'clock Saturday morning a group of about thirty boys from the junior department, journeyed to Oak Lake in cars and there spent the greater part of the day in fun and frolic. Mr. Gordon the genial proprietor of the Oak Lake resort, very kindly placed his equipment at the disposal of the boys, who were not slow to take advantage of his generosity.

Upon arrival the boys participated in a game of ball followed by several group games all of which made them more keen to eat than to follow. These activities gave the boys proper edge to their appetites and how those weiners and buns soon did disappear. A filling climax to the dinner hour was provided in the large container of ice cream contributed by the local firm of Dickens & Son. The boys satisfied their hunger and the organization by three lusty cheers and a lustier tiger.

Following the refreshment period horse shoe pitching and trips about the lake in the motor boats filled Mr. Ring were the popular diversions until the boys were assembling to start this journey homeward. The success of the outing was enjoyed by the boys, who were all keen to participate in honor of its kind. Mr. Ralston is actively a very large number or out of door activities that will be featured by the Association during the Autumn Season for the benefit of the Junior Department of the Membership.

Piles All Gone

Without Salves or Cutting

Itching, bleeding, protruding piles go quickly and don't come back, if you remove the cause. Bad blood and circulation, or pressure from veins causes piles by making the parts itch. Scratching makes them bleed. Salves and cutting fail because cause remains. Hemorrhoids can actually correct the cause of piles. Dr. Leonhardt's discovered a real internal Pile remedy. After prescribing it for 1,000 patients in his private clinic, he named it HEM-ROID. J. S. McKeown's Drug Store says if you get a bottle of HEM-ROID Tablets must send your Pile misery or money back.

(By the Associated Press)

Faced with the crisis Britain's temporary suspension of the gold standard, the political parties today moved swiftly to protect the international financial structure.

Amsterdam, Johannesburg and Calcutta were closed. The Montreal and Toronto exchanges declared to remain open on a "restricted basis." Trading was to be confined to telephone orders, it was explained, but the official exchange rates will be carried and no official currency quotations were to be made. Trading in stock exchange also opened as usual but the governing board issued a recommendation against it.

While Great Britain's action in abandoning the Gold Redemption Act of 1925 to halt withdrawals of gold came with dramatic suddenness, confidence was expressed in financial circles that Great Britain would weather the financial storm successfully.

J. P. Morgan, in reply to questions by the Associated Press in London, expressed optimism, regarding the situation and declared that Great Britain's action was "hopeful and not a discouraging event."

Other noted financial figures abroad expressed similar views.

In Washington no immediate reaction of major importance was expected and confidence was expressed by treasury officials that Great Britain would extricate herself quickly from the confusion.

Prices on commodity exchanges in London increased and on the metal exchange copper rose more than £2 a ton. The tin was nearly £76 a ton higher while at Liverpool cotton advanced nearly half a penny a pound to just over four pence.

Montreal, Que., Sept. 21 — (By Canadian Press)—"There is no cause for undue alarm, time is an important factor in a situation like this, and will bring about an improvement," was the comment of Sid Beaudry Leman, president of the Montreal Brokers' Association and President of La Banque Canadienne Nationale, commenting today on the announcement of the gold standard in Great Britain.

"This step was apparently taken after long consideration and weighing of various questions," continued Mr. Leman. "The suspension of the gold standard may bring about a more appropriate basis and things will right themselves in a short time."

Mr. Leman expressed the opinion that holders of sterling balances in British banks might suffer some embarrassment if they withdrew immediately.

Montreal, Que., Sept. 21 (By the Canadian Press)—The departure of the Canadian dollar on New York exchange and will be a temporary character and need not disturb investors in the least, was the general public, it was stated here today by Beaudry Leman, president of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

"Such depreciation of our dollar comes in occasional cycles," said Mr. Leman, who is also president of La Banque Canadienne Nationale, "The Canadian dollar was at par before in New York, but it has come back to normal, and it will do so in time. It is in keeping with the general situation and need not cause any concern. There will prove a healing factor in this matter, as the present financial situation."

Montreal, Que., Sept. 21 (by the Canadian Press)—Abolition of "short selling" was announced by the Board of Governors just before the Montreal stock exchange opened for business this morning on a restricted basis. The board read at 9.18 and shortly before the opening gong rang. It was announced a dihat trading would go on, but that short selling and stop loss price which would be not less than the price of last board lot sales.

It was stated that the restrictions would not apply to government bonds.

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 21 — The Winnipeg Grain Exchange opened for business as usual today. No reaction to the British financial situation was evident in the opening prices. Wheat opened fractionally higher than Saturday's close.

London, Sept. 21 (AP.) — Sir Samuel Hoare, Secretary of State for India, today appealed to members of the Indian Round Table committee to do everything possible to maintain the status quo at the time which he announced would be quoted on a sterling basis hereafter instead of on a basis "synonymous" with gold as heretofore.

"There has been a demand for some time of a desire to convert rupees into sterling," Sir Samuel said "the uncertain prospects of such action by India would be removed by just taken place.

"Certain Indians, however, and all who are zealous for India's well being, in the financial progress, must realize the importance of maintaining the stability of her currency.

"They can help by standing by the rupee themselves and by urging their friends to stand by the rupee also."

A break in rupee exchange, in which the structure of Indian finance is built, would mean a financial and economic crisis of the first magnitude, he said, consequences which in these days of crisis it is impossible to foresee."

NO SHORT SELLING

New York, Sept. 21 — The New York exchange governing board issued a notice prohibiting short selling just before the market opened today.

Poland is exporting fully 50 per cent more hams and bacon than a year ago.

YOM KIPPUR

Yom Kippur commenced Sunday Sept. 20th at sundown and continued until sundown today at sundown This day is characterized by a total abstinence of food and water lasting twenty four hours.

Yom Kippur or Day of Atonement is the most solemn day in Israel's calendar. Wherever Jews dwell on this planet this day has the magic power of bringing together the members of Israel and binding them into one solid community.

Whereas the other holidays are characterized by loyalty to the past and remembrance of things, it is different in that there is no victory to commemorate, no feast to recall. It is a day for the individual Jew and for God. A day wherein the Jew of to-day unconsciously ally with a "broken and a contrite heart" to the Jew of the past, and to throw himself at His feet, to ask for mercy in the hands, in order that his future to His care.

"Whatever time the hour and the honeycomb" are the words, the very words which God spoke through His messenger Isaiah, to Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten in the world and He himself and for thy transgressions, and as a cloud thy sins, return unto me, for I have redeemed all."

To this end Judiasm was chosen the simplest possible means and method. It has set apart one day of the year on which Israel shall give himself up unto himself and shall then humbly and meekly plead with his better self, secluded from the world and its turmoil and bidden to examine his conduct the few preceding days with him alone and with the source of his misery, and that, as no one can be held responsible for his sins, repentance and no one has the power to lift him from the depths of misery he himself. In true humility he looks up to the perfect holiness of God and implores God's grace and forgiveness for his sins.

Yom Kippur is the day of Atonement.

In the afternoon a special harmonies of praise was conducted by the Colonel, was enlisted the songsters gave a special musical selection. The Colonel with the members present. After which Col. Obituary

MRS. NANCY E. ELLIS BOWEN

Madoc, Sept. 21—The funeral of the late Mrs. Nancy E. Ellis Bowen, widow of the late Jas. Bowen, was held from her late residence, Durham Street, Madoc, on Saturday, September 19th where service was held at 2 o'clock, conducted by her pastor, Rev. O. W. Rivers. Burial was made in the family plot at Lakeview cemetery.

The late Mrs. Bowen had been a great sufferer and had been ill for years led a very retired life. Her husband predeceased her several years ago. She passed away on Thursday, September 17th, aged 78 years.

She leaves to mourn the loss of a devoted mother, one daughter, Stella, Mrs. Cole of Listowel, and one son, Mr. Ernest Bowen, also one grandson

The funeral services were attended by her old neighbors and friends. Her pastor spoke as the text, "How Long Shall Thy Journey be?" Nehemiah 2:6.

Taking life as a journey, Rev. Mr. Rivers showed that not one can know the length of their journey, for it may be years, or it may be only days, or for a very few hours, therefore all should prepare. He spoke of life as it was where all need a Guide—the Bible; they need a compass—the conscience; an anchor, the Christian's Hope; and a Pilot, the Saviour. Comforting words were given to the mourners, and old favorite hymns were sung, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" and "Abide With Me." Mrs. R. C. Fair played the hymns.

Old friends acted as bearers, and beautiful flowers from many friends were contributed to the deceased's memory.

Sensible Act Says Miss Agnes MacPhail

Toronto, Sept. 21— Greeting the announcement of suspension of the gold standard in England with enthusiasm last night, Agnes McPhail, M.P., declared it the way to a sensible monetary system for the world. She hoped Canada would take similar action and she added that she would like to see Mr. Bennett issue treasury notes to pay all the unemployment fund.

Canada's woman M.P., pointed out that suspension of the gold standard would increase the paper currency and was a much sounder thing to do. It would not be fair to take the bulk of the 600 million dollar deficit out of the rank and file of the people," she added.

BRITAIN ABANDONS GOLD STANDARD TODAY

Withdrawal of Bullion Forces Grave Action by Cabinet of G. Britain

Special Cabinet Meeting Called Sunday Night Acts

WITH RELUCTANCE

Press Believe Gradual Revival Will Follow Action

London, Sept. 21 — Abandoning the gold standard, raising the Bank of England discount rate to 6 per cent and closing all stock exchanges, Great Britain wrestled today with the most critical financial situation since the Great War.

Brought upon his country hence at Chequers by the Prince of Wales, Premier Ramsay MacDonald hastily convened a cabinet meeting last night and it was decided that the Gold Redemption Act, 1925, should be suspended to halt alarming withdrawals of gold by foreign investors.

Parliament is expected to pass the enabling legislation today after which it will go to the King in Scotland for his approval.

Raised to 6 Per Cent.

The bank rate was raised from 4½ per cent. a figure which was set in July. It has not been up to 6 per cent. since October 1, 1929. The highest it has been since the war was 7 per cent. and the highest during the war period was 10 per cent.

Pending action by Parliament, it was decided to close the London exchange and those throughout the country to hold the market stable during the week-end. It was emphasized that banks would be open as usual and that business would continue as usual.

Premier MacDonald issued a statement calling attention to the fact that more than $1,000,000,000 has been withdrawn from the London market since the middle of July and that about $50,000,000 had been withdrawn in Saturday's half day of trading.

"His Majesty's government have arrived at their decision with the greatest reluctance," he said, "but during the last ten days the international financial markets have become demoralized and have been inundating their sterling assets regardless of their intrinsic worth. In the circumstances, there was no alternative to the problem but the financial position of this country by the only means at our disposal."

The suspended section of the gold standard act provides that the Bank of England to sell Gold in bars for £3, 17s. 10½d per troy ounce.

The section read as follows:

"The Bank of England shall be bound to sell to any person who makes demands in that behalf at the head office of the bank, or any branch office hours of the bank, and pay the purchase price in legal tender, gold bullion at the price of three pounds, 17 shillings, 10½ pence per ounce troy of gold of the standard of fineness prescribed for gold coin by the Coinage Act of 1870, but only in the form of bars containing approximately 400 ounces of fine gold.

Chancellor Philip Snowden will broadcast tonight an explanation of the gold situation. The King has been in constant touch with Mr. MacDonald and has thoroughly understood to have been assured that his return to London will not be necessary. The Prince of Wales has temporarily cancelled his plans to go to Balmoral to join the King.

The summoning of an international conference to arrange for better distribution of gold and to place international trade on a better footing was predicted by the press tonight, supporting on the government's action.

The papers expressed the belief that British liquid position would revive under the suspension, that main industries would be stimulated and that unemployment figures would decrease, but exact values would improve.

The public was abjured in the newspapers to keep cool and to avoid extremist views of the situation and was told that large measures of food and raw material in the country assured against dire distress. This view was stressed by Lord Rothermere, proprietor of the Daily Mail, and Herbert Morrison, leader of the Labor opposition in Parliament, who said that the financial crisis would improve.

"The situation calls for confidence not despair—for steadiness, not panic," he said. "The fundamentals of the nation is unimpaired and if we remain steady the banks and trade shall more speedily surmount the difficulties."

Frequent emphasis was laid by the press on the fact that the crisis was described as hoarding of gold in the United States and France but it was pointed out that in the circumstances rather than to deliberately withdraw gold from London in this connection: "America couldn't help it because the balance was so heavily in her favor as a consequence of the enormous sums being her as a result of the war, but France went gold mad."

AFRAID PROOF WILL DERAIL

Two of Canada's financial leaders, Sir Charles Gordon, president of the Bank of Montreal, and Sir Herbert Holt, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, President declared their belief the Dominion would not be adversely affected by the British Government's measures.

Stimulate Trade

British newspapers commented as follows:

Daily Mail—"The suspension of the gold standard will stimulate every trade and industry and take a load off the shoulders of all."

Daily Herald—"A wise and salutary step. It will restore the French and American Banks and Governments to reconsider the whole problem of the gold standard."

The Telegraph—"Events have been too strong for the Government. It is a moral certainty that Great Britain won't go off the gold standard alone."

Times—"The action is regrettable, but unavoidable. There is no cause for panic."

Will Find Way Out

London, Sept. 21 — Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George, veteran Liberal leader, issued the following statement last night which was learned of the sudden turn in the serious financial situation: "In the nation remains steady and united we shall pull through all right. Our resources are quite adequate to meet the situation, but a tactical fight among ourselves at this juncture would be unpatriotic lunacy. The mere threat of such a fight has precipitated this second, and grave, crisis. British common sense, if it is given a chance, will find a way out."

Sir Thomas' View

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 21—Sir Thomas White, former Minister of Finance, commenting on Great Britain's suspension of the gold standard, last night declared that the British government had assured or given very full consideration to the matter and that he had no doubt they have acted wisely. The despatch would indicate, he said, that the British government had taken control of British Foreign Exchange purchases as it had during the war.

Britain's Vast Resources

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 21 — The suspension of the gold standard by Great Britain would protect the British financial position, declared Hon. C. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner to London, who is at present on a visit to Canada.

There is no doubt in my mind that Britain will come through the crisis satisfactorily because she had tremendous resources not only in her own country but in her interests abroad. The very fact that such a serious situation developed so suddenly will stiffen the back and harden the determination of British people as a whole to see this through," said the former Premier of Ontario, commenting last night on the situation.

Canada on Gold Standard

Ottawa, Sept. 21 — The government of Canada proposes to maintain the gold standard. This was the brief statement of Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister and acting Minister of finance, last night in respect to news from London of suspension of the gold Redemption Act.

"What Great Britain may do is for the government of Great Britain," declared Premier Bennett. "As for Canada, we propose to maintain the gold standard."

The Prime Minister added that he had nothing further to say on the matter.

Under the act a note of the Dominion of Canada is redeemable in gold. It is also provided that there shall be no restriction on the movement of gold in Canada. Canada is now on the gold basis and a note of the Dominion may be exchanged for gold bullion anywhere.

GOLD IN CARIBOO COUNTRY

Victoria, Sept. 21—Gold to the value of hundreds of millions of dollars is still to be found in the Cariboo country, according to Dean R. W. Brock, of the University of British Columbia, who recently conducted a survey of the mineral resources of that section of the Provincial Government.

GOLD STANDARD

(by the Associated Press)

The gold standard of exchange is normally in use by virtually every civilized nation of the world. It is predicated on the fact that paper money of a country's bank of issue is redeemable in gold on demand.

The suspension of gold payments in Great Britain means that the Bank of England is not bound now under an act of Parliament of 1925 to buy gold bullion of stipulated standards for three pounds, 17 shillings, 10½ pence per troy ounce. This in effect has resulted in the British pound sterling being equivalent normally to $4.86 2-8.

In the foreign exchange market, recently with the pound sterling below its gold parity, in relation to other currencies, it has been profitable for the bank to buy sterling pounds in the market, convert them into gold at parity, and then convert the gold into other currencies by exporting the gold. It resulted in this artificial freight by means of scientific sale of dollars for British citizens.

In 1919, it was decided to remove the support, and the sterling dropped, until finally in 1919 it hit a low of $3.19.

The gold standard has been adhered to almost every country since the war.

MIDDLE-AGED MAN SOUGHT

May Be Clue in Solution of Murder'of B. P. Collings

New York, N.Y., Sept. 21 — Suffolk County authorities expressed hope today that the arrest of a middle-aged married man might solve the mystery of the death of Benjamin P. Collings in Long Island found.

This man, who Mrs. Collings says told her he had three children and was married to an ignorant woman, took her aboard a stolen motor boat after throwing her husband into the water from his cruiser Penguin, a week ago Wednesday.

Detectives today were awaiting word from Charlotte, N.C., police about two men who registered at a hotel there on September 3 and 7. An anonymous letter to District Attorney Alexander G. Blue of Suffolk County, said the two men would know something about the crime. Authorities did not take the letter too seriously, as hundreds of crank notes have come to both Mrs. Collings and to the police.

Mr. Blue returned from a week-end yachting cruise today to pick up the threads of the investigation carried along by his assistants, Fred Mendes and Peter De Martin, New York private detective.

MARMORA SCHOOL BOY SHOT DUCK HUNTING AT CROWE LAKE

James Rice, Jr., Was Pulling Gun Toward Him, Discharging Same

DIES IN PETERBORO

Rushed to Hospital But Succumbs After Admittance

Marmora, Sept. 21 (By Special Correspondent).—James Rice, Jr., 17, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Rice, Marmora, was accidentally shot in the abdomen by his own weapon, while duck hunting in a bay in the north end of Crowe Lake, Saturday, and died about four hours after reaching the general hospital in Peterboro, losing consciousness on the way to that institution.

Eye witness of the shooting the lad was accompanied by Ford Wood house, who, after the shooting took place, went to Mr. Rice's residence and told Provincial Constable Percy Gray, Anderson Constable with Drs. Thompson and Crawford rushed to the scene. They say it was conscious when they arrived nearly one hour and a half after the accident and he continued to be conscious until nearing Peterboro. There will be no inquest.

Shot By Own Gun

The victim with Mr. Woodhouse, went to Crowe Lake early Saturday morning for duck shooting. The lad had shot a few ducks when the accident happened. Rice moved further over the bay near a large old stump and he was dragging the gun toward him by the barrel, when it discharged, the shot enter ing his side and abdomen. He fell over the stump and young Woodhouse left the boat after reaching him as comfortable as possible running to Marmora for medical aid. The fatality nearly created a scandal according to the companion. The deceased was a fine, clean-cut, promising young man and had many friends in the district in which he lived. Last year he attended the Belleville Collegiate Institute where he was making preparations to return for another term. Left to mourn his loss are his parents, one brother George, and two sisters, Evelyn and Kathleen, both at home.

The funeral will be held in the Anglican Church Monday afternoon, the deceased being a member of that church. Interment will be made in Marmora cemetery.

COWARD PLAY COMES BACK

"The Young Idea" Shows Humor Retains Freshness

London, Sept. 21—(By The Canadian Press)—The revival of Noel Coward's old comedy, "The Young Idea" at St. Martin's Theatre, under the management of Gilbert Miller, has been well received by critics and public. "It is true," as Mr. Rea said, "as the fall of the curtain that this early comedy of Mr. Coward's bears no marks of his later years." Times said: "What weaknesses it has are not the weaknesses of age. It is not dull or having that pleasant challenge and impudence which belong not to a particular season but to Mr. Coward himself and to no other. It has freshness because the impudence is typical of style is stronger upon it than the marks of any moment's tasy trick.

The audience at the St. Martin's greatly enjoyed it and with reason. True, it is not, as Hay Fever is, consistent in its mood. Already Mr. Coward is to be seen swerving, as he proceeds, between one and two of his later pieces, from mocking Cynicism and comedy, to mocking self, but here the swerves are brief and the play moves briskly with the story of the young man and the girl who encouraged plotting to reconcile their mother and father is allowed to move freely to its own delicious extravagance and to very nearly broken into by contrary solemnities.

The performance is, moreover, extremely accomplished. Cecil Parker very dexterously keeps the husband's fluctuations on the right side of wit; Miss Jane Millican contributes the second wife's ill-temper and Miss Iris Hoey the first wife's erratic charm; the two children are given the authentic artificial impudence by Miss Ann Trevor and Arthur Macrae, upon whom the mantle of Mr. Coward's own acting has unmistakably descended, but who wears it with an air of his own; and all the lesser sketches are admirably done, Cecil Ramage giving a persuasive ease to Cicely's lover, Miss Margaret Halsey a very clear and shrewd outline to the most vigorous of the hunting women, and A. R. Whatmore supplying a little stolid decoration of his own. A very amusing evening, made the more amusing by Miss Elizabeth Pollock's printed mimicry which precedes the first act."

A more efficient and rapid machine, the pulsator, has been adopt ed in Sweden, Spain, and the cities of Canada, and also shakes down the concrete sidewalls there.

ARCTIC CAMP RELICS FOUND

Abandoned Camp of Noble Rescuers Struck

Stockholm, Sweden, Sept. 21 (C. P.).—The remarkable preserving qualities of ice are once more evidenced in the recent discovery by Swedish Arctic expedition, headed by Professor Nils Ahlmann, of Stockholm University, after many months search for the "Quest" in the icy waters between Spitsbergen and Franz Josef Land. The expedition landed at Foyn Island and there struck the abandoned camp of Captain Ejnar Mikkelsen, Danish-Canadian explorer, and Van Donghen, the Norwegian who left the "Quest" with Mikkelsen to rescue General Nobile's Italian expedition, but who were marooned on Foyn Island and were saved from starvation when finally saved by Swedish fliers.

The men from the "Quest" at the abandoned camp found a damaged tent, a Polar sleigh, a photographic apparatus, a fur watch, a hip-flask, a Primus stove and various other articles. Everything had been preserved by the ice, so much so that the films in the camera when drawn up at once started going. Some of the photographs in the camera was not damaged. A pocketbook, belonging to Italian Norwegian bank-notes, contained Norwegian bank-notes, contained notes, which still were decipherable. The tent rope was as strong as if it had been bought yesterday. All the food left on board by the "Quest" and will in order to be restored to their rightful owners.

The "Quest" started in order to discover traces of the Nobile expedition.

PAGAN FORCES BUSY IN WORLD

Selfishness and Self Sufficiency Are Driving Forces

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 21.—Selfishness and self-sufficiency are the two great forces of the pagan world, declared Ven. Archdeacon P. C. C. Cosgrave, Vancouver, B. C., probationer of the Governor House, General Synod of the Church of England, preaching at St. John the Matthews Church. Pagan forces Christianity today, the speaker asserted.

The Church of England cannot tell the world something about God, he said. "It might as well close its doors," he said. "Natural man knows not of the things of the Spirit. We need, the sixth sense of the realization of the Spiritual."

The spiritual side of life must be given a chance to work, declared Archdeacon Cosgrave. "Because there is no need of religion," he declared, "let us go on with education and research and we will be the greatest people in the world." These things were not enough, he said.

BARN AND CROP ARE BURNED THRESHING HELPER INJURED

Frank Richardson of Raw don Suffers Heavy Loss

MACHINE SAVED

Stirling, Sept. 21 (by Special Correspondent)—Disaster which came it is believed, from a threshing machine setting the Lambert barn of grain in the barn of Frank Richardson, two miles northeast of Stirling, late this afternoon, caused a disastrous fire in which the barn, the grain which came and the threshing outfit. The barn, its contents consisting of all the season's crop, nine pigs, a full line of machinery, a new electric milking machine, recently purchased, also 2000 bushels of grain from last year's crop was destroyed, the loss totaling $6,000, only partially covered by insurance. The threshing machine owned by Frank Gilbert was saved but only after difficulty.

There was a high wind blowing at the time and it was only with difficulty that other buildings about the premises were saved. Scarcity of water also was against them but the men engaged in threshing augmented by hundred of neighbors finally confined the blaze to the barn proper. It is understood that Mr. Mitts was daring in his attempts to save the thresher by safety from the barn. He rushed into the seething mass of flames and fastened a rope on the rear end of the threshing machine, while a team of horses pulled it to safety. The fire, spread quickly once the grain and chaff on the barn floor was ignited.

THE THIEF UP TO DATE

Every advance brings its cloud. The tourist traffic is generally considered a good thing and few doubt that. But with the good, the indifferent, who believe this, there are the sharp-class who profit criminally by the presence of the tourists. Some of these are local to the locality where the tourists are robbed but in many instances the thieves are specialists in crime and cannot be distinguished from tourists because they dress in the approved tourist style nattily garbed. This is the kind of man who takes baggage out of cars and for all the police know he is the owner of the car and baggage. Police would be in endless trouble if they interfered with every man looking like a tourist taking luggage out of a car.

Robbing the tourist is not of course so likely to take place in the smaller places —at least on this scale. The thief may make a little haul but the well dressed thief does not hang around hotels about or in other small places. Toronto and Montreal are the places where the take tourist flourishes.

The Montreal Star tells the story of the operation of the new thief. "When an owner gets out of his car and does not lock it, that is the signal for all hands to get to work. Waving to a confrere, the two linen knickered men walk up in leisurely fashion, laughing and joking about Montreal attractions and comparing other obvious tourists pleasantries, the while removing everything valuable. Then they walk away to a room nearby, perhaps in some place marked Tourists Accommodated and stow their stolen luggage in their rooms.

"Another method of theft is to go and lean against cars, gently trying the handles. As soon as one yields, the man looks around to see that no one is observing and then enters boldly, taking away every portable object.

"The most fragrant theft has been the purloining of $3,000 worth of valuables this week from an American."

The thief would keep up with the trend of things and he generally keeps a pretty fair but dangerous step close after progress, though many of his is caught.

When the world goes aeroplaning it is to be expected that the air thief will be around looking for chances.

TENNESSEE STICKS TO GENESIS

"I'm getting tired of having people of other States refer to Tennessee as the State with the monkey statute," said Representative Stewart M. Murray in support of his repeal bill.

"Uncle Billy" Matthews, oldest member of the House, said he said that "if the doctrine of evolution is right, our Bible is wrong."

"I don't know whether man evoluted from a monkey or not," exclaimed Representative Robert P. Brown, speaking against repeal.

"I believe that God created the universe and that He made man. The law has nothing to do with your religion or belief. If you want to believe you are descended from a monkey, it is all right with me. Or you may continue to believe that God created man in His finite wisdom.

"This law is slumbering peacefully on our statute books and will never do any harm to a single individual in this broad land. It is not as important to worry about how you came here as what is going to become of you hereafter."

Representative repeal, W. Y. Boswell declared that the evolution statute "has done more to injure the good name of the State and to indict the intelligence of Tennessee than any bill that was ever passed."

But the Tennessee House of Representatives stood fast by its "monkey statute," reports the Associated Press, which gives us a bit of the debate preceding defeat of the repeal bill by a vote of 58 to 14 .The theory of evolution may not be taught in any Tennessee schools wholly or partly supported by State funds.

"Tennessee," comments the Chattanooga Times bitterly, "stands before the world to-day as a State confronting with ignorance, narrow-mindedness, and headbinding disposition in which the anti-evolutionist law is enforced and repealed."

Other leading Tennessee papers are silent on the subject.

THESE BIG MARKETS

Belleville market is one of the crowded places of a Saturday nowadays. There is no room for under-produced stuff—the farmlands hereabouts. Prices are of course inordinately low and offer seemingly little encouragement to the producer. But the farmer's business is to produce and he goes right on producing.

The farmer will heave a sigh of relief when there is a little closer approximation between the prices of the produce he sells and of the products he buys. When that day comes he will have much greater buying power.

SMILING BACK
By Alice Michaelis

The days slip by so gaily,
No sense of loss or lack,
If through the hours when care would come
You just keep smiling back.

If you but hold in memory.
Some joy that smiled at you,
And keep that joy in smiling back again
Your hope will bloom anew!

For hope is like a flower
That needs the sunlight's glow,
And every little smile of yours
Will help your hope to grow.

When troubles would defeat you
And all the sky looks black,
Recall some smiling yesterday
And just keep smiling back.

MAYOR JIMMY WALKER of New York City, is credited with the unfortunate habit of being late for many of his appointments, a very bad habit in a public man and one which has called forth columns of denunciation from the press of Manhattan, for if there is anything a newspaper man stands for, more than anything else, it is punctuality.—note how the various editors come out exactly on time every day. While in London this week Mayor Walker kept Mahatma Gandhi, sage, philosopher and statesman, from India, waiting several hours, for his appearance to keep an appointment. In fact Mayor Jimmy failed to show up at all, preferring, apparently, the attractions of London night life to a talk with one of the world's strangest and most interesting characters in which he could have learned a lot. Mayor Walker's constant plaint to overseas newspaper interviews is that New York city is misunderstood abroad. No wonder.

FIRST APPLES RIPEN ON BEAVER LODGE TREES

One swallow does not make a summer, nor does a few specimens of one apple give a district pomological reputation. Yet the ripening of one apple on each of two standard fruit trees in the experimental farm at Beaver Lodge, Peace River district, is not without its importance. The world may be forgiven for not having recognized at the moment the fact that when Sir John Franklin and Ford turned out his first finished car. But everyone must appreciate that where two apples have ripened, productive orchards may follow, and to the two-apple crop is the production of fifteen pounds of ripe crab apples on the trees of the experimental farm.

Apple growing, in its march towards the North Pole, has hitherto been thought to have reached its northern limit in the country around Edmonton. The farthest north record is now transferred another 15 degrees to bring hope to the hearts of the homesteaders who located in the Peace River country after the railway was realized in apples that grade No. 1, but not to hard.—Toronto Telegram.

CITIES AND CENSUS

Welland was the smallest of 24 cities in 1921. It has gained 1,827 souls in still later days, a population of 10,627. Woodstock was and is next smallest, but at 11,384 has added 2,000 souls since one-third of the distance between it and the next on the list, Owen Sound, which the census gives 12,717. Brantford is given 27,557, or 4.3 per cent. in the 10 years Galt is next below with 13,571, an advance of only 353 in the decade. That city, by the way, has quite lengthened its city limits. Above Galt is Belleville, with 13,798, having gained about 500 since 1911 and is Woodstock. East Windsor has passed all the rest, with 17,447, just below Chatham, which gained slightly less than 1,000 since. Another new city has stepped into the line-up and Fort Arthur 21st place—North Bay, with 15,478, is one of about 50 per cent. St. Thomas, which was 11th and 12,760, is now scarcely now 20th having lost 487. It is the only Ontario city to go back in population.

Highest rate of population gain, among all these municipalities, was in the case of Oshawa, 46 per cent. Windsor's population increased 43 per cent.; that of North Bay 44 per cent. Brantford 38, Hamilton 33, and Niagara Falls 28. East, west, north and south are so rapidly screwing cities.—Woodstock Sentinel Review.

DO WE THINK ABUNDANCE?

The ordinary man, judging by what he is thinking about, must believe that today there is an overplus of everything and that we supply human wants. Production is so great that the thought that a million must be laid off, for there seems no room for them, during the moustaches, the monocle, the suave manner, the casual, half-swallowed phrases belonged to the actor, but after Pawtucket they belonged as much to the public type partly realized from fiction and cartoon had come to life."

YOUNG FOLK OF TODAY, could they be transported back to the life of fifty years ago and less, would be astonished to find that the families who kept a horse and buggy in the country were very few and rated as well-to-do. In fact you could count them on the fingers of one hand, generally. Today the families without automobiles are conspicuous for their scarcity.

KAY FRANCIS AT BELLE IN STIRRING TALKIE

Miss Pearl Dreserwave Tonight Featuring three stars of exceptional ability and boasting a story of unusual theme and treatment, Radio Picture's widely heralded dramatic hit reaches Belleville screen at Belle Theatre today, for two days engagement, matinee daily.

Beautiful Kay Francis, whose rise to screen stardom has been deserved and rapid, Ricardo Cortez, manly villain of the talkies and Paul Cavanagh, notable stage star, play the principal roles.

The story, from Kate Jordan's novel "The Next Corner" deals with the mental torment of a young woman reared in the pace and quiet of an English countryside who goes to Paris and struggles against conscience and impulse when an ardent lover attempts to sweep her off her feet.

Herbert Brenon, director of such screen classics as "Beau Geste," "Sorrel and Son," and "Beau Ideal," has handled the production with notable success, according to advance information. Brenon considers it one of his major triumphs.

An unusually competent supporting cast includes such favorites as Nance O'Neil, Ruth Weston, John St. Polis, and Adrienne Ambler's court.

A group of exceptional Junior features have been arranged for exhibition on the same program including, Sir. Harry Lauder in a novel and entertaining Sonilogue, "Rosmin' in the Gloamin", Pearl Sterling in a funny comedy "Pie Eyed" and Pathe News and Pupular Fox Sund News introducing, "The world at large."

GREAT FIRE AT THE CAPITOL

The most thrilling fire, forming the climax of a most thrilling and dramatic melodrama, reused the audience to frantic cheering and boisterous acclamation at the Capitol, and had the same effect, without the cheers, on the extra large audience in the evening.

Under the apt title "The Fourth Alarm," and starring cheerful Nick Stuart, alarmingly pretty Ann Christy, and that fine old character actor, Tom Santschi, the story of heroism, dedicated to the 'heros of the flames', was unfolded to the spectators with a realism that was positively breath-taking.

With the News, a splendid program is made complete, and will be running in the Capitol for the last time to-night.

BIG NAMES IN CAST OF CECIL B. DEMILLE'S "THE SQUAW MAN" COMING

Cecil B. DeMille's latest production of the celebrated Edwin Milton Royle play, "The Squaw Man," which created theatrical history at the time, 1921, with the largest group of film stars ever placed in a single picture. The list included Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Kosloff and Raymond Hatton.

"The Squaw Man," which will open Wednesday at the Belle Theatre for two days, offers an equally imposing group in the current talking picture version of the famous Western Milton Royle stage play.

Divided Locale

The adaption to the screen was made by Lenore Coffee and Beulah Marie Dix, both of whom had gained supplying the dialogue. The thrilling events of the story divide their locale fifty-fifty between a castle in England, and a cattle ranch in Arizona.

Warner Baxter, Lupe Velez, Eleanor Boardman and Charles Bickford head the large cast, which also includes Roland Young, Fay Wray, Raymond Hatton, Julia Faye, DeWitt Jennings, Al Ferrell and McDonald, Dickie Moore and others.

The tale is one of inter-racial strife and love, and the scenes of "Ben Hur" are listed as the two most popular and widely played dramas ever made into a motion picture version of "The Squaw Man" permits a breadth of scene and action investiture in the western parts, impossible on the stage.

"TOO YOUNG TO MARRY"

"Now, if I'd married Chester Armstrong.....

Thus the constant ruminating with which poor Mrs. Humphreys had to put up from his nagging better-half.

"I'm going to marry Bill, as soon as he's free," she declared, declaring the daughter, and poor old Pa is never consulted.

"Let's get your father's consent" Bill.

"Oh! Nobody takes any notice of father!"

And even the worm will turn and when Pa Bumpstead feels his feet, the party becomes wild-eyed and after the first shock, consents. Then we look at Pa with awe and wonderment.

In "Too Young To Marry," which is one of those pictures which may be a page out of any family's life, we see the formation of a delightful story. Mrs. Humphreys is a henpecked to a nicety, but the final peck makes Mr. Humphreys head, Emma Dunn, as Ma Bumpstead, feels high.

The daughter, Elaine, is played by Loretta Young, and Grant Withers as poor-but-honest Bill. Richard Tucker as Chester Armstrong character, and Charles Sellon as Grant-Admiral fection.

"Too Young To Marry" opens at the Capitol to-morrow and will play for two days, matinee daily.

THE THINKER

I think of such sheerling things
As I go walking down the street.
I think how water makes have grow
To decorate my pointed feet.

I think how I have set to work
The brain wheels of industry
I think how transient silkworms toil
That I may have pink lingerie.
For me the goldsmith learns his craft,
For me the ox and lamb have bled,
For me the silver wheat goes down
To fly my crying mouth with bread:

And seven little juggle cats
Leap from their lives the other day
That I might have a striped coat,
So you would cock one eye my way.

LIBRARY CORNER

Three Canadian books of note are among the new books at the Public Library, this week. A "Mounty's Wife" by Lula Munday is the life story of "one attached to the Force but not of it." Dedicated to the wives of the Royal North West Mounted Police, Mrs. Munday's volume begins with the story of her wedding, when she became attached to the Force by the ring of a Mounty. She has many stories to tell of advenenures in the far north, and in the wilds of Alberta, of the rugby hardships and pleasures which are a part of the every day life of a Mounty's wife.

Agnes Ukwahsis' "Canada's study in assimilation" by Charles W. Young is the story of the social adjustment of these new Canadian people, numbering many tens and three hundred thousands. Mr. Young describes the customs, laws and life of the Red Indians, which differ a great deal from those of the average Canadian. (Helen R. Y. Reid, chairman of the Division of Immigration, who edited the volume advises "To conquer your ignorance and your prejudices, and to solve our racial problems by understanding them. Pa is never going to be wise to us for the newcomers and ourselves."

W. J. Loudon has written a biography of an old school friend of his, Thomas Tyrrell, known as Tyrrell—"A Canadian Geologist." Tyrrell, following a brilliant career at a student at the University of Toronto, where he graduated in Biology and Geology obtained a position in the Geological Survey of Canada, along the line of making exploratory work throughout the far north. His hopes were realized and his life was spent in research work in the Rockies, the Barren lands, and Northern Canada. His accurate maps and information was invaluable. The story of this scientist and pioneer affords good reading in that it describes his astronomical and geological research and gives a keen insight into the character of the man himself.

Kirby Hall, editor of the World Tomorrow has written in his book "A Liberal Refrain" a study of the origins, results, and prevention of war. His thesis is that the interests of world peace is divided into four main topics: 1. Causes of the world war, 2 Results of the World war, 3 Strategy of the world for peace, 4 A strategy of national defence. Dr. Page has based his theories on the opinions of the national leaders of all countries and has issued a book of great interest and national defense based on non-militaristic considerations. The book is a well-ordered and practical presentation of the whole background of peace and war.

"The Life of an Ant" is the culmination of Maurice Maeterlinck's life long studies of the social insects. He describes the ants as he would a human being and his descriptions are full of kindness, intelligence and happiness. The book is a splendid example of the simplicity and originality of treatment followed by this writer. Mr. Maeterlinck's previous books on insect life "The Life of the Bee" and "The Life of the White Ant" are well known and well known...Readers will find this book a delightful companion and a development of the author's own interesting philosophy.

CANADA SENDS DELEGATES TO PACIFIC MEET

Hon Vincent Massey Heads Delegation to Conference

MEET IN CHINA

Discussions Will Embrace Very Wide Field of Interest

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 21 (C.P.) — In two portions—sailing from Vancouver—a large and representative Canadian delegation is going to the fourth biennial conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It will be held at Hangchow, China, from October 31 to November 4.

The chairman of the Canadian delegation two years ago was Hon. N. W. Rowell, K.C., of Toronto, who is chairman of the executive council of the Canadian Institute. Mr. Rowell, however is unable to make the journey this year. Hon. Vincent Massey, former Canadian minister to the United States, is chairman of the present delegation. He has devoted much time to preparation for the conference. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Massey.

Associated with Mr. Massey as delegation are: W. M. Birks, the chairman of the Montreal Branch of the Canadian Institute; C. J. Burchell, K.C., prominent counsel of Halifax, N.S.; Professor Smith and Professor Norman Mackenzie of the University of Toronto; C. A. Bowman, editor of the Ottawa Citizen, and a member of the recent Radio Commission which toured Canada and other countries a year or two ago; Dr. J. MacKinnon Bell of Ottawa, F.R.G.S.; Harry Sifton, of Toronto; James Ramsay, retired business man of Edmonton, who is now in the Far East on one of his periodical visits to the Orient, and F. O. Brown, Vancouver, chairman of the British Columbia division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. George Pulford, of Brockville, and Alan Gibbons, of Toronto, will accompany the party in a secretarial relationship. It is expected that one or two additional members will attend. The Canadian will be joined en route by a number from Great Britain, United States and other points, including Sir Reginald P. Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. Lionel Curtis, Miss Alexander, Professor W. G. S. Adams and Mrs. Adams, Professor P. M. Roxby, Mr. A. D. Morris, Mr. W. C. Oswin and Dr. E. C. Carpenter of Great Britain and Professor Quigley, Miss Catherine Porter and Miss Ada Comstock, President of Radcliffe College, of the United States.

These conferences, instituted about six years ago, have been steadily increasing in interest and importance not only because of the representative character of those who attend from the nations surrounding the Pacific and the vital matters they discuss, but because of the very thorough research work which has been proceeding under the direction of the secretariat into the fundamental problems underlying present and possible future unity in the lands of the Pacific. The gathering this year has special interest because it is being held in the storm-centre of the Far East, where those in attendance from other countries will have exceptional opportunities to collect data and observations extremely helpful in the consideration of the problems involved. The meeting will be under the presidency of Jerome Davis of New York.

The matters for discussion at the conference will embrace a very wide field, the two major themes being "International Economic Relations in the Pacific" and "International Political Relations in the Pacific." Industrialized forms of slavery of Europe and America in former days, which its Western kind of peonage days connects with this word The difference is, short of all, that slaves in Ethiopia are not deprived of anything to hope for in life as were their former brethren in the West. Our Christian people do not wish to see slaves hold posts, own property, embrace Christianity, and learn trades, and in this respect it is a people that deserves praise."

Financial reforms were to be inaugurated to ameliorate the economic situation and erect a basis for the final abolition of slavery and for the gradual improvement of the condition of the free servants, workmen, and agricultural laborers, who are so much more numerous than the slaves.

ETHIOPIA WILL ABOLISH SLAVERY DECLARES EMPEROR

"Progressive Suppression" Is to Be Method Used

2,000,000 SLAVES

London, Sept. 21.—(By The Canadian Press)—A pronouncement on the abolition of slavery in Abyssinia, where it is estimated there are 2,000,000 slaves, has been received from the Emperor of Ethiopia or Abyssinia, His Imperial Majesty Haile Silassie I, by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society. This is a reply to a letter sent by the Society to the Emperor which included an offer to send to Abyssinia a competent deputation to confer with the Emperor's government upon the whole question.

Expressing agreement with the principles set out by the Society in their letter, the Emperor adds:

"We confirm to you that we are definitely decided to improve progressively the regulations concerning the status of slavery and to suppress slavery altogether. We say we are definitely decided with reference to the task we have undertaken for freeing the slaves still owned by the public, and not with reference to traffic in slaves, which we have already prohibited by decree. In some of the worst cases we have even gone so far as to inflict the death penalty.

"We have no doubt that you realize the seriousness of our efforts and the labor it has cost us to obtain the preliminary results known to you, and to lay the foundations of the great emancipation work. Certain persons, forgetful of the fact that slavery was once a universal institution and probably unconscious of what we have already accomplished or are about to accomplish, exaggerate for their own private ends when referring to Ethiopia.

"We are confident that you who have made it your special duty to study these problems know better than these sensation-mongers what a delicate task it is to abolish this old custom, and how over-hasty steps may easily have unhappiness consequences. History shows that time is an important factor for the liberation of slaves.

"Although the status of slavery still exists in Ethiopia, it would undoubtedly be an unjust thing to put Failing in his attempt to set up a Fascist regime in Austria, the former Minister rof the Interior, Prince von Starhremberg (above) was traced to his castle at Hochcharter and arrested. Reputed to be one of the wealthiest landowners in Austria, the Prince resides in a prison cell in Vienna for his part in the "putsch" or Ethiopian slavery on a par with the industrialized forms of slavery of Europe and America in former days, which its Western kind of peonage days connects with this word The difference is, short of all, that slaves in Ethiopia are not deprived of anything to hope for in life as were their former brethren in the West. Our Christian people do not wish to see slaves hold posts, own property, embrace Christianity, and learn trades, and in this respect it is a people that deserves praise."

CASTLE TO JAIL

Steamer Noronic is Laid Up For Winter

Sarnia, Sept. 21.—The steamer Noronic, flagship of the Canada Steamship Lines' Great Lakes Fleet, docked at the Jowsboro wharf of the Company today and will be tied up for the winter. The Noronic completed one of its most successful seasons in passenger and package freight transportation, and returned today from a special excursion trip between Detroit and Toronto. The Huronic, which sailed upbound Saturday, with freight, and the Harmonic, which is at the head of the Lakes, will continue in service until the end of the season.

Have you time to read this about the DEPRESSION

WHEN THE TOP OF THE HILL is in sight

ARE YOU PUSHING—OR JUST sitting tight

WHILE thousands of Canadians are out of employment—and many businesses are at a standstill . . . and Governments are courageously planning to make work to relieve coming winter's distress—there is another—and brighter—side of the picture. The problem is being tackled—somebody is "doing something about it". Better times are nearer than just-round-the-corner—they are in sight!

For every one person who is unemployed—there are scores who have jobs—pay envelopes—salaries—incomes—stipends—dividends. Saving deposits in Canada are greater by $40,000,000 than a year ago. Canadian Firms will in September pay out over $15,000,000 in Dividends. And even though many firms are not piling up the profits of 1928-9, thousands of factories are working. Stores are buying—railways are hauling—places of amusement are thronged—radios shout from every house.

Somebody has money—somebody is spending.

The old 'bus of business is near the top of the long hill of Depression. It needs a strong, concerted push to the top. But who is to do the pushing? Certainly not the unemployed—they can't do it. It is for those who are in jobs—in positions—in office.

In almost every line of merchandise today's prices are lower—values greater—than at any time in the last 20 years. Today is the purchaser's opportunity—an opportunity to secure those things you need now—or will need in the near future. A New York Bank is reported as advising its 250,000 depositors to "reserve against emergencies—at least six months' salary, "and with the surplus" make careful purchases of things you want for permanent use, while prices remain low".

This Bank also says—

"In our opinion the millions of savings and thrift depositors in this country have it in their power to change the whole aspect of industrial and trade conditions."

We make no comment—we quote it only as an evidence of the Bank's courage to make such a proposal.

The fact is, if commodities are bought, someone must receive wages for making them, . . . someone thus has money to spend—has money to buy things. When commodities are bought, someone must make them—someone must receive wages . . . (well, there we are, right in the circle again).

The two busy B's of Buying and Business must be twins!

Did you ever stop to figure out the wages you create when you buy a piece of upholstered furniture (for instance). Who cuts the lumber—who makes the glue—the springs—the fabrics—the moss—the fibre—the felt—the cotton and silk materials. Men and women! Who carts all these to the factory—who makes the motor trucks—the truck's tires—who supplies the gas—who serves out the lubricants. Who prints the catalogue—who photographs the chesterfield—who makes the paper—ink—and who binds it. Who sells the Furniture to the Retailer—types the order. Who makes the dress the typist's wages buy. Who sells the machine the uses—ribbons and repairs. Who sorts the letter in the Post Office—delivers it—. Who sells the furniture to you—who delivers it. (We'll be mentioning motor car tires again, if we don't watch out!). Who makes the sales slip—pencil—and tags—the string—paper—crates. Who pays rent—employs window dressers and window cleaners.

It makes one dizzy to think of all the people and wages involved in the purchase of any commodity . . . artists and artizans—managers and mechanics—drivers and drovers—clerks and clergymen. Multiply by ten thousand transactions and the total PUSH is staggering in its force.

Surely those who are able—those who possess the money—those who have steady employment should, RIGHT NOW, get-out-of-the-bus, and PUSH!

So if you need any Commodity or Service—and possess the money to purchase it—buy NOW—and PUSH!

ST. HILDA'S CAPTURE BROCKVILLE

Great Overseas Band Delights Large Audience

(Brockville Recorder)

Destroying all popular conceptions as to what might be accomplished by a musical organization composed solely of "brasses", St. Hilda's Band last night astounded an audience numbering in the neighborhood of 600 in a Wellesley programme given in the armouries under the auspices of the Brockville Rifles.

The audience included many from the surrounding district. There were teachers as well as students and listeners lovers of music present. The audience was thoroughly appreciative of the theater, for all were in a common footing, drawn by the wonderful reputation which preceded St. Hilda's Band on its first (and let's hope not its last) visit to the Island City. In every manner imaginable St. Hilda's Band lived up to all expectations as the premier band of the Empire, with a record dating back to 1860 and an outstanding career of triumph after triumph in the British musical world. No less than five commercial records have been given by St. Hilda's Band before, their Majesties. Every number was a gem, played as a gold and silver medalist. Brilliantly conducted by Miss Jane Oliver the band played a long programme through for hours from eight o'clock. The time passed by on musical wings and the audience was reluctant to leave when the concert was completed.

The band had a platform in the east end of the armories and the acoustical properties of the building were better than anticipated.

From its first number the overture "Zampa" by Herold, until the finale, the famous "Hallelujah" chorus of Handel, the band had its large audience spellbound.

The accented passages were perhaps best carried forth by the brick walls of the armouries but these were given delightful with the spiritliness, lightness, and freedom of the more calmed and quieted sequences in the selections of musical compositions which they rendered.

Bold and energetic, lively and animated, the resounding notes smooth and even delicacy of the famous Prelude in C Sharp Minor, by Rachmaninoff, were given in such a manner to provoke a perfect storm of applause.

The tremore thrills and agitated harmonies were treated expertly in the "Indian Love Lyrics" composed of "The Temple Bells", "Less Than The Dust", "Kashmiri Love Song", and "Till I Awake", while Schubert's "Unfinish Symphony" was another stellar performance in a programme filled with delight.

The soprano soloist William Clegg in connection with J. Robertson, (Champion of New Zealand) and the euphonium soloist, Robert Smith, provoked applause which refused to subside until all had taken one or more encores. The duet in which Joseph Rumney joined with J. Robertson was captivating, while Smith's extra number on the euphonium, "Just a Song at Twilight" and "Drink to me Only With Thine Eyes" were exquisite.

London, Sept. 21 (By the Canadian Press)—Replies to a circular letter addressed to hospitals in Greater London by the Secretary of the London Free Church Federation, show that of 51 hospitals 17 are opposed to the raising of funds by means of lotteries and sweepstakes. Thirteen replies stated the matter had not been considered by the hospital committees, seven that sweepstakes were illegal and therefore not to be entertained, seven sent indefinite replies, two stated they were self-supporting, four that they were under the control of the London County Council. Only one was in favor of raising money by sweep stakes.

YANKEES WIN TEN STRAIGHT TO BE SECOND

Oust Washington Out of Position They Have Held All Season

HOME RUN RACE

Gehrig and Ruth Staging a Real Battle For The Honors

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr. Associated Press Sports Writer)

With the end of the Major league season a week away and the two pennants firmly in the grasp of the Philadelphia Athletics and the St. Louis Cardinals, there still are several places in the Major league standings to be decided in the last seven days.

The National League is in a fairly settled condition with the first three places clinched but only about three of the American league clubs can be sure of where they will finish. The A's are safe at the top, the fourth place Cleveland Indians are forty more points down, and the Chicago White Sox are no likely to get out of the cellar. But second place is the source of some excitement and the New York Yankees have staged a belated rush to win ten games in a row to grab the post away from Washington, while at the top of the second division, Detroit and Boston are tied and St. Louis is only a half game behind.

Yanks Second

The Yankee belated rush in one of the season's best winning streaks put New York ahead of Washington on Saturday and kept the McCarthymen there yesterday, when Washington dropped a double header. Two second inning rallies, bringing five runs each time, gave the Yanks a pair of victories over the Cleveland Indians, the first by 7 to 4, and the second by 10 to 4, and enabled Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig to continue their fight for the home run title. Gehrig hit his 46th homer in the first rally and Ruth clouted his 44th in the second game burst.

Pat Caraway of the Washington White Sox was the victim of Washington's double victory. He pitched the final inning of the opener and was nicked for the run that gave the Senators a 4-3 victory, then relieved Garland for the last four frames of the second game and granted two runs in the seventh that cost him the game, 6-4. St. Louis and Boston had a double-header rained out, while Detroit, with the Athletics, was not scheduled.

National League

After clinching second place in the National League Saturday, the New York Giants turned around yesterday and dropped both games of a double-header to Chicago, allowing the Cubs to make sure of finishing fourth. In the first game, Brooklyn took a 6 to 1 decision from the Cardinals, but the best the Robins can do now is to tie Chicago.

Heavy hitting and timely clouting marked the Cub-Giant twin bill and each team had its share of both. Chicago humiliated four pitchers for 20 hits in the opener to win 16 to 6, although Pat Malone allowed 14 safeties. In the second game, Wyatt was touched for 13 hits and one bad inning, the second, in which the Cubs took a four-run lead and they held this margin to the finish, winning 7 to 6. Chicago made five errors in the second contest and New York four in the first.

An old familiar name appeared in yesterday's games, among the stars of many new ones, which have cropped up in the last few weeks. Gabby Street, the Cardinal manager, who was a big league catcher almost too many years ago to mention, donned a mask for five innings to receive Sylvester Johnson's pitching. The battery was not a successful as Clark and Lopez for the Dodgers, but Johnson had a comparatively easy victory as St. Louis got only eight hits.

Batting figures moving for the one really doubtful National League position, the Cincinnati Reds and the Boston Braves into seventh, behind the idle Pittsburgh by winning two games. Larry Benton allowed Braves six hits to win the opener, 3 to 2 while an eight-run rally in the seventh decided the second clash 14 to 5.

Bishop Bidwell's Appeal For Repairs

London, Sept. (By the Canadian Press)—Bishop Bidwell formerly of Ontario and now Vicar of Sellindge, near Ashford, Kent, in agricultural parish containing almost entirely farmers and week by week earners, is appealing for help in raising $2,000 needed for essential structural repairs in including the re-roofing of the church which has an early Norman tower and a fine 13th century chancel. Dr. Bidwell says: "Possibly some of my old parishioners in Kingston and Peterborough would be willing to come to the assistance of their old master. Also perhaps some of the many thousands of motorists who pass the church, which stands right on the London-Folkstone road between Ashford and Rythe, and must know it by sight, will call and visit it and give us some help.

Word has been received from the O. A. A. to the effect that the first game of the intermediate finals will be played at Napanee on Wednesday or Saturday of this week. The executive of the "Parent Body" will sit on the Milton-Rodney protest tonight. If the protest is thrown out then Rodney will play at Napanee on Wednesday, but if the protest is allowed, then, Rodney will play a sudden death game on Wednesday and the winner will play in Napanee on Saturday.

It is too bad that this unfortunate occurance has risen as the Gilbard team seem to thrive on plenty of baseball. Having to lay idle for more than a week will do the Gilbard boys no good as they seem to play better ball when playing two or more games a week. Whether or not they win the Ontario title, too much credit cannot be given "Doxie" Gilbard and his boys, under the careful eye of our own Walt Gerow. They started the season a green team and now find themselves upholding the tradition of Eastern Ontario in baseball. May they carry it high

For the information of the softball fans it might be well to say that the Kingston Capitols lost the series to Ottawa in two straight games. The second game at Ottawa was a white-wash for the hopesters as they were beat 16 to 0. That's that for another year.

Tonight in Toronto, Larry Gains and Jack Renault meet in a boxing bout for the championship of the British Empire Gains now holds the title and Renault has promised the fans that the championship will change hands tonight. Gains has made a very creditable record in Europe and has a victory over Max Schmeling, some time ago, made his record look all the better. On the other hand Renault has defeated the great Georgie Godfrey twice. It might be added that all champions and leading contenders shy clear of the Philadelphia "black boy." . . The "wise guys" call Gains to pet Renault over via the knock-out route. At any rate tonight the answer will be told.

Bears Made Strongest Bid For Pennant Since 1913

(By The Associated Press)

The International League has closed its 1931 season with Billy Gontworth's Rochester Red Wings champions for the fourth consecutive year.

The Red Wings, who clinched the pennant on Saturday, ended the season officially yesterday with a two-game lead over the Bears, who made their strongest bid for championship since 1913. Newark, third, four games behind the Bears.

Starr Wins 20th

With Ray Starr pitching his 20th victory, the Red Wings finished the season by beating Toronto, Starr allowed only seven hits and would have had a shutout could he have prevented doubles by Walker and McHenry in the ninth. Rochester collected 11 hits off Barnes, Ray Pepper getting three of them.

Newark rallied for four runs in the eighth inning to whip Baltimore, 6-5. Maugum of Newark and Prim of Baltimore, allowed 36 hits between them but both were effective with men on cases. Prim was hard hit in the eighth, when Newark batted around. Ike Booke, Newark outfielder, probably clinches the League batting title by getting three safeties in as many trips to the plate.

Jersey City and Reading divided a double header at Skeeters park, the opener, 7-6, and Reading the nightcap by the same score, Richie drove in four runs, with a double and two singles in the opener. The Keys won the nightcap in the seventh by counting twice in the seventh and final inning.

Activities at O. S. D.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Peterby, the bride's parents and Miss Iona Peterby, were at home to the members of the staff and other friends, to meet Mr. and Mrs. Craykendall, who have been spending two or three weeks here since their return from their honeymoon trip. On Thursday they left for their home in Ithaca, N.Y., where both are members of the staff of Cornell University.

On Wednesday afternoon a social hour, pleasant but somewhat somber, was spent by the staff to bid farwell to Miss Ada James, who had retired from active duty. After light refreshments had been partaken of Miss James was presented with a beautiful lounge and silk case. Mr. Petterby, in making the presentation, gave expression to the esteem in which she was held by the staff and extended her their very best wishes for her future welfare and happiness. Miss James was for seven years a pupil in the school, graduating with honour, and for the last thirty-nine years has been a member of the staff. No one in Ontario has been more intimately associated with the deaf of this Province, by all of whom she is held in the highest regard and affection.

On Wednesday afternoon the organization meeting of the Teachers' Association was held, when the following officers were elected for the current season: Honorary Presidents, Mr. Petterby, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Stewart; President, Mr. M. Blanchard; Vice-President, Miss O. Burt; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss L. Carroll. The regular meetings are held on the second Wednesday of every month. It is the purpose to spend at least one evening each month in some form of social entertainment.

The unexpectedly large attendance this year has made it necessary to employ an additional teacher, so Miss Doris Christie, of Trenton, Ont., has been added to the staff.

An up-to-date knitting machine has been added to the sewing-room equipment which will be available for vocational instruction as well as for turning out knitted wear for the pupils.

In pursuance of the Superintendent's determination to give the pupils more time for vocational work, the time tables have been so arranged that all of the pupils will work in the shops shall have two periods every day in the industrial department.

Up to date 316 pupils have been registered and when all who are expected arrive, the total enrolment will at least be 340.

Mr. Alex. Morrice, who for the last 39 years has been Instructor of shoemaking at the School has been placed on the superannuation list. At the close of last season he was presented by the staff with a gold headed cane, suitably engraved. In making the presentation, Mr. Petterby made feeling reference to long, faithful and efficient services in his department of school work. Mr. Morrice suitably acknowledged the gift and gave some interesting reminiscences of the early days of the Institution, he, then a boy attending school in Belleville, being present at the laying of the corner stone of the old main building.

The Dundas Teachers' Convention will be held at the O.S.D. on Oct. 8 and 9, instead of Oct. 2 and 3 as stated in a former issue. On Oct. 9th the Ontario County teachers will also be at the school.

RE UNEMPLOYMENT

Editor Ontario Intelligencer,

I understand a steam shovel that is capable of replacing about fifty worthy laborers is about to begin operations on North Front street between Bridge and Dundas. This means about fifty men who are willing and anxious to work and earn money the most of which would be spent in our city to buy provisions, clothing, and other necessaries for the winter, also to pay rent for comfortable housing for many families shall go to a construction company, how dare our city fathers approach Premier Henry and ask for assistance for our unemployed in the new way? BOOK READING ON INCREASE

Library Report Contains This Fact—Promotions in Staff

Unprecedented increase in summer reading recorded at Corby Public Library during the season when 25,714 volumes were borrowed during June, July and August. The actual increase was 3,094 over 1930.

These and other interesting facts were contained in the librarian's report presented to the Corby Public Library Board at their regular meeting on Friday evening. At this meeting Miss Kathryn Cellar her was made first assistant and Miss Ethel Adams B.A. was appointed ed as a permanent member of the staff.

The report follows:

Belleville, Ont., Sept. 18th, 1931.

The Library Board

Corby Public Library.

"Gentlemen:—I hereby beg to submit my report for the months of June, July and August, 1931.

"During the three months 25,714 volumes were borrowed from the library. This is an increase of 3,094 over the same period last year. August, especially, was a busy month, with an average of 400 books per day going out. Also, 761 volumes were consulted in the Reference Room during the summer.

"Since the beginning of the year our circulation has been more than 9,000 greater than for the same time. This large increase is due to a great extent, I think, to the unemployment situation. During this period of un employment, we are offering a real service to the community, particularly so, as we try to direct the reading away from the light fiction to a better class of literature and to keep constructive books on the shelves in their rightful places.

"197 new names were added to our register during the summer and 85 were withdrawn. We now have a patronage of 1,600 borrowers.

"316 new volumes have been catalogued and added to the library. 465 books were sent to Chivers for rebinding. These have now been returned and most of them are back on the shelves in their rejuvenated form.

"During the last month, I have taken over all the circulating books, and have discarded 325 worn out copies. Many of these have been taken from the Boys' and Girls' Room. In order to increase the downstairs shelves which were badly overcrowded, we have also been removed to the stacks in the basement. Most of these books find their way back to the library in over three years. Catalogue cards were made for many of these books for which we found no record in the catalogue, but while the books are no longer on the open shelves, they are still available to the public.

"Belleville very kindly allowed us space very early in the season for a booth in the Armouries for a display of our gardening books entitled the Canadian Gladiolus Show, which was held here in August. A great many people stopped to look at the display, and later asked for the books at the library.

"To stimulate circulation in the Boys' and Girls' Room during the holiday season, we held a travel competition. Books representative of the different countries were arranged in groups around the room. Each child was given a ticket which was punched as he read a book in each section of it. In other words visited that country). Two boys tied for the honour of coming first, each having read a total of 39 books. All those who entered were invited to a party given in the library, and prizes for the winners were presented with prizes.

"We were very sorry, indeed, to lose the services of Miss Grace Jackson, due to her marriage on September 10th. She was a very popular member of the staff, and a most conscientious worker. Portions of the library, especially the children, will miss her a great deal.

"I am, Sirs,

Yours most faithfully,

MARGARET Z. WHITE,

Chief Librarian."

Halifax, N.S., Sept. 21.—The Norwegian steamer Belmoura broadcast early this morning a wireless message to the effect that it had sighted the wreckage of a plane near where the three fliers, Wilg Rody, Christian Johansen and Fernando Da Costa Lopa, were believed to have been lost on a flight from Portugal to New York. The position of the wreckage was given at 45.26 north and 31.21 west, which is about 80 miles off Cape Pine, a dangerous section of the Newfound land coast.

Schools and Empire Brought Into Touch

London, (By The Candian Press) —Schools and the Empire are again being brought into touch through the Public Schools Empire Tours Committee, which, with the support and encouragement of the High Commissioners for the Union of South Africa and for Southern Rhodesia, is organizing a party of schoolboys for a tour of South Africa and Rhodesia this coming winter. The boys will be between the ages of 17 and 18, and will start for Africa at the beginning of January next. The proposed tour has the warm support of the Dominions office here as well as the Governor-General of the Union of South Africa, Sir Earl of Clarendon.

M. J. Rennsdall, Chairman of the Public Schools Empire Tours Committee, a well-know educationist and traveller, in a letter to The Times tells about the proposed tour as follow:

"The boys will cover more or less the same ground as the party which visited South Africa at the end of 1927, going and returning by the Union-Castle Line. After expending Capetown and the Cape Province they will proceed to Pretoria, Johannesburg, and Bulawayo running up to the Victoria Falls and Livingstone in the North and returning by Salisbury and the Drakensberg Mountains in the East. They will stay on farms, getting an insight into country life as well as town life, and have a full opportunity of studying the main problems, social, political, financial and agricultural, with which South Africa is faced. They will return in April, 1932. The cost should be well within $750.

"The party will, it is intended, be in the hands of a public school master, assisted by an Army officer. The great attractions of South Africa should secure a group of boys who are worthy representatives of the best public schools."

Noveljies in Stage Lighting in London

London, (By The Candian Press) —Novelties in stage lighting have been introduced at the Alhambra Theatre by Hassard Short, well-known producer, who at present is putting on "Wanted from Vienna" as the Alhambra attraction, and a demonstration was given to newspaper men, critics and writer in The Observer thus describes the new lighting:

Hitherto," said Mr. Short, "the curious habit has grown of allthe stage itself for the concentration of lights but I depend more on the auditorium. In addition to having the footlights transferred to the front of the circle, I have about 26 spot lights concealed at different parts of the auditorium. These hidden spots can be operated singly or jointly at will. The p.ecise degree of light necessary to soften or accentuate any action on the stage can be assured. The audience can not see these spot lights, as they are counteracted by bridge lights and telescopic lamps. The latter are fitted with amber pink shaded filters, which make everything white appear whiter still. Their scope can be extended or contracted, thus making it possible to illuminate the whole of the stage or merely the pupil of an artist's eye. I have also had fitted in about three dozen dimmers, which is more than the number used by any other 13 theatres combined. The total load of electricity now being carried at the Alhambra is 1,500 lamps."

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

CHAPTER XIII.

That night for Radcliffe was like a page torn from romance. The garden, illuminated with a myriad lilay lanterns, had been thrown open and almost the whole army encamped in and out, dancing on the flagstones to the music, laughing among the shadows, feasting and drinking, a constant flow of color and exuberant gaiety. It was their day of happiness, of rest from toil and from life's implacable demands, and they gave themselves up unrestrictedly to the present with its song and laughter.

A few Yaqui Indians, tall and unbending, stood in their blankets watching the women dancing to the soft music, while their own long-haired stolid squaws squatted at their feet, silently accepting the caress that Morales's servants offered them.

"Straight, clean-limbed, untamed fellows, these Yaqui," Don Bob was saying. "Fierce, I grant you, but I've never brought under his thumb Morales reign over them from the hills and his domination goes no further than the docile, tame and peaceable. There is something in the moon calm that breeds freedom and impatience with servitude. The slaves of the world have always come from the low-lands."

But Ted wasn't listening. Instead he was watching Morales, who, in her role of hostess to these strangely assorted guests, moved quietly among them, giving the children little presents, giving generous words to all. And always, as if she were unconscious of the admiring looks and hats of all the people swept in the dust before her, and the women as she passed reached out and reverently touched the fringe of her Spanish shawl. They followed her with their eyes, smiled when she smiled, each eager for a word or nod.

"How she is loved," Ted murmured.

Bob nodded. "With good reason. She loves them. If El Coyote only knew it, Adela Morales is his greatest enemy. Without the love these people bear her, the power of Morales might last no longer than this cigarette. It's almost a worship they have for her—stronger even than their fear of Jito. After all, they are like little children. They love her because she is beautiful and kind to them, and so they endure the slavery Morales puts upon them."

A quiet footstep sounded behind them, and Morales was offering them his cigarette case. "These, too, are from Spain," he said there.

"I was wondering just now," said Bob, as he held a match for his host "if you realized the formidable enemy that Adela must be to El Coyote."

"Enemy?"

"I mean the love these peons have for her. Might it not be this love of hers that they respect and which holds many from joining the Coyote's band?"

Morales barked a short laugh. "It is fear, not love, with these vermin, my friend. It is fear that has helpe keep them is that here their best interest lies. They were born to be slave and to need masters who will flog them. You must not forget such weak sentiment when dealing with these people, senor." Then, as if suddenly remembering, he handed a piece of folded paper to Don Bob. "Read that, my friend," the Spaniard told him. "He waits outside."

With a little frown Bob tore open the paper, and as he read the frown deepened. He looked up and tapped the message with his finger.

"This may take me away for an hour or more—with your permission."

Morales bowed. "I had feared as much, when the bugler brought a saddled horse." And as Bob hurried down the steps in response to a call to Ted, "We were speaking of how to handle these people, Jito and his vermin," he led Radcliffe to where the tall Texan was busy. "More than one man has been chained to them as a lesson in behavior."

"Chained to other men?" Radcliffe asked.

"No longer. I hope they never will. Once my forefathers found need of them in raiding attacks. Still the hacienda would make a rather strange fortress with those gates closed."

Ted looked up curiously. "But they only hang on those hinges. A strong man could lift them off."

Incredulously the Spaniard raised his shoulders. "A strong man indeed —perhaps Jito or yourself might do that. Yet I remember—

The words were lost in the maddened pounding of horses' hoofs. Beyond the gate a haloes rider had pulled his pony to a halt. Flinging himself from the saddle, he ran toward them, then catching sight of Adela, threw himself to his knees before her. He captured her gown, dust-stained, and in the light of the lanterns it gleamed with sweat and with a darker streak of blood. The man was speaking to her quickly, insistently, his face upturned in supplication. Once he raised his head and grasped her shawl, and now the girl had put both hands before her eyes and shivered. The silenced crowd of peons was falling back, and through them Morales and Radcliffe pushed their way to the girl's side.

Adela Morales sprang to her feet and, in supplication her arms reached out to her uncle.

"Oh, senor," she cried. "This man says that Jito's vaqueros are raiding the village, that they have broken into the cantina and are driving the people through the streets. He says they are wild with drink and he is afraid for the women. Make Jito send them away."

Slowly Morales turned toward the kneeling man. Deliberately he put his foot on the peon's shoulder and kicked him into the dust.

"Only that?" he asked contemptuously. "For this, if I carried out what I would cut you to ribbons. Is this some wayside fight that you should rush upon me and my guests with your whining? Get back to your whimpering people. Never once have my men ridden among you but you have come crying with fright to me." He put his arm about the girl's shoulder and made as if to turn away, but suddenly Adela's eyes blazed. Her slender figure stiffened.

"I will not have it. Mother of God is there no end to the cowardice of those vaqueros of yours? This time, my uncle, we will make an end of it."

To Ted it seemed that suddenly into her voice had come some new final and resolute. She flung Morales's hand from her shoulder.

"I will not have these people made sport of by a drunken crowd of cowboys. Do you understand me? I will not have it. I am going down to the village. I am not afraid with one, my uncle.

Ted was standing at the end of the broad driveway, and throwing off her shawl, she ran and flung open the door. Without a word the two men jumped to their ponies' board, and in another minute the little car was racing down the dusty, bumpy road. Already from the village of the engine shots rattled far down the night.

The girl redoubled her speed.

"Dios," she muttered. "This thing they call impetuous youth has brought all our plans before the night is done."

The street was filled with riding men, great swarthy fellows with red and purple shirts and chaps chosen especially for the fiesta. Picked men Jito's vaqueros. They rode not only in the saddle but with the same row pavements, singing and shouting, laying down their lassos to the ravishe quirts. One had driven his pony among the wares of a small fruit store and contentedly watched the crowd munching apples and pears, while the women and children stood by, alternately murmuring with fear and anger as each fresh outrage was committed. Farther on rose a roar of laughter, and the rattle of shattered glass.

Ted's car had scarcely halted on the main body of Jito's vaqueros were gathered. There in full swing of wreckage and destruction. Suddenly from beyond the village there came a blazed and a shower of sparks shot into the air like the stars. The vaqueros spurred forward, and with a roar of flames grew louder. Already a crowd of half-drunken vaqueros came reeling toward the solitary ranchhouse, while from the village sternamed the rest of Jito's dread band, yelling and snapping their quirts, eager for whatever new entertainment the night might afford.

Straight into the crowd Adela drove the car. Horses and men leaped wildly aside as she threw on the brake, almost in the center of the vaqueros. Ted leaned forward. Hem med in on a plunging horseman, an old man stood, bound with leather thongs and directly beside him a young vaquero held a girl in his arms. Helplessly she struggled there, her hands of a rider, lashed in full in the vaquero's face with all her might. Drooping, the girl, the Mexican turned savagely, while a white sop stood but across his cheek, where more the quirt bit deep into his skin. He raised his clenched fist, then, seeing Adela Morales started back and snatched the sombrero from his head.

"Senorita," he began.

"You damned dog!" Once more she lashed the quirt into his dark face, then hurled it at his feet. "You, drunken, cowardly cur! Out of here, you and all your blood pack."

Before her white fury the dismayed crowd pushed back. Adela kneeled and gathered the girl in her arms. Ted still stood on the running-board, ready to strike if the need came. His hands were clenched, but the vaquero, like a beaten dog, crept into the crowd. The sobbing girl hid her face in Adela's arms.

From the outer fringe of the crowd came the sound of renewed shouting, and the galloping of horses. Triumphantly the vaqueros rallied their hats in greeting. Jito, their leader, had arrived. Who now would dare to interfere, and Jito had collected! Jumping from his horse the big Mexican shouldered his way to the little group. He had eyes for none but Adela, and at the sight of the feet of El Coyote for that rotten life of yours."

She would have said more, but Morales placed his hand over her mouth.

"Not another word," he said. "I will not have it."

DOROTHY DIX says

"Wives... keep Charming at the Breakfast Table!"

Advice to Women of BELLEVILLE

It is after you have settled down to the everyday business of being a wife that the real test of your allure and your ingenuity comes.

It begins at the breakfast table. Somewhere in HIS heart is built a romantic image against which he is constantly comparing the real you who are sitting opposite. You are very lovely in his picture of you . . . dainty, COLOURFUL.

And as long as you . . . the real you . . . come fairly close to that romantic image, your home is safe, your happiness secure.

MEN LOVE COLOUR

So I say . . . Keep charming at the breakfast table.

I need not say dainty, for you will be that, but, girls, do take pains to choose colourful gowns, frocks for your home wear—for remember, men love colour.

And then—just as important—keep them unfaded, charming as new, for with the loss of vibrant colour, there is a corresponding loss in the lovely charm that the dress brings.

You sasy say—"But how can I do this when these frocks must be washed time after time? Washing takes away colour. Dress, sooner or later leaves them faded, drab-looking."

To this I reply that it is true that, just ordinary "good" soap do take out some of the colour along with the dirt. But this will never be the case if you wash them always in LUX.

LUX is made especially to keep delicate colours vibrantly alive; to preserve the soft, dainty tones of sheer fabrics. Any colour or fabric safe in water alone is just as safe in LUX.

KEEP YOUR HOME CHARMING, TOO

It is important, too, that your home should always seem dainty and charming—to your husband.

Keep the glamour of fresh lovely colour not only in your clothes, but in everything about the house . . . the dainty curtains in your "breakfast nook," pretty table linens, cushions and draperies in your living room. Here, too, LUX is invaluable in retaining colour charm to the full.—Dorothy Dix.

"THE REAL TEST of your allure—and ingenuity—comes after the honeymoon. Look your charming best even at the breakfast table, so that 'his' picture of you is always colourful and lovely!"

Toronto, Sept. 19—Hon. W. H. BOOTLEG COAL IN N.S., CHARGE.

Prosecutions Seek to End Menace to Organized Industry

Glace Bay, N.S., Sept. 19 — "Bootlegging" of coal has become so prevalent in and about Glace Bay that officials of the Dominion Coal Company have started a drive to end this unlawful competition. Prosecutions have been launched against scores of miners who in idle time have opened small mines of their own.

In a landlocked valley through which Caledonia Brook runs from No. 11 mine in Park Street, situated in the very heart of the town, a total of 36 mines were in operation tonight, with close to 300 men mining and hauling coal.

The coal seam in this section contains some of the finest coal in Cape Breton. It is covered by about four or five feet of clay and is about four feet deep. "Bootleg" miners have made a full time job of their work and in some cases the mines are being operated on three eight-hour shifts.

Some idea of the magnitude of these enterprise might be gleaned from the fact that in the "burnt mine" seven fire days a total of 1,000 tons of coal have been mined.

Nearly 100 Claims Over Train Smash

Windsor, Sept. 19.—Nearly 100 claims or notices of claims have been filed as a result of the street car accident on September 8, when a heavily-loaded car went through a switch and turned on its side while enroute to the Fireman's Field Day at Devonshire Park.

Claims so far total about $48,000 according to Joseph T. Hewitt, a member of the Board of the Windsor, Essex and Lake Shore Association, one of the lines involved in the case. About half of these have been settled, it is stated, as they are for comparatively small amounts.

HER NIGHT

by Jack Woodford

By Jack Woodford

At eight o'clock Grace was dressed and ready to go out. She had settled herself up so she hated to spoil it even by sitting down and putting the tiniest wrinkle in her new dress. She wanted Fred to see her just as she was now, as near to perfection as she could possibly make herself outwardly. She stopped before the hall mirror for a moment anxiously, to see if she were really pretty, as everyone said. Somehow she always doubted it; though it was plain as day in her clear blue eyes, light golden hair; clear white skin, slim, lithe figure. She paced up and down the hall impatiently. He wasn't due for twelve minutes yet, but if he she a second late she was afraid that she couldn't stand it.

Tonight, she felt, was to be the night of nights. He had said, over the phone, that he had something very especial that he wanted to say to her tonight; and Grace was especially wanted to hear it. Fred was tall and dark and broad shouldered. A mere three years older than herself, he was already doing splendidly in a business way. Her mother and father approved of him enthusiastically. She was sorry they had gone out together to a movie, it would have helped the ten sion to have someone to talk to.

It would be wonderful to have a home of her own; however small it might be at the beginning. Not that she wasn't happy at home.... she was eminently so. But a home of her own, a husband, the fullness of life that would bring, even if it brought some heavy cares and duties with it—that would be the thing which would make her heart sing.

She glanced at the clock in the living room. It was eight fourteen. He was due in one minute. With difficulty she restained herself.

When the clock indicated eight sixteen she thought that she would go into hysterics. But then, she said to herself, making excuses for him, since she loved him, any motor body was likely to be a few minutes late; she was often late herself, even in keeping appointments with Fred, she paced the hall in excitement. They were going for a short drive as soon as he got in, and then at nine fifteen they were going to get to the second show at the movie around the corner. The clock crawled on. It was, she saw to her chagrin, eight twenty-five. Ten minutes late! Darn! But then!

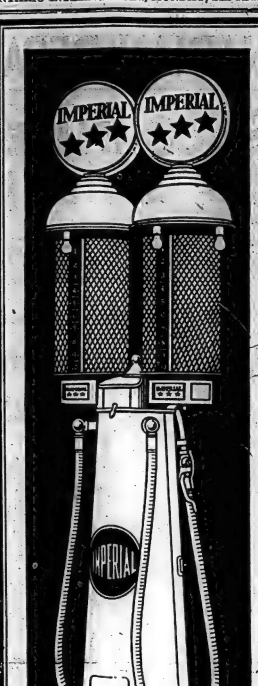
Ten minutes was really less she reflected with a dubious frown. She held a position, and one of the things required of her was punctuality. She had not been late to work in a year. She prided herself on it; Fred prided himself on his punctuality. So.....yes..... It was eight thirty now. That would leave still forty-five minutes for the little talk they were to have had. But then, that was enough.

She sat down, unable to pace any longer, and forced herself to quiet. For a long time she would not look at the clock; when she did she discovered to her horror that it was eight forty-five. She was distinctly irritated. The idea of his keeping her waiting so long without calling her! If he was unavoidably detained, that was understandable; but not to call her and tell her he would be late! That was downright rude. Careless! Thoughtless! After all, could she be happy with a man who would think so little of her as to leave her to wait half an hour without calling?

It was eight fifty now; and still no call. Grace was frowning and tapping the toe of her shoe upon the floor. This was preposterous. She'd have to give him a good lecture. It was at nine o'clock that she decided she positively hated him. Even if he came now, she decided, she wouldn't go out with him. She took off some of her things. Took off her hat, though she had spent a lot of time getting it on just right, so that it wouldn't hurt her hair. Went and got a book to read; but no matter how hard she concentrated on the words they would not make sense.

She hated him, she told herself, hated him, hated him, hated him! She'd never see him again. She'd tell her mother not to call her to the phone if he called up. She'd refuse to see him if he came to the door. Her whole life was ruined, she realized; because she could never love anyone else. And she would never marry Fred now because she hated the very thought of him. She'd like to murder him. She got up and stamped her foot in fury. She threw the book so that its back cracked alarmingly.

At nine fifteen something smote her with the force of a sledge hammer. She wondered how she could ever have overlooked it so long. He was driving over in his own car. Of course he lay dead somewhere this minute, beneath the wreckage of his car, dead and bleeding horribly! She wrung her hands in anguish. Flew to the phone, called his rooming house. Yes, he had left long ago, in plenty of time to have gotten to her home. He was bleeding profusely, she was sure of it.



She threw herself upon the divan and wept in agony. Somewhere-but in the dark Fred was dead, or at least horribly injured, and she could not go to him because she did not know where it was. And she loved him! Oh how she loved him. If only it could be that some thing had delayed him. Anything! She would be willing to forgive him even the most superficial cause for delay, if he'd only come now. The phone rang. It was Fred.

"Sorry as the dickens honey," he said, "but I got tied up. Be over in fifteen minutes now." And that was all. Just that. She hated him Oh, how she hated him! What she would tell him when he got there. To have let her go through hell just because he got tied up in some unimportant matter. Not to have phoned. The beast. The unspeakable beast! She loathed the very thought of him.....decided not to answer the bell when it rang. Went to her room. Undressed. Put on her pyjamas. Lay down on the bed.

When half an hour passed and he did not come she began to worry. Suppose it were another woman. Some woman trying to take advantage of his innocence; holding on to him to keep him from her.....some designing creature who would make his life miserable. Poor Fred! He was so trusting where women were concerned. And she loved him so. If some other woman should——! She would forgive him everything if he'd only come now. Hurriedly she dressed. At ten her parents came home. At ten five Fred came.

"Call a doctor, quickly" her mother instructed the belated Fred; "she's in her room half undressed and unconscious!"

EVERY DROP MADE IN CANADA

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 36. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

In the cabin by the beach two thoroughly terrified women crouched. The negress sobbed hysterically. The white girl, dry-eyed, was torn by fears and forebodings. They heard the almost incessant roars from the savage jungle. And now there came the sound of a heavy body brushing against the cabin's sides!

Silence—then she distinctly heard an animal outside, sniffing at the door. They shuddered instinctly. A gentle scratching—the beast was trying to force an entrance. Now, silhouetted against the moonlit sky beyond, Jane saw the head of a huge lioness, its gleaming eyes fastened upon her in intent ferocity.

For twenty minutes the huge brute alternately sniffed and tore at the door. Then she launched her great weight against the limewash window lattice. They say a portion of it give way. Esmarelda fainted. The horrified prisoners within beheld one great paw—then its head thrust within the room.

Slowly the powerful neck and shoulders spread the bars apart—The girl rose as in a trance, seeking with ever increasing terror some loophole of escape—Suddenly her hand, tight pressed against her bosom, felt the outline of Clayton's revolver. Quickly she jerked it—and pulled the trigger.

There was a flash of flame, a riar of pain. This was the shot heard by Tarzan and Clayton. Then Jane, too, fainted. But Esmar was not killed. Slowly she forced her great bulk through the opening. On this night Jane again opened her eyes!

PAT CARAWAY NEAR RECORD

Double Defeat on Sunday Marks 25th Loss of Season

Washington, D.C., Sept. 21.—(AP)—Pat Carraway of the Chicago White Sox is close to an American League pitching record although his Club is last in the standing. When he was charged with both Chicago defeats here yesterday, Pat went into the records as the loser in 25 games this season. The American League record for losses is 26, made by John Townsend of Washington, in 1904 and equalled by Bob Groom of the same team in 1909. The modern major league mark of 29 losses was made by Victor Willis of the Boston Braves in 1905. Despite his bad record, Carraway has not always met the tough spots this season. He has been about the busiest of the White Sox relief hurlers although he has had trouble with his pitching arm all year and he has run into several opponents such as yesterday's defeats, when he lost twice although he gave only four hits and one walk in 4 2-3 innings.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 19 (C.P.)—Officials of the immigration department here today stated they had received no communication regarding Casimo Dimitroff, who, it despatch from Windsor yesterday claimed, had been turned back at the border when he tried to enter Canada with his family.

First Automatic Parachute Invented

Saint John, N.B., Sept. 21.—With one successful test to prove its effectiveness, Frank Harley, local air engineer, is claiming the inventorship of the world's first automatic parachute. The trial jump was made recently with the aid of a one hundred and fifty pound dummy. Harley had sought permission of the airport officials to make the test himself, but was refused. It would have been his first "bailing."

So Harley took his parachute and a life-sized dummy up in the local Aristocrat monoplane, and at an altitude of 1,000 feet tossed both over the side. The dummy tumbled to the ground seventy-five feet before the pilot 'chute of the silk envelope opened and allowed the dummy to drift easily to the ground.

ADJUSTMENT BEGINS IN FINANCIAL SITUATION

Revision of War Debts Possibility Experts View Financial Problem Caused By Removal of Standard

U. S. Government Believes Britain Takes Best Action

STERLING OFF

Canadian Dollar Touches Lowest in Many Years

Great Britain entered its second day of six months suspension from the gold standard with signs of slow adjustment to new conditions and the London Stock Exchange preparing to open tomorrow.

Trading on the New York Exchange went back to normal proportions with prices rallying slowly from yesterday's selling remained in force.

The British pound sold at 104 France (84.07) and at 106 Belgium (84.11) at the opening of the official money market in Paris. The Amsterdam Bourse reopened and the Netherlands Bank announced it would take over any outstanding contingent positions.

A bankers' conference in Brussels decided to constitute a consortium with resources of $300,000,000 to support the local market if necessary. German foreign exchange and metal markets remained closed.

The Federal Reserve Committee meeting in London promised to support the pound. The Bank of England today raised its discount rate from 7 to 8 per cent.

The Bank of Brazil switched its exchange transactions to a dollar basis of 17½ milreis to 100 cents.

England planned to enforce anti-profiteering regulations and purchases of foreign exchange were restricted.

London, Sept. 22.—(AP)—Regulations issued by Emergency Powers Act, said to be drafted at the time of the British general strike in 1926, will be enforced to prevent profiteering in food and an unwarranted rise in general prices, it was authoritatively learned today.

The Treasury issued an order prohibiting until further notice the purchase or sale, exchange or transfer of funds by British subjects except for financing normal trade requirements for restraint existing before Sept. 21.

The order also exempts reasonable travelling expenses or personal purchases.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 22.—(AP)—The United States Government regards Great Britain's temporary abandonment of the gold standard as likely to improve economic conditions for the restraint existing in Europe and elsewhere in the world.

Some skepticism is expressed in Wall Street over the prospect of any immediate restoration of monetary gold supplies in the near future.

International bankers recognize that the lodging of three-fifths of the world's monetary gold supply in France and the United States embarrassed the rest of the world and would welcome any workable remedy.

They point out, however, that so long as Europe spends more abroad than its income it is difficult to see how difference will have to be made up by shipping gold to borrowers and that a permanent remedy will require that Europe balance its current expenditures into balance.

Some feel that revision of debt payments might help accomplish this.

This was made clear today in market quarters.

The question was taken that the actual suspension could not be regarded as serious as it had been the constant possibility of the action.

So far as the United States is concerned, it may bring a stronger competition in foreign exports where United States business is in competition with British products.

This amounts to about ten per cent. in the Argentine, where surveys recently were made.

The British action is looked upon by this financial district as the result of a variable standard rather than the complete abandonment of the gold standard.

New York, N.Y., Sept. 22.—Wall Street financial markets regained their composure today.

Stocks fluctuated uncertainly in quiet trading after a little flurry at the opening, and closed irregular, rebounded rather briskly, although quotations remembered some further liquidation. More than 1,000,000 shares were quoted by Foreign Exchange dealers, although business remained highly restricted.

Share prices fell back 1 to 3 points for many prominent issues at the start, recovered during the late morning, and recorded numerous gains at the close. By early afternoon, however, most of this advance had been lost, and declines appeared here and there.

Major Problems Face P. E. Church Convention at Denver

National Referendum is Referred to Committee

STERILIZATION

Denver, Sept. 22 — Prohibition and the sterilization of criminals and insane persons, two controversial social problems, have made brief appearance on the state of the general conventions of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Whether the two issues will ever be brought up in the House of Deputies or the House of Bishops was problematical today, the end of the first week of the convention.

A resolution providing that the church urge Congress to authorize a national referendum on prohibition was read in the House of Deputies late yesterday and immediately referred to the committee on world peace, industrial stability and lawlessness. The resolution was placed before the convention by the Episcopal Church Centenary Fund, which Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske is the speaker.

The deputies also received a resolution from Henry S. Booth, lay delegate from Detroit, calling for the approval of the church of the sterilization of "all criminals, insane persons and those seriously defective in mind." It was referred to a committee without comment.

LEVINE TAKES TO ROADS

Quebec, Que., Sept. 22.—Temporarily forsaking the air for the highway, Charles Levine, New York millionaire aviator and first trans-Atlantic aeroplane passenger, arrived here yesterday on the liner Empress of Britain, with a new Stream-Liner motor car which he said he drove at 100 miles an hour on the roads without paying a single fine for speeding.

'Gators Bought at Ex. Disappear from Town

Other cities may have their "sea serpents," but Belleville at present has two alligators at large and their whereabouts is a decided by their owner, Mr. J. McFee of this city.

The latter attending the Toronto Exhibition some time ago, Mr. McFee purchased two baby alligators for the children of the district.

On arriving home he placed them in a cage in his back yard and waited developments. The developments were not quite what Mr. McFee had anticipated as the alligators forced their way out of the cage and completely disappeared last Friday.

The animals were about 21 inches long and were supposed to be secure, but Belleville at present is of the opinion that they naturally made tracks for some nearby place or perhaps find their way to the Bay. He thought that perhaps some local fisherman, while patrolling the bay shore, might see the animals. He said that although the animals were a bit snarly he did not think they were old enough to really hurt a person.

Mr. McFee had purchased them for the children of the district and therefore would like to regain the animals as the children enjoyed watching the little fellows in their cage.

King George is Represented by Sir Robert Borden

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 22— (CP)—In the little church of Saint Bartholomew where a generation-general of Canada have worshipped since Confederation, and where the first vice-regal christening in Ottawa took place some years ago, the infant son of the Governor General of Canada and Lady Bessborough will be baptized this afternoon at four o'clock.

His Majesty the King, Godfather of the child, will be represented by Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Borden, former prime minister of Canada. Lady Clark, wife of Sir Alfred, high commissioner will stand for Mrs. Arthur James, of Cotton House, Rugby Hon. Mrs. Lascelles wife of the private secretary to His Majesty for Mrs. Hall Walker, Countess of Inchcape, daughter of Lord Bessborough; and Lord Dunsmuir, elder brother of the infant for Lord Stanley, eldest son of the Earl of Derby. The ceremony will be performed by His Lordship the Rt. Rev. C. J. Roper, Bishop of Ottawa, and Rev. J. K. Dixon, rector of the church.

The first and only other christening of a child of a Governor General in Ottawa was that of Miss Alice in the same church on April 11, 1875. Frederick Temple, fourth son of the Earl and Countess of Dufferin and the second of their children to be born in Canada, was baptized there on that day. Today the same baptismal font will be used and the same register as the one used in 1875 will be signed.

The name selected for the infant, who in a few weeks and three days old, is George St. Lawrence Neuflize George commemorates His Majesty, who expressed a desire to be Godfather as soon as he heard of the child's birth. The first name was chosen by their Excellencies because of a wish to honour their child a distinctly Canadian name, and the middle name of Neuflize emphasizes the part the city where he was born. Neuflize is the name of his mother, who was Roberte, daughter of Baron De Neuflize of France.

Some four hundred guests including Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, members of the cabinet, the senate, and of the House of Commons and the Privy Council, and of the diplomatic corps, will be present at the ceremony.

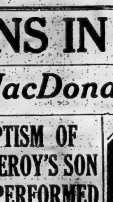
Militia in Iowa Enforces Bovine T. B. Test Law



200 Cedar County Farmers in Rebellion Against Sheriff's Officers

Tipton, Iowa, Sept. 22.—The militia was called upon today to enforce the state's bovine compulsory tuberculin test law. Hurriedly mobilized members of the National Guard numbering nearly 2,000 began arriving on special trains as a result of a disturbance yesterday in which Cedar County farmers were rebelled against 65 Sheriff's deputies who, accompanied by veterinarians in an automobile, to enforce the law.

When the deputies arrived in automobiles at the farm of Jacob Lanker they were met by a crowd with a barrage of mud and rocks. Several windows in the deputies' automobile were broken. One of the deputies was knocked into the mud as he stepped from his car. The officers then withdrew from the scene.

The Pope, in turn, has removed a priest from power, who has been antagonistic to Fascism. Both human "peace offerings" have been active in the Church-State controversy.

Foreman on North Front Street Job Explains Shovel Use

"Local labor, wherever possible, will be used on the construction of this pavement," said Mr. N. L. Wilson, foreman of the Godson Construction Company, when interviewed by a reporter Tuesday morning.

When questioned as to when the new pavement to be laid from the upper bridge north as far as the overhead bridge on North Front Street, this morning, over 100 local men were on the scene ready to start to work. But much to their chagrin the company had placed a steam-shovel on the job. The men had nothing to do but stand and disappointed at the sight of the machine, which was to supplement some labor and many words of disapproval were heard from the men present.

It is estimated that the shovel will take the place of about 60 labouring men in its operation. The machine is one which digs as it combes as the contracting company have got to finish their work in a specified time, which has been laid down by the contract, which was signed with the city.

City Can Pay Difference

Mr. Wilson stated this morning that if the city decided to pay the difference between the cost of actual labour and the cost of the above machine, which would be considerably higher, then the company would be glad to employ local machine, but as the contract stood, the company were forced to use the quickest means possible in order that the street could be finished in the specified time. He also said that he estimated that it would take about three weeks to finish the work if manual labour was employed.

At present there are four trucks at work and it is expected that they will be doubled in a very short time. Mr. Wilson stated that when the certified operations he would employ over 30 local men and all help would be local except the three foremen, whom he carried with him at all times. Mr. Wilson has been with the Godson Company for a period of 25 years and stated that he thought that things could be righted in order that all concerned would benefit.

The pavement is over 9 local working but Mr. Wilson assured the press this morning that they would try and use as many of the local unemployed as possible.

ROYAL MINT WILL BE TAKEN OVER SHORTLY

Initial Steps Were Taken Some Short Time Ago

CHANGE SOON

Gold Position in Canada Will Probably Be Strengthened

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 22 (CP.)—Implementing legislation passed at the last session of Parliament Canada will shortly take over the Royal Mint here. For several weeks, officials of the finance department have been in touch with Canadian mines arranging for supplies of gold bullion to be used in the operation of the mint. While this action was not taken with a view to meeting an emergency situation, it was stated in the department that the effect will probably be to strengthen the gold position here.

No embargo on gold shipments from Canada exists, and no intimation has been given of the passing of such an embargo. Department officials stated last night, however, that they had no knowledge of conferences on the value of the Canadian dollar in New York.

SLIGHT HURTS IN CAR CRASH

Two slight accidents were reported on the No. 2 highway just east of Smithfield over the week end. The first accident was reported on the Sunday afternoon when a Toronto boys were driving east on the highway when a tire blew out on the car. The pressure of the blow forced the car into the ditch. The car was damaged considerably but none of the injuries were received by the young men. One boy received a slight cut on the forehead but the others while another reported a slight shaking up. The car was completely smashed and the body of the car was somewhat damaged. The young men were Kenneth Pound, Kenneth McCann and Jack Russell all of Brighton.

The second accident was reported on Saturday when Officer Hamilton of Brighton and when he arrived upon the scene, just east of Smithfield, he found a car in the ditch but no injuries were sustained by its occupants. The car was from Vancouver and was owned by Mr. Jos. Blake who was accompanied by his wife and Mr. Carpenter of Toronto. They were enroute to Montreal when the accident occurred. The car left the highway and struck a pole breaking it off at the base. The car was damaged so that the occupants were forced to chance a new car. Examination showed that all the panes of glass in the basement windows giving light to the cells department and the large panes of the windows on the ground floor in the centre of the building were broken.

Examination of the spot where the smoke had been seen failed to reveal any fire and the police claim the explosion could not be heard for any great distance. Investigation was commenced immediately but no person was found who had seen any person on the street near the scene. It is thought the bomb was thrown from a passing automobile.

HOLLOWAY ST. Y.P.

The opening meeting of the Young People's Society of Holloway Street Methodist Church took the form of an outdoor gathering at Oak Lake last evening. All assembled at the church about seven-thirty and motored to Oak Lake, several members of the church assisting in transporting the young people there.

The place of meeting was ideal, a level sandy beach at the water's edge, with a large canopy fire lighted the shore. Some members were busy putting corn on the fire while others were busily seeing around for the comfort of all. Then following the interesting period of singing, led by Rev. H. B. Neal, Each member was called on the spirit of the outdoors and the fascination of the fire, with the stars overhead and the moon shedding its light over all. A fitting vesper service was held by Miss Ada Anderson, assisted by Miss Jean Moorman.

It is hoped that the next meeting could not fail to worship.

Much time was spent in merriment and laughter and refreshments of corn, weiners and marshmallows were served. The evening's outing closed by all joining hands, and repeating the Mizpah Benediction.

FASHION SHOW

"It's not what you spend on your clothes, but how you spend it," exclaims Miss Hazel Bell, of the Canadian C. D. S. Fashion Show that drew large audiences to the store that store last evening. Madame Miller, style expert of the store, expertly sought and faithfully followed every suggestion Belleville each season has an unlimited supply of style ideas for 1932. In her sparkling talk she explained the style features of each garment shown, with hints on how to adapt it to one's individuality.

Costumes of cloth, silk and fur were presented by the six models. Only one professional mannequin took part in the show, Mrs. Sutherland, Toronto. The others were Mrs. J. Kerr, Miss Reinhold, Miss Mildred Lauder, Miss Mae Potts and Miss Ainsley. First were shown dresses for sports, or business wear. In the new colors these were most appealing. The carouk brown introduced by Paris, the Spanish blue, Spanish tile, black and white held sway in fashion correctness.

Material for fall emphasize velvet, for as Madame Miller explained, one can't live this year without a fashion velvet. "Fashion has gone velvet-gathering." For the afternoon wear, velvet, the "material charged with romance" is combining the miss or like a dark velvet. For evening dress, velvets, satins and taffetas are good style, the term pastel has been replaced by "ice" tones.

Some beautiful examples of the fall mode were shown in the afternoon gowns. A youthful jacket frock combined dark crepe with brocaded of Spanish tile. A pretty sports frock of brown velvet had some decorative green for trimming, while several frocks featured the jaunty girdle effect inspired by Paris' latest costumes.

Stunning lace and transparent velvet creations pointed to a dignified mode for afternoon. Many of the frocks were fashioned to lead a double life by their ability to be changing them into evening dress.

One particularly lovely model of this type had a jacket of black Alencon lace and as Mrs. Miller pointed out, it made the perfect dress for those who had need of an evening dress and a dress for afternoon for the season.

The Empire influence in evening dresses was very noticeable, and taffeta made a perfect medium for such gowns. Bustles have come back in modified form and hooped skirts are also in the mode of Paris, the hoops being made of stiffened muslin.

The silhouette of wider shoulder and slim waisting was used on wider wraps, and several fall coats made their appearance. Fur garnished the majority of the wraps and were lovely exponents of the present trends in fur. The modern creation of price in the garments in the show was one of the features of the show.

"Trade Follows Film," Says Canadian Digest Editress

"Ray Lewis" Tells Rotary Club of Growth of British Films

MERIT SHOWN

More British films and protection for the independent moving picture owner against the activities of the alleged film trust, were urged by Mrs. Joshua Smith (Ray Lewis), editress of the Canadian Moving Picture Digest, in addressing the Rotary Club, Monday noon at the regular luncheon meeting in the Hotel Quinte. Mrs. Smith has a very pleasing personality which won her a hearty welcome and good fellowship with the Rotarians, and she had not the least difficulty in expressing herself orally before an audience large or small.

Referring to the recent film situation in Belleville, the prominent Mrs. Smith charged that the independent theatres had been fighting for their life for the past sixteen years against forces unfairly mass against them, and that British films were discouraged in this country.

Film Gospel

United States made films carry the gospel of Uncle Sam to every country in the world, advertising United States ways and goods as superior to all else, and the days of United States industry claimed a monopoly of the world for their films and were even pushing British films out of the British Isles until the making of the Cinematograph Act which compelled a certain quota of British made films to be shown on every program. British films were having a hard time getting into Canada but the future outlook is bright, according to the speaker. She stated that some excellent programs were being produced in Britain, and claimed that the English film actor was the best in the world and one of their voices, so much so that the United States' producers were sending for get them for Hollywood.

British Superiority

British films should carry the gospel of British supremacy and trade within the Empire to all parts of the world and combat the menace of American-made films glorifying everything else but the British Empire.

Three and a half billion dollars represented the investment in the U. S. motion picture industry, and approximately one-tenth of the population of the United States produce $5 per cent of the world's supply of motion pictures. In the United States alone, there are 20,000,000 admission weekly to the moving picture theatres which number 22,000.

"Trade follows the film, take the British films and trade will follow," said the Prince of Wales in addressing a gathering of business men in England recently. "The success of films believe this and are using Hollywood made films to advance United States interests all over the world.

Advertising is used extensively and to good effect by the U.S. film industry and in one year close to three million dollars was expended in newspapers and magazines.

"Through this advertising policy and a high grade standardizing, and because the United States, right from the beginning of films was not too highbrow for motion pictures American stars, directors and cameramen, have dominated," said Mrs. Smith.

After an interesting review of the growth of the moving picture producing business in England, Mrs. Smith closed with a fervent appeal to support British films and not only out of loyalty to the Empire but because they had exceptional merit and were the best in the world, the best directors, careful attention to every detail, scenery, and appointments, etc.

Mrs. Smith was introduced by Chris Holmes, manager of the Capitol Theatre, and Rotary appreciation was expressed by O. H. Scott and Dr. Ross Vrooman. A pleasing feature of the program consisted in songs by Jules Bazinet a friend of long standing of the people and from whom he took his first music lesson.

A man of seventy boards he can still comb his hair. Well, he's old enough to have learned how to make both ends meet.

Young Speeder Wrecks "Silent Policeman"

Thinking he was Kaye Don and that the smooth pavement from the C. N. R. north station to the corner of Bridge and Front Streets, was an ideal roadway upon which to give an exhibition of his prowess—a young man from Tweed drove his motor car at a terrific speed along this main thoroughfare at an exceedingly dangerous rate of speed and finally succeeded in smashing in his way—so he knocked the silent policeman at the corner of Bridge and Front Street, Rally West— in fact crippled it terribly. The young motoring Magistrate Mikel reserved his decision for a week in order to study the evidence and if possible find a section of the law to match. Her bouquet was of Pawnee roses.

Mr. Vincent Freeman, cousin of the bride, was groomsman.

Following the ceremony, wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride, where twenty-five guests being present. Later the bride and groom left by motor for Montreal. The bride travelled in a smart ensemble of blue, with lake blue frock trimmed with beige lace, navy travel tweed coat with collar and cuffs of sable, and matching hat. On their return they will reside in Belleville.

3 FACTORS CRISIS CAUSE

Roger Babson Gives His Analysis of Present Situation

By ROGER W. BABSON

(Written for the United Press)

New York, Sept. 22.—England's financial difficulty is due to three factors as follows:

(1) A large percentage of the chaos—lack of judgment and energy of Great Britain was killed off during the war. Great Britain is in a position similar to the South following the Civil War. Take will cure this defect, but it will take one or two generations to do it.

(2) The splendid British honor, long had resumed business upon the gold basis following prosperity and did just mark down the price of the pound, the same as France today is down the price of the franc, and as other countries marked down the price of their money. Britain today is now being praised for her strong financial position, but it should be remembered that she stabilized her money at one-fourth its former value and hence with one sweep wiped out three-fourths of her domestic debt.

This England refused to do, and England should be given credit for her courage and her good intentions. England would not submit to indefinite deflation and the readjustment was inevitable initial to stagger with this tremendous load.

The above two factors have led England into bad habits and bad financing during the past few years The British have been living beyond their means, reaping off us at three per cent. and loaning their money to Germany at seven per cent. and thereby taking a gambler's chance to recoup previous losses. English politicians have been giving the people what they wanted in order to prevent any domestic uprising.

In the meantime through natural economic changes and tariff enact ments by other countries, England's industries, shipping, etc., have been severely hurt.

Of course, it is hard for a nation or an individual to acknowledge their mistakes but I feel that England is taking the right step today in making such an acknowledgment. We never like to take castor oil but in the end we are much better off.

In the end, England and the entire world will be better off for the decisions made by the British Government.

PANIC IS NOT WARRANTED

Robert J. Graham Tells Rotary Time to Buy Good Securities

"There is no occasion to be panicky about the financial conditions as revealed in dispatches from London," Mr. R. J. Graham in a brief address before the Rotary Club at the Hotel Quinte. Suggestion of the gold standard to be a new and untried thing, he said by any means having been put in force from 1914 to 1918 to correct financial conditions then existing or like it as he also said the speaker. The United States and France have had within five per cent. of the world gold supply and this has caused a situation which can only be met effectively by the action taken by the British Government. . . . People should not get panicky and sacrifice their securities, it is a time to buy good securities instead of sell, said Mr. Graham, who referred to the New York stock market which had opened Monday morning with declines on leading stocks as a reaction to the news from England, but later in the day had regained several points somewhat surprisingly. Mr. Graham's optimistic and informative address received close attention and appreciation shown by prolonged applause at the close.

TENSION IS INCREASING

Japan and China Are On Verge of Another Outbreak

Tokyo, Sept. 22—Tension between the governments of China and Japan increased today with the movement of Japanese troops to combat rioting reported in press dispatches to have broke out at Changchun, Manchuria, and to strengthen the garrison at Mukden.

The situation described as tense in messages to the Tokyo war office, was one in which a clash or an extra ordinary session of the Japanese cabinet.

"The situation in South central Manchuria, particularly at Mukden, the center of fighting between Japanese and Chinese troops last Friday, was comparatively quiet.

Although Rengo News Agency dispatches said the southern section of the Chinese eastern railway between Kwanchengtse and Changchun had been destroyed by Chinese soldiers. There were no reports of actual conflict between the military of Japan and China.

Japan was expected to reply today to Chinese notes of protest over occupation by Japanese troops of Manchurian territory, demanding immediate evacuation and the territory now occupied and restoration of the properties as they were before Friday's clashes.

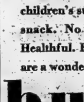
DRASTIC STEP ON EXCHANGE

Toronto Exchanges Take Messages to Prevent Panic Selling

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22—Drastic measures taken by the Toronto Stock Exchange to prevent the opening this morning which compared with the week's operations effectively prevented disorganization of security prices today.

Precipitate selling to take advantage of any possible frigid following England's abandonment of the gold standard or liquidation by timid holders was blocked by the announcement by the directing committee no stock would be traded at prices lower than the closing bid and ask quotations of Saturday.

Consequently the floor of the exchange was exceptionally quiet except for the basis of excitement which ran as undercurrent among the throngs. Over the counter business was very much smaller than that transacted the first hour on Saturday. There practically being no price changes and only the pictorial inter-listed issues were called at all during the first hour. Walkers Brazilian, Imperial oil were perhaps the most active. Walkers sold at 14 5-4, Brazilian at 10 7-8, Imperial Oil at 11, Bell Telephone sold unchanged at 123 1-2, Steel unchanged at 16 3-4, International Nickell unchanges at 8 1-4, Ford of Canada sold at 15 1-2.



Transactions later opened moderately active, gradually subsided as the Standard Stock and Mining Exchange was called and the end of the first hour the ticker was practically at a standstill. A ruling of the directors of the exchange provided that Saturday's closing bid prices should be considered minimum, and by 11 a.m. majority of quotations to appear on the tape took the form of asked prices at or just above the previous closing bid.

Lake Shore turned in over in numerous odd-lots at $96.50, off 50 from Saturday's final transaction, while International Nickel was down 25 to $9.25 and Dome 20 to $10.80. Noranda firmed a few cents but was inactive and the higher-priced golds as a group were stationary. Chesper stocks showed only fractional changes and light turnover.

ANNUAL SUPPER AT EMMANUEL CHURCH PROVES REAL SUCCESS

Speakers Acted All to Be Calm in Crisis Now Facing England

MANY PRESENT

Mayor and Mrs. Reid Celebrate 26th Anniversary at Supper

With the room gayly decorated and the tables filled with appetizing dishes over eighty sat down to the annual Harvest Supper, supplied by the Ladies' Aid and members of Emmanuel Church, in their Sunday School room last evening. After the blessing was said by the Rev. Dr. Bell, all fell to and enjoyed the dinner so well prepared by the women members of the church.

Rector Was Chairman

Rev. Canon Marshall was the chairman of the evening and after the banquet had been left the tables the banquet table, he called on Mayor Reid for a few words. His Worship thanked all for their kind hospitality on behalf of him and his wife and added that it was a pleasure for them to be present on the occasion of their 26th wedding anniversary. Upon these words the room rang with applause. Mr. Reid went on to say that "Ours was the only thing that would help carry the Canadian people through the present crisis and referred those present to the courage that was being exemplified at present in England. "There is no need for excitement at the present time," stated His Worship, for as he pointed out the British Empire has gone through many more trying days than face them at the present time and he felt assured that the British people would again arise to the occasion. Mr. Reid spoke a few words on the optimism that existed in Belleville and pointed out to those present that there had been over three-quarters of a million dollars invested in Belleville by outside concerns during the past year. "These people see something in Belleville," pointed out Mr. Reid and there is no fear for a town or city in the Dominion of Canada when they answer the call, as they have in the past when any necessity faces them. Mr. Reid in closing thanked all for their kind attention.

Dr. Bell Speaks

Rev. Dr. Bell was the next speaker on the programme and after telling a humorous story expressed the good will and wishes of his church to the Emmanuel Church and its members. He spoke on the characteristics of Emmanuel Church and lauded them for their success in the past years. "The need of the world today is the ideals of Jesus Christ" said Mr. Bell, and he pointed out that the world was more in dire need of the church than ever before in its history. In closing Mr. Bell thanked all for the privilege of being present.

Rev. A. L. Geen was then called upon and stated that it was a pleasure to be present at the gatherings each year and that this was the 19th consecutive Harvest Festival at Emmanuel Church that he has been privileged to attend. Mr. Green pointed out that Belleville, Ontario or even Canada had no complaint to make compared with the conditions that prevailed in other countries. Belleville, he said, was fortunate in about the most level run town or city in the Dominion, as they never were up or down in financial standing. Mr. Geen closed his remarks by stating that the want that ever the world today should be the Spirit of the Church.

Lauded Stand

The chairman, Rev. Mr. Marshall, then addressed a few words to those present and urged all present to accept the words of the previous speakers. Mr. Marshall thought that the present stand taken in the Mother Country was about the greatest achievement that ever has taken place in British history. He pointed out that the same measure should be adopted in the Christian church and that in the political parties of Canada at this time when there is at its greatest. "Now, of all times is the time for us to take the Pattern life that was left for us," said Mr. Marshall. "As the coming days that now face us is the time that the Church must answer that call they have always carried high," he said the speaker, "and that call is charity," he pointed out. He concluded with saying that Belleville and the world would always answer any call of need in the future.

Mr. A. B. Collins, city solicitor, was called on for a few words and after complimenting the church and the ladies for the wonderful repast, he also spoke very highly of Rev. Mr. Marshall and his great work. He then closed with a humorous story that was appreciated by all present. George Hanley, superintendent of the C.N.R., rose and apologized for being late and thanked all for the opportunity of being present again this year. After he congratulated those responsible for the enjoyable evening the Benediction was said by the Rev. Dr. Bell.

HELP TO WINE GROWERS

Grimsby, Ont., Sept. 22 — New government regulations regarding fortification of wine will be of little help this year, but offer a solution to problems of grape growers in years to come, according to wine growers of this district. Much depends on the quantity of wine which can be distilled before October 10, the date set by the government in which manufactured wine may be distilled.

Canadian Dollar 93 Cents in U. S.

New York, Sept. 22— The Canadian dollar Monday sold off 4% per cent. on local foreign exchange markets and finished at a discount of 7 per cent. the highest quoted since the Great War.

A shipment of $1,000,000 in gold, received here on Saturday from Canada, and news that another shipment of $500,000 would be forthcoming immediately failed to check the dollar's decline, which was continuous and rapid throughout the day.

The dollar opened nominally at 93 cents in United States funds, one-half cent lower than the closing quotation on Saturday. During the early hours of the day no trading was reported. By noon the discount rate had risen one-half per cent. and the dollar was quoted at 92½ cents for demand.

From that time on quotations on the Canadian unit declined rapidly. By two o'clock the dollar stood at 94½ cents in New York funds and shortly before three o'clock the Canadian Bank of Commerce announced it had been obliged to suspend all but gold transactions, made after the close of business on Saturday, during the early hours of the day no trading was reported. By noon the discount rate had risen one-half per cent. and the dollar was quoted at 92½ cents for demand.

The decline of Canadian funds in terms of United States currency brought no feeling of alarm to officials of Canadian banks doing business here. It was pointed out that practically all currencies based on the gold standard had been depressed considerably following the temporary suspension of the Gold Redemption Act by the British Government.

Financial writers gave little attention to Canadian funds, but occupied themselves largely with the antics of the pound sterling which, after sinking to $3.70, made a vigorous gain and finished the day at $4.22.

CHINA SEEKS LEAGUE AID

Will Observe National "Humiliation Day" On Wednesday

Cases of Alleged Hardship Investigated By Board

Nanking, China, Sept. 22 (A.P.)—China prepared today to observe Wednesday as National "Humiliation Day" while officials of the Nationalist Government sought to enforce the Manchurian situation considered by the League of Nations.

Called by President Chiang Kai-Shek, a memorial service in all gardens discussed until late last night the invasion and occupation of Manchuria by Japanese military forces.

Special meetings were attended by huge throngs. Students paraded streets exploiting the situation.

Virtually all of China united in a plea to the League of Nations to intervene in the "invasion of this peace loving, law-abiding people."

The Nanking Central Political Council "showed utter disregard of the Briand-Kellogg Pact and Washington Treaty".

The president of the Naval Courts are admiral Sir. Richard Tyrwhitt at Chatham, Admiral Sir Robert Dent at Devonport, Admiral Sir Arthur Waistell at Portsmouth. The respective officers here remain available with interest results of the League Secretary General's Convocation of a special session of the Council.

Size told the League Council that the occupation of Mukden, Antung and other Manchurian cities was unparalleled in the relations of friendly nations since formation of the League.

Indications the crisis might even reunite the Northern and Southern China split asunder by civil war, were foreseen, as exchanges of telegrams between some insurgent leaders in Canton and the Nanking government was reported but it was denied that peace negotiations had been resumed.

NAVAL COURTS BEGIN PROBE

Cases of Alleged Hardship Investigated By Board

London, Sept. 22 (Candian Press Cable)—Naval courts of enquiry were sitting today in private at all home ports to investigate cases of hardship arising from the reductions in naval rates of pay, the projected imposition of which resulted in unrest among the men of the Atlantic fleet until they were assured examination of hardship would be met.

And as the naval boards began their examinations Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald was telling the House of Commons there would be no reductions greater than ten per cent. in the salaries of the technical, policemen, or the men of the departments exempting higher rates for certain commissioned officers.

DUTY TO KEEP MINDS COOL

Canadians Aroused By Prof. Gregory, Noted Economist

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22—(CP)—The first duty of Canadians, in regard to the British crisis and the gold standard suspension is to keep their heads and not allow thoughtless apprehension or misapprehension lead them into panicky disturbance of their own and their country's equilibrium, declared Dr. T. E. Gregory, Professor of banking at the London School of Economics, in commenting here upon cabled despatches from England. Dr. Gregory is recognized as one of the leading economic authorities in Great Britain.

Dr. Gregory declined to make any extensive commepti on or interpretation of the suspension. It was impossible to predict what might happen, he said, whether things would blow over quietly after a temporary disturbance or whether developments would have more serious consequences, as he had not had sufficient time to digest the real meaning and effect of the British cabinet's decision.

Dr. Gregory was planning to proceed across Canada on his way there, but is seriously considering there, but is seriously considering cancelling the trip. He announced to return immediately to London in order to keep in close touch with developments and 'do what he can in meeting the crisis confronting the nation.

GREECE HONORS BYRON

"A democracy without poets would be frightful," said Premier Venizelos, homage and the gratitude and remembringing to Byron "the deep and sincere brance of his whole nation."

This homage was of Greece, but there was given to the Greek Premier the honor of handing to the Mayor of Nottingham the deed of gift by which Sir Julius Cahn has presented to the city the ancestral home of Lord Byron with its parks and gardens.

Completing this gift was that made by Mr. Charles Ian Fraser of the Byron relics at Newstead.

This gesture of Venizelos is novel among modern statesmen.

As the Manchester Guardian points out, "to him, naturally, the essential Byron was not the poet nor the aristocrat nor the libertine, but the man who for a few hurried weeks held and knotted together the threads of the conspiracy to free Greece, and who died on the threshold of his crusade.

"He labored for Greece, but he died for Europe," are the Premier's words.

Greece won freedom of government, but the Continent learned freedom of spirit.

Reported in the British papers, Mr. Venizelo's words are worth pondering. Thus:

"The name of Byron and Greece have been rendered inseparable forever. Nobody can think of a free Greece without thinking at the same time of Lord Byron and his death for the freedom of the Greek people.

"There are many who are convinced, as one brilliant English writer puts it, that if Byron had not come to die in sight of the blue lagoon of Missolonghi, on the Easter-tide, 1824, there would not be Navarino on October of 1827.

"The history of an essential part of Europe would have developed in a different way. Byron labored for Greece, but he died for Europe."

BRITAIN'S SACRIFICE

There is a general feeling in British Countries and doubtless other countries though not specifically so expressed, that Britain has reached the stage where she is today by reason of her loyalty to her obligations. One British paper says Britain is suffering for virtues. "We paid up like heroes or fools to America, to whom we owed money. We led the way in forgiving the debts to our debtors—preeminently to France. We tried to help our former enemies to their feet. For some cause other countries would not play the game. They were willing to help us keep on a high standard but they were willing too late. We have got off the gold standard with a balanced budget and that is a thing that neither France nor the United States can claim. Our going off may be worse for the world than for us. These are the words of the Liberal Evening Star of London.

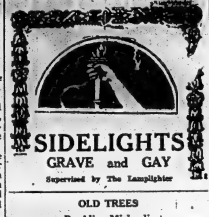
That Britain took the step out of necessity with the clear belief that it was the only step to be taken both for her own sake and for the sake of the world is borne out by the speeches of British leaders and by the opinions of leading financiers of the world.

Monday the world had one of the most exciting days since the time over seventeen years ago when the warcloud suddenly appeared over Europe.

As banking men everywhere state this is a time to hold one's head and not to become panicky for the consensus of opinion is that the present condition is but temporary.

HOARDING AND SELFISHNESS

The harvest time is the time for meditation upon the gifts of Providence in nature such as the harvests of the field and the products of the sea and the mine.



Rev. George Marshall preaching at harvest festival services at Emmaneul Church on Sunday made this clear—that there should be a spirit of gratitude and generosity, for the gifts of the season These are like manna, to be distributed among men, not to be hoarded.

Much of the grains and produce is hoarded up and maintained out of circulation where it would benefit all. Some are sold and the proceeds of the sale are locked up in the tightest vaults so that no one may participate in them but the selfish man himself.

Hoarding and selfishness were condemned by the minister as the causes of much of the evil seen in the world today.

Yesterday the world had a demonstration of the financial disruption caused as a result of such hoarding and selfishness expressed first of all in the individual and then by the nations. Such a scene as was enacted yesterday when Britain was compelled to let go the gold standard was the direct outcome of hoarding of the very commodity—gold—which lends the world confidence.

Hoarding and selfishness destroy confidence and the vicious circle widens until it takes in the whole world.

OLD TREES

By Aline Michaelis

Among thesselves the old trees softly talk,
But not in upstart sapling's witless way;
Sometimes I linger in my twilight walk
To ponder on the things I hear them say.

The oak that stands upon the garden's edge
Confides his longing to the pine nearby;
As once I stood half-hidden by the hedge
He murmured with a sudden, long-drawn sigh:

"Do you remember, Brother Pine, the days
When we alike were slender in our girth
And little versed in men and all their ways
Upon this changeful, ever-lovely Earth?

"Now we have learned through decades slow and long
That men may be like pine tree or like rose,
Some lift their boughs to winter with a song
And others quail before each storm that blows;

"They are our little brothers, Brother Pine,
And we can shield them from the sun and wind."
Sometimes I linger when the first stars shine
To hear the old trees' voices, sweet and kind.

FLYING TO WORK

Not so many years ago as the motor car era was coming of age, one used to stop and marvel, as he passed a building under construction, at the line of automobiles that had brought the men of various trades to and from their jobs. We may soon have something yet more startling to gape at if an incident reported from Mishawaka, Ind., can be taken as a sign of the times. Says the New York Times:

There two men employed in digging a drainage ditch at Baldwin Lake fly to their work, each in a separate plane, and then the whistle blows, fly home again. Both are skilled workers but took the job at ditch digging when they had been out of employment for several months. One owns the airplane in flies to work in; the other has the use of a newer craft, which he keeps for the owner. At first they used the air only when the automobiles were out of order or they were late of a morning. Now they fly to work two or three times a week. Twenty-five miles lie between their homes and the ditch they are working on. Who will be so rash as to say that in five years many a flivver plane or autogyro will not be parked alongside while its owner does the steel work or the masonry of a new building?

THE LADDER OF GOLD, by Oppenheim, is an interesting and ingenious tale of a man who secures control of the gold of the world and has all nations at his feet, as well as any number of hired assassins at his heels seeking his life. He is able to dictate terms to the great world powers before he releases the gold—his terms are PERMANENT WORLD PEACE. Just how important the gold supply is to the financial structure of the world is shown in the story, and the present financial situation in England makes the story doubly interesting and rather prophetic.

TWO OPERATIONS AT 71

A Splendid Recovery

BECAUSE KRUSCHEN HAD KEPT HER BLOOD CLEAN

Within 18 days of being operated on for appendicitis and tonsilitis, this woman was back in her own home. And she is over 71 years of age! When they told her the reason for her remarkable recovery—dear Mother, she knew what it was that had helped her. She remembered the daily dose of Kruschen which she had taken for many years. And she knew that one of the things that Kruschen did with absolute thoroughness, was to keep the bloodstream free from impurities. She wrote this morning after receiving her test—"I am an old woman over 71. I have taken Kruschen Salts for a number of years and find they keep me fit and well. I had operations last May for tonsilitis and appendicitis. . . . I am only away a fortnight and two days—which is quite remarkable for me at my old woman, I reckon. Clean blood was the reason for it, Sir. Only last week I give Kruschen Salts the credit for that. I recommend them wherever I go."—S. H.

The six salts in Kruschen persuade the kidneys, liver, intestines—liver, pancreas and bowels—to function as they should and flush out the poisons from their lives. Instead of being clogged, the intestines are clean and free. Instead of liver and kidneys being sluggish, they are active and efficient. Now, healthy blood goes coursing through the veins—carrying health and strength and energy to every part of the body.

And Kruschen's gentle but positive action is more than merely purifying—it has a direct tonic effect upon your whole system, and through your blood stream upon every fiber of your body—with the result a bracing sense of energetic fitness.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

Other Papers' Opinions

SPEAKERS AT FALL FAIRS

All over the province, just now visitors of greater or less distinction are officiating at the "formal" opening of fall fairs, or addressing from day to day the gatherings at the directors' luncheons. They may be described as of two classes: (1) persons who by rank or advertisement may be expected to draw a crowd, and (2) those who for their merit is not necessarily such as to swell the attendance, but who are likely to have something worth while to say to the kind of audience assembled at fairs. The Canadian National Exhibition, of course, uses both.

County fairs frequently invite someone, of one class or the other to "open" the event. For the purpose of delivering brief addresses at directors' luncheons, Cabinet members, ex-ministers, senior departmental officials or prominent live stock men are favored. Wolfram Fair for many years, even before it attained its present administration building, did a rather good job in prevailing upon the type of man with a practical message for farmers, in particular.—Woodstock Sentinel Review.

A VILLAGE DISAPPEARED WITHOUT A TRACE

Villages standing still or even going behind are, unfortunately, pretty common but seldom are they absolutely deserted. Such a one has been discovered by the Peace River News-Record. It gives an extremely interesting description of the valley of the Conestoga, a short river rising in Luther and Arthur Townships and flowing into the Grand River at New Hamburg. Mr. Owen Moorefield God Stirton, we came on the ruins of an earth dam. It was very old, because huge hawthorn trees were perched on the sides of it. There was the ruin of old buildings, nor even of foundations—nothing but a remnant of the dam and a deep pool below it with large bass in the warm water, darting among the lily leaves.

"This flaturally aroused our curiosity, so We went to the farm on the nearby hill and found the aged wife of the farmer. She invited us into the house and told us that the borough when it was a bush. After he cleared his hundred acres, he traded his farm for a store in Hewston and was the first postmaster of the village. There had been, besides the mill, two blacksmith shops, two stores and a church besides the houses. Now, not a trace remains so far as we could see, except the dam, and possibly one foundation or two.

The News-Record found other villages which were expecting but to prevent any misunderstanding, we hasten to add that it also found some which were pretty prosperous. The Conestoga is notable for its scenery and is well worth a visit.

"TOO YOUNG TO MARRY"

One of these delightful plays which one can sit down and watch unfolded with the keenest enjoyment, monopolizes the screen at the Capitol today and Wednesday, matinee daily at 2.30.

From its stage title of "Broken Dishes", the screen adaptation becomes "Too Young To Marry" and Marian Nixon Young and Grant Withers deciding whether Mac is right about their being too young to start housekeeping on their own.

In addition, Mac once had the chance to marry a city belle named Chester Armstrong, said city gal Pa never gets a chance of forgetting his inferiority compared with the impetuous Chester. Pa, tired of the nagging of his wife, hoofs it to a Lodge meeting, but liked cider gets the better of him. This lubricant is the cause at his breaking on the head of his wife's treasured crockery, but the cider also gives Pa courage to tell his wife what he thinks of the much-talked-of Chester.

The story of "Too Young To Marry," described as a chuckling romance of small-town life, will please everyone and the supporting programme of comedy, interest and curiosity will enhance the excellent performance at the Capitol today and Wednesday.

"THE GREAT LOVER"

Adolphe Menjou, a great favorite with movie fans, comes to the Regent on Thursday, Friday (Shell Silverware night) in his latest picture, "The Great Lover."

The Great Lover", has been received with acclamation by press critics, and "went over big" at the Broadway premiere.

In addition to Adolphe Menjou, the cast is distinguished, and includes Irene Dunn, Conrad Terrence, Neil Hamilton Baclanova, Cliff Edwards and Roscoe Ates, (the stuttering star of "Cimarron.")

This picture is an attraction in every sense of the word, and Belleville will respond to the arrival of the usual appreciation of good entertainment.

"THE SQUAW MAN"

"The Squaw Man," Cecil B. DeMille's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer talkie thriller of England and Arizona, will be featured at the Belle Theatre tomorrow and Wednesday, matinee daily, by an extraordinarily film cast.

Not one or two but ten outstanding players are in this various roles of the famous Edwin Milton Royle stage success.

The careers of these players would collectively make a very interesting tabloid history of the motion picture industry.

Warner Baxter, playing the featured male role of Jim Carston, plays just as convincingly talkie players until talkies came in when in Old England he made a star overnight.

Lupe Velez, appearing as the pathetic Indian girl, Naturich, represents that group of for eign players, who by virtue of extraordinary creative ability, have forced themselves upward to the very topmost rungs of the cinematic ladder. Cecil B. DeMille says of the work of Miss Velez in "The Squaw Man": "She gave me the greatest emotional response I have had in picture since the days of Gloria Swanson."

Eleanor Boardman represents the ranks of beauty contest winners in the cast, playing Lady Diana. Miss Boardman got her chance with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company when after a competition, she was selected as the "Most beautiful girl."

Charles Bickford deserted the stage about two years ago to become the most popular "he-man" on the screen. Roland Young and Paul Cavanagh are two clever young English stage actors whom talkies brought to the films.

J. Farrell McDonald, playing the part of the Scotch foreman, was a member of the famous old Biograph Company which produced David Wark Griffith Mary Pickford and a score of other stars.

Mitchell Lewis and Harry Northrup are two particularly interesting members of the cast of the talking version of "The Squaw Man," because in 1905 at Wallack's Theatre, they played in the original stage version in which William Faversham played the star role.

"The Squaw Man," was adapted used the road operation would be held up until after the front sets in; roads, cement roads, are being laid in the Winter, so that's a poor argument. Do your base and curbs and gutter first—the asphalt can be laid in a snow storm if necessary—or did you know that? Anyhow you've got a month yet before we get real frost and I think that a gang of men could have that road graded long before that.

What also is Mr. Looker's stand on this question, or does he also favor the idea that if the men can't work for the lack of it, the city will keep them this winter anyhow. It is about time that some one took the pains to write your paper, Mr. Editor, and find out where the ludicrous members of the council stand on this question.

Thanking you for the space, I am a Ratepayer.

Tribute.

Dear Sir:

Not content with forcing Daylight Saving through against the vote of the citizens, and having a costly and efficient, New, healthy St. against the emiasties and plea of the tax payers on the street who wanted asphaltic top pavement, and buying a bridge with a sag in the bed of it where the water collects every time it rains—and by the way, what has become of that asphalt top the company was supposed to lay on that, Mr. Macmillan?—the council are now about to let Godson Company use that monster steam shovel to grade North Front St., when there are hundreds of men going around begging for even a few days' work on relief.

Don't tell me, Mr. Mott and Mr. MacMillan, that it is because the work will be done more quickly with the shovel, and that if the men were about

MOTOR OIL

SOME oil companies are seeking to increase sales of motor oils by claiming greater mileage.

Most motor cars, regardless of the type of motor oil used, should have their crank-cases drained and oil renewed every 500 miles. Some types of automobiles, however, which are equipped with certain oil filters or purifiers and crank-case ventilators, can safely run 3,000 miles on one filling of motor oil. The manufacturer of your car specifies how often the oil should be changed and to get best results you should follow the manufacturer's advice.

Red Indian Motor Oil can safely be used for mileages of from 500 to 3,000 miles when these mileages are recommended by the automobile manufacturer. In addition to being a superior oil of the highest lubricating quality, Red Indian Motor Oil has the following extra advantages:

1. MINIMUM CARBON DEPOSIT
Preventing loss of power through accumulation of carbon in the cylinders.

2. HEAT RESISTING FILM
Does not break down or use up under high speeds.

3. FREEDOM FROM WAX
Keeping valves from sticking and oil system from clogging.

4. LOW POUR TEST
Withstanding climatic temperature changes effectively.

The Model Husband

by N. Florence Leech

At a quarter to six Quintus Lysterly descended from his neat road star and walked briskly up the gravel path to his front door. Pearl met him with a wifely kiss and submitted to a husbandly hug.

"You're home on the dot," she said, cheerfully.

"I knew you would be waiting for me," he answered, heartily.

They had been married six months. He was a model husband, and she was a model wife. Why then was the radiance of new love fading, the urge of companionship more feigned than real?

As they sat down prepared hot dinner, he gave her the details of his day at the office. Afterwards she checked the bookbook stubs and found that the expenses for the month had been kept exactly within the budget.

"You're a model housemaker," he cried; but somehow, her perfection annoyed him.

Things had been a whirlwind courtship at the beach, in the moonlight and amid dancing and singing waves, all-night dances and early morning swims. When their eyes first met, a flame flashed between them; and a spring day later they knew they were meant for each other.

Humbly thanking her Gods, Pearl had promised herself to be a good wife, a model housewife.

"I'll give up smoking, and cigarettes," she decided, resolutely, "and devote my life to making Quintus happy."

Quintus likewise determined that this lovely young girl, who was like a flame and a flower, should never regret marrying him.

"I'll give up the gang and our poker sessions," he affirmed, stoutly, "and never worry her by staying out after midnight."

So they were married, and his life became an open book, and her life became an open book, the clean white book of love and excessively boring.

On Friday night, playing bridge in one of the pleasant but somehow all-alike homes of their respective hood, he longed more and more fiercely for the old days of poker. Surely, midnight-to-dawn sessions. He never regretted that Pearl's smiling nightly and occasionally sulking nightly her partner's way, and sick pain nostalgia for the gay parties she had renounced.

"If I weren't that I'd shock and antagonize Quintus," she often thought, "I'd fling a party, and show the old dear my idea of a good time."

Came a day, as all good fiction-lists say, when an important out-of-town customer arrived unexpectedly, and in the absence of the Boss, on Quintus devolved the responsibility of entertaining him.

"How about going somewhere this evening?" he suggested diffidently to genial Mr. Morgan, after consignments and figures were finally settled to everyone's satisfaction.

"Catch with me," the other replied. "Richrads and I usually have supper and go to a Night Club. A pleasant, social hour besides breaking in the food."

A Night Club! Oh joy! But what would Pearl think? Quintus hated to be rushed for the phone.

"I have an important business conference," he explained with the voice of a model husband, "and I'll be detained late. I will not be afraid all alone in the house?"

"Afraid, sweetheart," she answered, after an instant of surprise, "I'll either go to a movie or get somebody to stay with me."

With a relieved smile, Quintus turned back to Mr. Morgan.

"They say the Blue Jay is some Night Club," he observed.

How queer not to be speeding home to a hot dinner and Pearl. This was Wednesday that meant stuffed veal with apple sauce, and probably tomato aspic salad. Pearl was very methodical in arranging her menus. He and Mr. Morgan had a man-size steak, sweet potatoes, apple pie, and coffee-java at a restaurant. Quintus tipped the waiter generously with the company's money.

Now for the Blue Jay," he cried and there was a gleam of excitement in his eyes.

A bumpy-bumpity jazz orchestra, a singing Senorita, in a tasseled shawl and fishnet hose, noise, laughter; Mr. Morgan chuckling delightedly beside him.

"A fellow needs something like this occasionally," he declared. "Makes the home fires crackle cheerfully the rest of the time."

"You said it," Quintus agreed fervently.

"But I wish we had a girl to dance with," grumbled Mr. Morgan.

This was evidently Quintus' lucky night, for three ladies sawy he recognized Tony Bracey and his wife and another couple. Presently he was circling the floor with Mrs. Bracey in his arms, and Mr. Morgan was dancing with spritely Gloria Webbs.

An hour passed, two hours. Music, laughter, noise, blended in a pleasant symphony. Quintus discovered that his stolen evening of free don was about over. If only Pearl were the sort of girl who approved of an occasional night off! How happy they could be!

"I saw your wife a few minutes ago, Mrs. Bracey remarked, as though reading his mind.

"Fine!" he agreed. "Whom at table near the door you mean."

Business of neck craning.

"Not the little blonde in green?" cried Mr. Morgan.

"Lyerly, you've held out on me. I want an introduction."

Quintus was blinking rapidly. Since the others saw her too she must be there; that exquisite charm and poise, who was laughing so merrily. But how had she come, and where did she get that dress?

"Come on," he said eagerly, and led the way.

Pearl had down her cigarette and smiled brightly at her husband. "Darling, I was hoping you'd be here," she said. "Emma and Billy and I have been to the theatre, and I insisted on coming here afterwards."

"You husband knows how to make an out-of-town customer feel at home," declared Mr. Morgan.

"Shall we dance, Mrs. Lyerly?"

Quintus watched her go, then swung out upon the crowded floor with Emma.

Presently he clasped his wife in his arms. "It's Going to Rain," the orchestra moaned in syncopated sorrow.

"Pearl, do you like such places as this?" he questioned, fearfully, at last.

"Uh-hu," she admitted, and sighed.

He laid his cheek for an instant on her shining brown hair. "Then—well, I do too; but I thought you wouldn't love me if I wasn't a model husband."

"And I thought a model wife had to give up all frivolity."

He clasped her closer, this hundred pounds of warmth and fragrance that was all his, and excelled an intricate, gleeful step.

"From now on, we'll give less attention to the budget and more to living," he declared.

"And be just a nice, normal married couple," she agreed. "Oh, Quintus, it's tell Mr. Morgan that if he can stay over, we'll throw a real party for him tomorrow night."

"Right," he answered and steered her expertly toward their table.

1000 CASES SHOSEN

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 21 —(C.P.)— One thousand men have been selected from the lists of the city's registered unemployed and the names have been forwarded to the Provincial government. These men will be the first to be sent to the Northern Ontario camps where they will work on roadbuilding.

In making the selection the officers took those cases which were the most necessitous.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Am a Guest and Am a Hostess

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Please tell me what things a guest spending the night in another's home should bring with her.

We are ordinary, middle-class people, and visit in ordinary, middle class homes. I always take everything that I am going to need with me; pajamas, kimono, wash cloth, towel, soap, cleaning cream, witchhazel, comb, powder, rouge, nail file, bedroom slippers, toothbrush and tooth paste.

But my sister is a junior at the University. She frequently invites girls, several days in advance, to spend the night with her. These girls come to the house with nothing. Mother has to produce pajamas. My sister uses soap and water on her face, but the girls ask for cleaning cream, and I have to give them mine. In the morning they use my sister's powder, rouge, lipstick, comb and soap. They go to college without cleaning their teeth, as we've never yet had one ask to borrow a toothbrush.

We think that we do enough when we furnish clean sheets, pillow slips, towel and napkin, without having to launder pajamas, and without my sister having to buy new powder and rouge often, and replacing the outside from her lipstick, as we won't let her use them after the other girls have used them.

These girls are in the University dress well, live in well kept, nicely furnished homes, and are considered "nice girls".

2. Also, what is the correct thing to do about a bath? I always take a hot bath before bed every night. But when I get to town, what should I do? To ask her if she cares if I take a bath might be taken that I am insinuating that she needed one. To take my bath and ask after her one seems wrong, as she too might be in the habit of taking a bath daily.

In another city where is a girl friend in the habit of taking a bath daily. She asks me if I care for one. I say, "Please" and then I take my valet and that is that.

But in other homes no one ever mentions bathing. In one home in town, where I first taught, I stay a week every summer. The members of this family take the twice a week. But I am never offered a bath, nor have the opportunity of asking for the same known.

Please advise me on these two points—both when we have guests and when we are guests.

D.R.

This is a mighty interesting and thought-compelling letter, and concerns what we all, I am sure, at some time or other in our lives, have wanted to express. Thank you for sending it. "From sea to sea," and there are always these problems that you so clearly and honestly set forth.

1. In the main the list that you give of the things that you take with you are the ones that we should all take with us when we go to spend the night, or a longer time. A guest, however, usually does not take a towel when she goes a-visiting. The hostess has a supply of towels, guest towels, hand towels, face towels, bath towels—and face cloths and wash cloths. So that it is not necessary to take towels, wash cloths and unless we are especially "choosy" about our soaps, it isn't necessary to take soap either. We will find in the bath room you think. There is probably the attractive little guest-size piece of soap. All over when a supply your list a hostess expects a guest to bring with her.

Of course some hostesses of luxurious homes have a complete outfit of cosmetic accessories—but we can't be sure of having these supplied for us, for just as many hostesses of luxurious homes do not supply these!

Sympathize with you and your mother in your struggle with the "collegiate" set of manners and consideration of other people. Since the incubation of decency in this regard for the property of others must begin earlier than college years, you and your mother will have to circumvent these hoodlum-guests, unless your sister decided to drop them as guests in your home. That is, you will have to have a guest-kit, equipped with the minor items of the accessories which they "demand." You can, as you know, get these in the five-and-ten cent stores, and, after the disturbing guests have gone, you can throw the containers away, and put out another supply.

People, young or old, of this illbred ilk think such lack of decency is "smart," and the only way that we can meet this, if we wish to tolerate the people, is to meet it with patience, generously supplying the things they lack. And how often we wonder if we wish to tolerate them!

2. This is a question that can be more easily solved than I believe you think. There is no reason why we should not ask our guests their wishes on this subject. Banish from your mind the idea that the guests will take the question as to their preference as an affront. They will take it for what it is, a wish to make them comfortable.

The shrinking violet must come back into the open since that color has been featured for the new modes. A new evening shoe uses violet crepe with silver cod scallops surrounding motifs of much darker violet kid. The shoe is a very low cut open shank sandal.

Many uses are being found for wood in the mode. We find wooden heels—and also much use made of wood for handbags. A pouch bag of black antelope has a handle and frame of genuine ebony beautifully carved.

One day it will arrive, that cold weather, and we will shop for fur-lined gloves. This year we will find there are lovely gloves lined with reaver that are all of right button length.

Such a suit is a model of silky surfaced black broadcloth with belted and flared coat and flared skirt. The Beauty Box

Powder puts the dull finish on a complexion that has a beautiful complex, but it doesn't overcome enough oiliness. Get down to brass tacks and daily hygiene if you would gain control of amiss tinus oil glanders. The salt glow should be a daily habit; it brings to normal the functions of the skin all over the body; sensitive glands on the face lay off, take a real soft pedal and ease up. Moisten a bowlful of table salt, rub into the flesh, turn on the tepid spray and chill the water gradually.

One way to keep tranquil and well-balanced as well as good looking, is to grab time for play out of doors. Nobody can carry the hod up and down the ladder all the time without tidging on a weary face, jumpy nerves and a wet-blanket disposition. There's golf, tennis, swimming and skating, as the season offers opportunities. At all times the long walk is possible. Women who have forgotten how to play are dull company.

Use a cleansing cream instead of soap and water on face and neck when traveling in a Pullman. Better for the complexion when cinders are flying about and dust is present. Slip on big old white gloves before going to sleep. Tie up the glory crest in handkerchief or scarf. Protection of skin and hair are as important as treatment.

UNCLE SAM BARS BAND OF ST. HILDA

Permission Refused to Enter UnitedStates to Fill Engagements

St. Hilda's Band, which delighted so many thousands with its fine music at the Toronto Exhibition, plays its last concert in Canada at Belleville next Thursday. This organization is unique and outstanding, being well called the "Premier Band of England," besides being world's champions 1912, 1926, 1927, 1934, 1928, a title gained in competition with the best bands of the Empire. An interesting fact about St. Hilda's Band is that it is composed of working miners and the blackness of colliery work in the old land made possible this overseas tour. A number of concert engagements were made in the United States but these had to be cancelled as permission to enter that country was refused by their government, not a very neighborly, act any way it is viewed.

Argyll Light Infantry officers are sponsoring the appearance of the famous band in Belleville and the armouries should be packed Thursday night as a real musical treat is in store. After the band concert the musicians will play for dancing, bringing a delightful evening to a very pleasing close.

Oakville, Sept. 22—At a meeting of the subcommittee of the Ontario Baseball Amateur Association, held last evening in the offices of the Hillmer Coal Company here, the most important item to be dealt with was the protest lodged by the Milton Club against Playgr Dorland of Sydney. The committee found the Player Dorland was eligible to play with Sydney and accordingly disallowed the protest.

BOSTON SOX NOW ON TOP 2ND DIVISION

"Shano" Collins' Team Surprise Team of American League

YEAR A SUCCESS

Wes Ferrell Tamed Yankees and Senators Tied For Second

(By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer

The Boston Red Sox and their new manager, John "Shano" Collins, last are proving themselves the surprise package of the American League. If it seems now they will finish in fifth place, which is exactly three places higher than their most optimistic supporters would have predicted a month ago.

If they do, Collins may regard his season in the race as a bowling success. He took over a team that consisted of a Yankee-class pitching staff and one very fine outfielder, Earl Webb, and in the closing month of the campaign he has a club that is playing some of the best ball in either league.

In vaulting from eighth place to fifth, the Sox have won 11 of their last 13 games. A double victory over St. Louis yesterday, 2 to 0 and 3 to 2, gave them five in a row, their longest winning streak of the year.

Bill Morris, a right hander, pitched his third victory and second shutout in ten days as he let the Browns down with three hits in the first nine innings. He allowed only four blows in the night cap and two, when his mates jumped on Sam Gray for all their runs in the sixth and seventh innings.

Wes Ferrell has allowed only one run in his last three games including one in losing attempt.

Ted Fe Second

The New York Yankees fell into a tie with Washington for second place in the American League when they dropped a 5 to 1 decision to Cleveland, while the Senators were defeating Detroit, 6 to 3 and Don, 5 to 3.

Wes Ferrell turned in his 21st triumph as he held the Yankees to nine widely scattered hits while his support bunched eight off Charlie Ruffing. It broke a 10-game winning streak for Ruth, Gehrig and Co. The Senators beat Ted Lyons, ace of the White Sox staff by bunching their eight hits in four frames.

Tapering off in preparation for the world series, the Athletics dribbled with Detroit, winning one game, 3 to 2, and losing another, 8 to 5. Jimmy Foxx hit a home-run in each game, his second coming with the bases filled in the seventh inning of the nightcap and tying the score.

National League

Tony Kaufman, of St. Louis Cardinal relief pitcher, held Brooklyn Robins for 4 2-3 innings while the National League champions came from behind to win in ten innings, 11 to 10. Jimmy Collins' triple after Jim Bottomley had walked gave the Cards the verdict.

The Cincinnati Reds took their third straight from the floundering Boston Braves, 3 to 2, when they fell upon Betbeze for four hits and two runs in the eighth inning. Red Lucas chalked up his 16th victory.

The Phillies pecked away at four Pittsburgh pitchers in both their series opener, 6 to 4. Bill Harris, the Pirates' rookie sensation, lasted only four innings. Jim Elliott held the Pirates well until the eighth, when Ray Benge relieved him.

Roger Hornsby's pitching staff received a fine rubbing as the New York Giants made 37 hits good for a 15 to 3 win over the Reds. Fred Schumacher went the route for the winners, while five Chicago fingers had little success.

Peanut growers have thought that seed stored more than a year or two would lose the vitality, but Government tests indicate that good peanut seed can be kept satisfied with Detroit, winning one of two or four years of storage.

LARRY GAINS WINS EASILY

Defeated Jack Renault of Montreal in Interesting Bout

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22 (CP)—More than 6,000 of Toronto's faithful sporting public thronged their way into the coliseum at exhibition park last night to see Larry Gains, colored heavyweight champion of the British Empire, easily outpoint Jack Renault of Montreal in the feature fell round bout of a show sponsored by the Shamrock Athletic Club.

After more than two years campaigning abroad, the dusky Toronto boxer returned to his home city last night and rewarded Toronto sport followers with a classy display of boxing skill. Boxing cautiously for the first two rounds, Gains opened up in the third and steadily increased his points margin until the end, at times keeping the storm of blows throughout, his veteran Frenchman was hanging on during the last three rounds.

One of the most outstanding features of the heavyweight bout was the ring generalship of Gains, who, in the early part of the fight, played to the semi-final six rounder between Eddie Phillips, negro lightweight champion of Ontario, and Leo Rioux of Montreal after 45 seconds fought with Phillips' manager was Doc Doctor a 19 year old youth from Cobalt, Ont., who had less than 20 professional bouts to his career. Referee Osborne stopped the fight when Rioux began gushing from Rioux's eye.

COURSE ONLY ONE POSSIBLE

Condition Can Be Righted By Loosening Up Gold Hoard

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22 (By The Canadian Press)—Britain is in a comfortable financial position, despite the temporary discount on Canadian dollars in York, George Wilson, finance commissioner of the province, declared today. He declared that Britain had taken the only course open to her, but only regret being that she had not taken this course at an earlier date. Mr. Wilson thinks that the situation can be relieved by the United States and France loosening up their tremendous stores of gold.

"Britain's position is perfectly obvious that it had to happen," observed Mr. Wilson, commenting on Great Britain's suspension of the gold standard.

"The depletion of Britain's gold reserves would have resulted in a collapse if it had been allowed to continue; there is just a question of whether the action was taken soon enough."

"I think it perfectly logical and natural development. It will have a steadying influence and Britain and England is fundamentally sound. The remedy lies in the hand of the United States and France. The United States have five billion dollars of gold and the two financial reserve banks which they should have, are now the whole world goes off the gold standard what good is their five billions in gold."

MAN FOUND AFIRE IN CAR

Brantford Motorist Rescued on Highway, Feared Dying

Hamilton, Sept. 22—Howard L. Knox was found in his automobile badly burned at 6 o'clock last night when he fell into the rear seat of his blazing automobile when he attempted to extinguish the flames.

He was taken to the Hamilton General Hospital by Dr. L. Gibson, forced him to leave his car on Highway 6 near Stoney Creek, 12 miles from the city.

Flames on the roadside attracted the motorist's attention. When they ran to investigate they found Knox in the rear of the car. His clothing was afire and his face and hands were also his head and shoulders. Grabbing a blanket they extinguished the flames by the roadway, braving the terrific heat. Knox was unconscious when Dr. Gibson arrived, and slight hope was held for his recovery. The upper portion of his car was badly charred.

Knox was homeward bound when the trouble occurred. He was married less than a month ago.

It will not be loaded on the Hydro commission or the province.

This was the ultimatum delivered by Right Honorable Arthur Meighen, former premier of Canada, on Monday when he addressed the gathering of municipal representatives of Hydro and its vast development.

WARM VALLEY FOUND IN B. C.

Tropical Mystery Spot Found in North Region

Edmonton, Sept. 22— Back from a 1,000-mile trip to the mystery spot of Northern British Columbia, Fr. Jules Lacombe, Oblate missionary of Fullerdiphs, brought word here of having discovered a "tropical valley," reports of which had lured him into the far north country.

Any beliefs that the so-called "tropical valley" is a myth were exploded by Dr. Henry, who is a retired Philadelphia doctor and former college mate of Dr. Percy Thornton, president of the Canadian Stadacona Mining Co.

For two days, the party camped in the valley, which is surrounded by tropical delights. They found it to be three-quarters of a mile in length.

The valley is honeycombed with hot springs. These springs run through the valley, Dr. Henry said on his return to Edmonton Saturday, and the temperature ranged in many spots and we were told by Indians that during the winters of 50 below zero water does not freeze in the valley.

The party was disappointed in finding that a hot fire had swept through the valley and destroyed much of the plant life, specimens of which were taken for botanical purposes. Nevertheless, some magnificent ferns were obtained.

The valley was located in the mountains near the confluence of the Racing and Toad Rivers, about 400 miles northwest of Fort St. John. An Indian guide, Charlie McDonald, member of the Grand Lakes tribe, is given full credit by Dr. Henry for leading the party to the "tropical valley." Had it not been for this Indian, who lives in the northern district, the valley might not have been found.

The party left here for the north on June 4, determined to explore this uncharted spot of the continent, reported to be rich in mineral vertation despite its northerly location.

ARRESTS LEAD TO CRIME CLUE

Police Believe James Shortt is Kidnapper of Policeman

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22 (C.P.) — A fingerprint on a charge of receiving stolen goods was identified as James Shortt, wanted here on a charge of armed robbery at Millbrook Ont., when he appeared yesterday in police court.

Shortt is thought to be the man after whom the body of Provincial Constable Marshall Hodgson and Detective Sergt. Frank Cook found lying four of Western Ontario highway near the Lake Scugog district last month. He was identified by neighbors of Mrs. Mabel Shortt as the man who was in court on another case. Later Hodgson was called in and it is hoped by police to have readily identified Shortt.

MOTOR LAUNCH IS DESTROYED

Gasoline Stove Explodes In Cabin of Cruiser, Crew Safe

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22 — Two men escaped death narrowly when the motor cruiser Playfair was destroyed by fire in the Ontario end of Clarkson last night. An explosion in the gasoline stove of the boat filled the cabin with flames.

Hugh F. McKechnie, the owner, and Harold Laurier, both of Toronto, who were aboard the 35-foot cruiser at the time, made a desperate but futile effort to quench the flames. Finally they were forced to take to the small dinghy which was being towed astern.

"CORRECT CLOTHING FOR MEN"

OBJECTIONS TO WOMAN BOSS

It is announced that Signorina Aida Colombo has resigned as chief operator of the famous opera house, La Scala, because some the conductors and musicians objected to being "bossed" by a woman.

In spite of the "emancipation of woman," which has been so much talked about since the war, and which is a very real thing, the liberation is not complete. Women have been given equality in a great many things, but man still barks at any being actual "boss." Men will serve with a woman, but they will not serve under her. It hurts their pride.

Musicians are particularly touchy in this respect. Mary Garden, as capable an artist as exists in the realm of grand opera today, "bossed" the Chicago opera house on a season only. Then she had to go back on the staff.

Dorothy Destinn, one of the greatest operatic sopranos of her day, died four or three years ago, tried to "boss" a conductor at Covent Garden opera on one occasion, telling him that she wanted the orchestra to do so-and-so when she was singing a certain aria. He refused—and she dropped his face. That was the end of her career at Covent Garden.

Woman will not be fully emancipated until she is allowed to be boss when she really knows the job.—St. Thomas Times-Journal.

SIX MONTHS' SUSPENSION OF STANDARD

Consequences of Suspension of Gold Pound Indicated

FALL "UNITED"

Pound Will Not Go Way of Post-War Franc or Mark

London, Sept. 22 (CP)—Rushed through parliament in record time and signed by the Royal Commission this British Government's emergency measure suspending the gold standard went into effect today for a period of six months. The stock exchange was closed for the second day.

The House of Commons passed it last before dashing through last night in spite of a determined attack by other back-benchers and the House of Lords was summoned this morning to give it the necessary three readings. The commission acted for the King who is in Scotland.

There was no division of the bill vote but the government won by-election at Fulham in the concurrent elections. Labor sponsors opposed the bill either on the ground that currency measures already adopted were unnecessary or that the gold tie was severed.

Bill Is Passed "Limited"

Mr. Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who introduced the measure, went on the air to assure the nation that the fall in the pound Sterling would be "limited" and to invite fall on finance in the world to "co-operate" to weather the crisis.

"The consequences of the suspension, he said, "are bound to be disagreeable. They will not be very serious but they will not be indestructible. We must all put up on the way of the (post-war) franc or the mark."

Empire Loyal

"The British budget is now the envy of almost every other nation in the world. There is no longer any talk of an internal inflation and there are no longer any grounds for disturbing doubts about the sources of our financial position."

He expressed regret at the flight of some foreigners "who still have money deposited here and will be able to take it back as they wish to take it back—in depreciated pounds, and will therefore suffer a loss in terms of their own currencies. We regret that loss and have gone all we can to avert it. But the great majority of our people in Great Britain there is no cause for alarm or panic. I trust, in the end, it will undoubtedly happen not the slightest cause for anxiety about the security of their wish in banks, or your money in savings banks. Avoid a panic.

"We mean to do our duty. You can do your part not panicked or tried, by carrying on calmly and steadily and with your normal functions in confidence. Britain will emerge from the present crisis—and she has faced greater crises and emergencies in the past — a stronger and better nation than before than before."

Hewenger affirmed and denied a report that a movement was under way to call leaders of the labor opposition into the National ministry, now composed of conservatives, Liberals and minority labor members.

REFERENDUM MAY BE ASKED

American Legion Convention Grapples With Liquor Question

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 22 — The American Legion, meeting in its national convention here, took time out today to display its strength and skill in an all-day parade, but its controversial issues rested with committees, which will report to the reports tomorrow and Thursday.

Resolutions committees, including some proposing a stand for modification of the prohibition era nation-wide referendum, were in the hands of the resolutions committee which was due to meet tonight. As a result of President Hoover's address yesterday, in which he discussed the condition of the national treasury, and of speeches by other leaders, including the National Commander, Ralph T. O'Neil, official today agreed that action for further payments on the Veterans' bonus is extremely unlikely. Legion officials from all parts of the country told reporters that they believe nothing further in the way of cash payments will be asked by the convention. A protest against the present interest rate of 4½ per cent on bonus loans had strong support, however, including that of Commander O'Neil.

LARGE BARN DESTROYED

Campbellford, Sept. 22—Visible for miles around, fire last night destroyed the large barn on the farm of Percy Wood on the Irish Lands, Seymour Township. The season's crops also were a complete loss, but neighbors succeeded in saving the live stock. Charge in the wind saved the farmhouse from destruction. The damage is about $7,500.

JAPAN WANTS NEGOTIATIONS

Spokesman Declares That Japanese Were Provoked

(By James P. Rowe)

Tokyo, Sept. 22 (A.P.)—The Japanese government today notified its minister to China that it stood ready to express the proposal of T. V. Soong, Chinese minister of finance, for the appointment of a joint China-Japanese commission to endeavor to solve the Manchurian controversy.

Hong Kong, Sept. 22 (A.P.)— The insurgent Chinese government at Canton issued a proclamation today asserting peace would be made with the Central Nationalist government at Nanking in order that a united China might "deal with the Japanese latters occupation of Southern Manchuria."

Geneva, Sept. 22 (A.P.) —China called on the council of the League of Nations to interfere directly in the occupation of Manchuria and Japan replied that the incident should be settled by negotiations between the two powers.

Alfred Sze, Chinese minister to London asserted that Japanese soldiers had seized Nationalist arsenals without provocation and demanded that the council force Japan to withdraw and pay reparations to China.

Kenkichi Yoshizawa, Japanese spokesman, denied that Japan's action had been without provocation on the part of the Chinese and cited the alleged attack on the South Manchurian Railway. He contended that restoration of the Status Quo was a question for negotiation between the two powers.

He recalled that Japan has rights in Manchuria guaranteed by numerous treaties and said that the Chinese had often been guilty of destructive gods. Japanese civil and wounded disproved Chinese claims to non-resistance.

"Japan is not making war on the Chinese people. The affair should be settled by direct negotiations between the two governments Interpretation by the League presumably would further inflame public opinion in my country which is already over-excited."

NEW LAW ACT OF WISDOM

Economist States With Regard to Suspension of Gold Standard

New York, N.Y., Sept. 22—Professor Edwin R. A. Seligman, internationally known economist of Columbia University, thinks the suspension of the gold standard by Great Britain "a wise measure."

"The new law is an act of wisdom and statesmanship," said Dr. Seligman. "Far from being a declaration of bankruptcy, it is evidence of the determination to grapple with an actual situation.

"England's embarrassments are different from those of many other countries. While England people are rich, the government is poor, not because the people are poor, but because of the inequalities in the payment of the national resources."

The forsaking of the gold standard, he added, implies a burden on the creditor class and a relief to the debtor class and will give productive industry a new chance.

"It will work toward counteracting the continual fall of prices," he said. "Incidentally it will help to restore the confidence which has recently been so lacking. It will encourage the core employment and decent wages, he can afford to spend more for the necessaries of life."

RAWDON SCHOOL FAIR A SUCCESS

Large Attendance at Township Fair at Springbrook

Rawdon, Sept. 22.—On Thursday, September 17th, the School Fair for Rawdon Township was held at Springbrook with a large attendance of interested parents and children. During the morning a slight rain fell and the day looked anything but ideal for a fair. However, the sky cleared about ten o'clock and autos, buggies and wagons hastened in the grounds. This of course, necessitated late judging, but plans to change and to extend the time on a rainy day.

There were six nice calves and two lambs with a large exhibit of poultry. There was a large exhibition of roots and grain and a good display of corn together with farm and home mechanics and nature collections.

In the adjoining room were a variety of different flowers and over fifty kinds of vegetables that the summer has been exceptionally dry.

One large table held the cooking and the judges were hard with about twenty loaf cakes and as many boxes of cookies, pies as well as plates of macaroons and muffins. The apples and tomatoes were also well represented. In the room hung writings, art and posters on health. Some of the latter showed very cleverly done.

A large number of relief maps and scrap books on agriculture were also exhibited.

The Fair was under the capable direction of Mr. Jas. Wilson, Agricultural Representative, and he was assisted by Mr. J. R. Sheldon, of Oak, as graduate of O.A.C., and Miss Helen Garbutt of Peterborough judged the canning of school. Other assistants were Messrs. John Thompson and Charles Hoard.

Nine schools took part in the parade and each received a good ground ball. They were as follows:

S.S. No. 14—Clarence Bailey, teacher, and S.S. No. 15—Ridge Road, Miss Winnie McIlroy, teacher, tied for first place.

2nd prize—S.S. 11, Brown School Miss Vera Wright.

3rd prize—S.S. 20, Springbrook—Miss Barlow and Miss Hoard.

4th prize—S.S. 17, Rawdon—Mr. Cash.

5th prize—S.S. 3, Bonarlaw—Miss Aikens.

6th prize—S.S. 4, Williams—Miss R. O. Gibson.

Order marching were:

S.S. 19, Minto—Miss Ruby Barber.

S.S. 16, Bateman—Mrs. Hayton.

Most of the schools were strangers and these rivalries, and S.S. No. 4 depicted farmers and farmyards.

In the School Cheers:

S.S. 11 and 17, "Maple Leaf," winning first place.

S.S. 1 sang "Carry On, Carry On" coming second.

S.S. 17, sang "The Maple Leaf," winning third place.

S.S. 4, "The Spanish Cavalier," also sang.

Strathcona Exercises:

First—S.S. No. 14.

Second—S.S. No. 1.

Third—S.S. No. 5.

Fourth—S.S. No. 11.

Fifth—S.S. No. 20.

Sixth—S.S. No. 3.

Stern Measures Needed In Troublous Times

Windsor, Sept. 22—A declaration that "in these troublous times" stern measures are necessary to prevent certain factions gaining their ends by force was entered yesterday by Mr. Justice Jeffery, in delivering his address to the Grand Jury at the opening of the fall assizes at Sandwich.

His Lordship's comment came with his mention of the case in which Harry Binder and five other Communists are charged with obstructing the police. The charge followed trouble with a meeting of the Labor party at which A. A. Heaps, M.P., was the speaker. He impressed the jury that persons have no right to interfere with law officers, whether the latter are "right or wrong," and stressed that in times of uncertainty the police should be given every possible consideration and co-operation by the general public.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

With the strength of anger she struck her uncle's hand aside. "Tell him you will not have his cruelty or cowardice. Tell him! Do you remember two years ago, when your vaqueros raided the village? That was sport too, wasn't it? And do you remember the girl who never became quite sane after those ruffians of yours and Jito's had their way?"

A sob caught the girl. "He very glad I have not my way tonight, is some of these merrymakers would die."

Jito raised his huge hands—tears of pent-up anger stood in his eyes. "If a man had spoken to me as you have, he would have died." His only answer was the girl's disdainful laugh.

Jito turned to Morales. "I come here tonight to deal out justice to one who defies your rights. This is no time for the interference of women."

Inreadily Morales looked at Adela. "She will not interfere. I forbid it. But let your justice be brief."

Jito gave his vaqueros an order, and in the instant they brought the bent old man before him.

His faded blue overalls were tattered at the edges. The shoes upon his feet were cut and worn. He looked up fearfully at the towering vaquero.

"For the love of God, senor," his thin, high voice began, "what do you want of me? I have nothing here. I am poor."

Jito smiled thinly. "And you will be many times poorer before the night is finished." He lighted a cigarette. "Two months ago, Felipe Dominguez, I told you to leave this country. I told you we would not tolerate your presence here in the midst of our range."

"But I own these five acres. I have my papers." The voice trembled.

"Papers, you peon dog. What are papers to us? Are we clerks and schoolboys that you talk of papers?"

"But, senor," the voice had taken on a pleading tone, "I own this land."

"Now, by the cross, you own nothing here except through the tolerance of Paco Morales. You all know that. He tolerates you. By his favor he lets you live, and when he chooses to raise a finger and say go, it is better that you go, or that you had never been born. You know all this as true, yet you thought—God alone knows what you thought. Perhaps you thought that El Coyote would protect you. Men tell me that this bandit has promised to protect all of you. Well, he makes poor success of it tonight, eh, amigo? But let that pass. You have been warned to go. One montor ago I warned you again. You said nothing. You did nothing."

"I asked for time," the thin old voice replied. "I asked only to stay until after harvest. It would ruin me to leave my home before harvest."

"It will ruin you in any case, old one." Jito puffed slowly at his cigarette. The flames roared higher, gleaming on the vaqueros' bridles and polished conchas, casting long shadows that seemed to dance about them. Beyond lay the village in shadow. Suddenly Morales had laid his long arms about Adela. Beside her Ted stood, grimly alert.

"For the last time has Paco Morales tolerated such recreation as you on the range," the big Mexican went on. "Who is the law here in north Mexico? Morales. You holds back the gringo on one side and the bandit on the other? It is Morales. Why should he allow you to settle here like ticks on a cow, here in the valley, and benefit from what his work has brought about?"

"But senor, the land was bought."

"Now by every saint in heaven, you come back to that. So you say the land was bought! In this country the governor of Sonora himself could not sell you security on the range of Morales. This land is ours. We who follow the cattle own it. It is free, open land for us. It is not land for farmers or for farms."

Jito pushed his huge form through the door, followed by Ted and Adela. On a table beyond burned a lamp. Before it, in the dim circle of light the old man again held the peon girl. His bloodshot eyes glittered. His hand moved over the smooth skin of the girl's throat and he grinned drunkenly at Jito.

"Is she not a soft armful, caballero? For Dios, she will make one forget the day side of the night." And he pawed the shrinking girl.

Impatiently Jito shook his head. "Let her go."

In surprise the other looked up. He shook his head drunkenly.

"Let her go." Jito's voice had sunk to a dangerous growl.

"Que va! She is the best of the lot, this little dove."

Jito took one step forward. His hand closed about the man's neck and he raised him bodily from the ground.

"Once before I have had trouble with you," he said in low, even tones. "The next time my born will cast lots for a dead man's saddle." He shook the choking vaquero, then dropped him contemptuously to the floor.

"No harm will come to you, senorita," Jito told the girl. "It is with your father we have business." He turned again to the old man. "Felipe Dominguez, because you did not see fit to take Morales's warning, this night your house is to be burned, your fields trampled by horsemen, and your cattle shot. And because you have defied my orders, these men will give you thirty lashes of rawhide. Tomorrow, when the desert country hears, they will begin to understand it is not wise to stand out against the will of Paco Morales."

The girl ran to Adela and falling before her, wound both arms about her knees.

"No, no, senorita. For the love of God, make them spare him. Do not hurt him. Do not burn his house. Let them give us but a little time, senorita, and we will go. He did not mean to defy Paco Morales, but we are poor, senorita, so very poor, and Jito turned. "To climatic conditions I am indifferent," said Mahatma Gandhi when, as pictured above, he sat foot on European soil—at Marseilles in France—for the first time on his long voyage from India to London. He was bare-headed and bare-legged, and his only garments were a long cotton robe swathed around his waist and upper limbs and a white handwoven shawl wound around his shoulders. This native Indian garb, in which he proposes to brave the rigors of the English climate, appears in striking contrast to the modish occidental dress of the woman shown here descending from the deck of the liner Rajaputana. Note, at the right, the eternal curious small boy.

Jito nodded to his men. Laughingly, they seized the old peon and bared his withered, wrinkled back. With swishes they sted his arms to the doorway.

"A bad day for you, compadre, when you invoke El Diablo to protect you," muttered a vaquero.

"What is the protection of El Coyote worth now?" And viciously the man lightened the rawhide thongs.

Adela threw herself between the vaqueros and that aged, drooping form in the doorway. Her eyes, narrowed with anger, threw back the light of the rising flames. Her words lashed them with their tone of cold contempt. "You talk of justice, you dogs, you cowering, fawning dogs, afraid to fight against an old man and his daughter." Her fingers tore at the knotted thongs and again a wave of pent-up anger arose from the crowd. Jito had impatiently about him. "I cannot hold them long," he said in a low tone to Morales. "They must have blood."

Once more Adela's voice rose above the tumult. "Jito, make them wait until tomorrow." But her words were lost among the jeering cries, while the maddened crowd pressed forward. A vaquero stood raging before Jito.

"Silos when do we take orders from women, hombre? Send her away while there is time."

The tumult redoubled. The shouts had taken on a new ominous quality. It had become the low, deep roar of a wolf pack ready to close on its prey. Quickly Jito raised Adela and carried her to where Morales stood. "Even if I would, I cannot hold them now," he said. "In another minute I should be fighting for all our lives."

He raised his head. "Bueno," he called. "Bring the babes to teach this peon wisdom."

Morales looked quietly on, his mouth set in a half-smile. His restraining arms had closed about the girl, and with a sob Adela closed her eyes.

A stalwart vaquero rolled back his sleeve and picked up a heavy quirt. He stood full in the flaring light of the haystack and raised his clenched hand for the blow.

That blow never fell.

From somewhere out of the darkness burst a flame and the vaquero screamed, clutched his breast, then fell headlong at his master's feet.

A clear voice called from the darkness. "Let no man move."

Clustered about the ranchhouse each vaquero stiffened. One dreaded word passed among them like the voice of death itself.

"El Coyote."

The flames of the haystack rose higher, tossing great sparks into the blue desert sky. Dimly the vaqueros could distinguish a double rank of silent horsemen surrounding them, ready and ominous. The firelight danced on the steel of their rifles and glittered on the conchas of their chaps. Again came the clear voice.

"I am sending men in to disarm you. If one of you moves it is death to all of you."

Five masked horsemen approached. Quickly they made a little pile of the weapons of Jito's men. A short, stocky rider seemed to have taken charge. Presently he ordered the vaqueros to stand before the door. Meanwhile other riders gathered the horses.

WHEN THE GREAT MAN OF THE EAST VISITED THE WEST

The utter simplicity of Mahatma Gandhi is illustrated in this unusual photo, showing the world-famous Indian leader resting on the deck of the liner which brought him to London. He has drawn his home-spun white cloak about him and, with folded newspapers for a pillow, reclines on an ordinary wooden bench. He refused to travel otherwise than in second class on the long voyage from India.

"Well, you will not interfere, I forbid it. But let your justice be brief."

"Jito gave his vaqueros an order, and in the instant they brought the bent old man before him."

"For the love of God, senor," his thin, high voice began, "what do you want of me? I have nothing here. I am poor."

Bank of Pittsburgh Suspends Business

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 21 — The Bank of Pittsburgh, N.A., founded in 1810, has suspended business and asked the Comptroller of the Currency to take charge of its assets, which on July 1 were reported as $43,343,953.

James C. Chaplin, vice-president, said the suspension was due to a drain "which has arisen most largely from withdrawals of depositors banks in other sections of the country."

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 37. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

When Clayton heard the shot, he became agonized with fear and apprehension. He knew Jane was threatened with some danger. Tarzan heard also and quickened his pace. Soon Clayton was left hopelessly behind. He called aloud to the Ape-man. Tarzan dropped lightly to his side from the branches above.

Stooping down before Clayton, Tarzan motioned him to grasp him about the neck, and with the white man upon his back took to the trees. The next few minutes were such as the Englishman never forgot. High into swaying branches he was borne with what to him was incredible swiftness.

From one lofty branch the agile creature swung with Clayton through a dizzy hundred yards, maybe, the sure feet threaded a maze of interwoven limbs, balancing like a tight rope walker high above the black depths. How Clayton admired those great muscles!

Clayton fairly caught his breath at the sight of the horrid depths below them. Yet, with all his seeming speed, Tarzan was actually feeling his way with comparative slowness, searching constantly for limbs of adequate strength to hold this double weight. Presently they came to the clearing before the beach.

Tarzan's quick ears had heard the strange sounds of the lioness's efforts to force the cabin. They dropped a hundred feet—landing with scarcely a jar. The ape-man darted ahead, but in time to see the huge lioness's tawny body slowly disappearing through the cabin!

MUST TRAIN WHOLE OF MAN

Anglicans Deplore Fact of Inadequate Training

Toronto, Sept. 21.—"Men are beginning to realize that the training of the intelligence alone is not sufficient," said the Very Rev. J. F. Lloyd, Halifax, at the Synod today.

"We are going back from the German method of research to the old Oxford and Cambridge system of training the whole man."

In his opinion there were too many children who left the church after being confirmed, a fact which he attributed to inadequate training.

Dr. Hiltz called attention to the co-operation effected denominationally in the publication of religious literature for children.

"In the schools of Winnipeg," said Dr. H. M. Speechly of that city, "my experience is that prayers and singing is a lot of humbug. It is not taken seriously enough and I think that in time we did something about it."

Progress in religious work in the public schools is very slow. "It is unfortunate," said Dr. Hiltz, "that in all the provices except Quebec, any comment on Bible readings is forbidden."

W.M.S. BRANCHES MET AT MADOC

Madoc, Sept. 21 — The W.M.S. of Trinity United Church, Madoc, entertained members of the W. M. S. of Queensboro, Hazzard's, Cooper, Eldorado and Ivanhoe at their parlors in Bonisteel Church on Thursday afternoon, Sept. 17th. The rooms were beautifully decorated with fall flowers and the many small tables were adorned with vases of roses and with the snowy tablecloths, silver and glass made a very gay appearance.

The programme was chiefly furnished by the guests. Opening devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. S. S. Ashley, president of the Home Branch. Mrs. Dafoe gave an inspiring address on Prayer, urging that the necessity on the members for the furthering of their missionary work. Mrs. Howard gave an interesting reading entitled "Almost Johnnie's Quilt," followed by a discussion by the members of Cooper Branch on Home and Foreign Missions, those presenting the claims of Home Missions being Mrs. Ferguson and Mrs. Wyatt, while Foreign Missions were presented by Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Ketcheson after the singing of "Take Time to be Holy." Mrs. Hinchliffe of Eldorado read Mrs. Fred Comerford's report of the Branch Convention recently held in Belleville which was most interesting, instructive and inspiring.

Mrs. Keene of Queensboro, gave an excellent paper on "New Testament Missionaries," after which Mrs. Mervin sang a solo, "I Love to Think of Jesus," the pianist being Mrs. A. Wyatt. Mrs. Harris of Hazzard's gave a short talk on "The Miracle Songs of Jesus," dealing with the Poet of Nazareth as He life was spent —in the home village, in school, in the shop, in the neighbors' homes, by the sea and on Calvary.

Mrs. Lovelace, of Ivanhoe, read a paper prepared by Mrs. John Clements on "Our Obligations," leaving with these from the standards of Look, Pray, Give and Go.

After singing "I Am Thine, O Lord," the closing prayer was offered by Mrs. G. W. Rivers. A pleasant time was then spent socially over the tea-cups and the dainty lunch served by the home members.

The gathering of the W. M. S. of the district will do much to further the friendly relations of the members of the different branches who attend, and we have the chance to spend a social hour together.

A vote of thanks and appreciation was tendered by the visitors to the hostesses of the day.

Pretzeleers are Pantry Pirates

Night raiding isn't at all unusual in the homes of those who pretzel. Especially when they're Christie's O-SO-GUD Butter Pretzels. O-SO-GUDS are so tasty and so easy to digest that they are a favorite midnight lunch.

No wonder. O-SO-GUD Pretzels, baked by Christie's, are brittle, crispy, crunchy; salty; just as good between meals as with soups, salads, sardines, cheese or iced drinks.

Children love them, and rightly too. They are good for children.

RUPEE PEGGED AT 36 CENTS

Indian Conference Heard Sir Samuel Hoare

London, Sept. 21—(by Georgs Hamblenne, Canadian Press staff correspondent)—The Indian rupee is to be maintained at its present pegged price of one shilling and six pence—36 cents.

Sir Samuel Hoare, secretary of State for India, told the Indian Round Table Conference today: Since the fixing of the rupee by statute at one shilling and six pence, sterling has until today been synonymous with gold and for all practical purposes the stability of Indian exchange has been based on sterling.

"His Majesty's government are determined to use every means in their power to prevent such a calamity," Sir Samuel continued.

"I appeal to you, the most distinguished gathering representing almost every Indian interest, Princes and politicians, Hindus, Moslems, Sikhs and Christians, to throw your great influence into the scales for courage, stability and determination at a moment of national trial."

His announcement that the rupee would remain quotable in relation to sterling means that since it is fixed by statute at one shilling, six pence—about 36 cents—it may fall in value in the same proportion as sterling fails.

"To follow gold and so to increase the sterling value of the rupee at this juncture, is, I am sure you all agree, out of the question," Sir Samuel declared.

It reached its great intensity at the village of Anna in Western Ohio. The community of 1,200 population was without a whole chimney today, and every house and building was damaged to some extent.

P. E. COUNTY LEAGUE IN FINAL GAMES

Eurekas and City Service Are Now in Finals

Picton, Aug. 19 (by mail) — The Prince Edward County Softball league games are drawing to a close with the last game to be played next week. In the first game Bureaks defeated Cities Service 11 to 10, and in the second game Cities Service won 6 to 5. Mr. and Mrs. Morden are evenly matched and the remaining game should prove a real thriller.

While fishing in Smith's Bay one day last week, Bill and Ralph Walmsley, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Walmsley, caught 24 large pike. Judging by reports of catches, waters surrounding the county, as well as inland lakes, abound in fish.

The duck season being open once more, hunters are again seeking their feathered visitors. So far the hunters have not been very successful in their bags. Hunters report plenty of birds but they are very shy of decoys.

A Chrysler sedan, driven by Mrs. H. E. Sprouls emerged undamaged after colliding with a hydro pole on Burns Ave. The pole was smashed off close to the ground and remained dangling, held up by the wires. In turning the sharp corner on Bird Street to Burns Ave. Mrs. Sprouls' car struck the side-walk, the driver momentarily losing control. The driver was unhurt and the car undamaged.

Mrs. Theodore Dwight of Toronto, is with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Poste. Mr. Poste is seriously ill.

Sports and competitions are held while the judging is being done.

Mr. James H. Poste is very ill at his home on Paul Street.

DANGER OF RUSS ENTANGLEMENT REMOVED

Chinese Urge Mobilization of Troops While Japan's Decision Precludes Russian Participation

Japanese Withdraw Men From Area of Soviet Interest

JAP COMPLAINT

Declaration That Chinese Reject Suggestion From Tokyo

(By Glenn Babb)

Shanghai, Sept. 23 (A.P.) — Immediate danger of Russia being drawn into the Sino-Japanese imbroglio apparently averted today by the decision of the Japanese military not to occupy Harbin.

Tokyo reports have determined to keep the Manchurian crisis strictly as between China and Japan, excluding all interventions, whether Russia, the League of Nations or the Kellogg Anti-War Pact signatories.

Japan Cautious

Although the Japanese chief of staff in Manchuria had ordered troops to move into Harbin to protect the Japanese community there, the cabinet at Tokyo evidently decided it was not worth while to risk Russian intervention, and ordered Changchun made the northern limit of the occupied zone.

A majority of Japanese residents of Harbin, inland metropolis of Manchuria, are expected to withdraw to safer points within the Japanese military cordon.

Conference Held

Moscow, Sept. 23 (A.P.)—Kokichiro Hirota, the Japanese ambassador, conferred until late last night with Maxim Litvinoff, Russian foreign minister, in connection with the developments in Manchuria.

Soviet Russia's interest in the Japanese occupation of Mukden and other railway centres including Changchun, terminus of the Chinese Eastern Railways, has been manifest since the beginning of the clash in Manchuria.

Russia Neutral

China and Soviet Russia own and control jointly the Chinese Eastern railway whose spur from Harbin with its Manchuria is a direct feeder to the Japanese-controlled South Manchurian railway which reach tidewater at Port Arthur and Dairen and dominated the trade of Southern Manchuria whose leading commercial centres are now occupied by Japanese military forces.

China's Rejection

Tokyo, Sept. 23 (A.P.) — The Japanese legation in Nanking today advised the foreign office here that China had rejected Japan's proposal for arbitration of the Manchurian question.

The refusal was based on the Chinese position that the original suggestion for arbitration, as it came from Geneva, was not an official and lacked the consent of the Nanking government.

Meanwhile, press despatches said Japanese military authorities had cancelled the issuance of visas to men from Southern Manchuria toward Harbin. This was interpreted with the decision yesterday of the Japanese cabinet against the movement of Japanese troops north of Changchun, the northern terminus of the Japanese controlled South Manchurian railway.

Word of the first Japanese Consul General Chuichi Ohashi at Harbin, denied previous advices which said he had requested the movement of Japanese troops to Harbin for the protection of his fellow citizens.

The British Consul General's report followed the announcement yesterday from Changchun that the Japanese second army division had been ordered to proceed to Harbin upon receipt of Ohashi's plea for protection.

An Anxious Wife

Although the members of the British Schneider Cup team brave death every time they go aloft to get the top speed planes, it is to their wives the laurels should be tendered, because every time the Schneider Cup planes flash through the air over the Solent the women know their men are in danger, yet they are anxious not to show any anxiety. Conversations on Church Union Will Be Resumed

(By Thomas T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 23.—(Canadian Press - Cable)—Conversations between the Anglican and Free Church representatives concerning union are to be resumed.

The Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Church today accepted the invitation of His Grace Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of Canterbury, to appoint representatives for such conversations.

The earlier negotiations were by consent suspended in 1925, the opinion then being they had made as much progress as seemed possible at the moment. The results then arrived at will form the basis of the resumed discussions.

In accepting the Archbishop's invitation the Free Churches Council expresses its disappointment at the "inadequate consideration given by the last year's Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops to the work of the last two years' joint conference with the Free Churches. The Lambeth Conference had thus not made easier the renewal of the conversations, the Council added.

Militant Chinese at Nanking Ask For Mobilization

ARE OUTSPOKEN

Armed Resistance to Japan Favored By Meeting

Nanking, China, Sept. 23.—(AP)—A mass meeting attended by about 100,000 persons adopted resolutions here today calling upon the Nationalist Government to order a general mobilization in view of the occupation of Southern Manchuria by Japanese troops.

Army and navy officers and leaders of the Kuomintang, the dominant political party of China, as well as students and citizens, addressed the meeting, which was orderly despite the fiery speeches and frivolous of action.

A spokesman for the Nanking Kuomintang addressed the assembly on the "rising comrades," and declared that as long as a single inch of Manchuria was unrestored to the Chinese every person in the country was ready to offer his life to the nation's cause.

Armed Resistance

Madame Shao Yuan-Chun, wife of the President of the Legislative Yuan of the Nationalist Government, declared the women of China were ready to stand beside their brothers and husbands. She urged the Government to prepare immediately for armed resistance to Japanese encroachment, asserting the women of China would organize a Red Cross.

Flags flew at half staff over most of China today in observance of a nation-wide period of mourning over the Manchurian situation. It was designated as national humiliation day.

Meanwhile the Government categorically denied it had entered any Manchuria agreement with Japan concerning Manchuria since laying the case before the Council of the League of Nations.

Shipment Released

Finance Minister T. V. Soong, who also is chairman of the Flood Relief Commission, refused a shipment of $4,000 worth of supplies brought from Japan on the steamer Amagi Maru for the benefit of the 1931 millions of persons suffering from the extensive floods.

In a message to Premier Hamaguchi, Chairman of the Japanese Flood Relief Commission, Soong said:

"You will doubtless understand that recent events in Manchuria have made it impossible for this Commission to accept these supplies."

Tokyo, Sept. 22.—A Foreign Office spokesman announced tonight that Japanese troops occupying Kirin in Manchuria, so far as occupying positions outside the South Manchurian Railway Zone are concerned, must end.

"Overseas Settlers" Return to Homes in British Isles

Many Return From United States to Britain

FIGURES GIVEN

London, Sept. 23.—(Canadian Press Cable)—For the first time in history—except during the war—more people are returning to Great Britain from the Dominions than are emigrating to them, the "Overseas Settler" organ of the Overseas Settlement Committee, pointed out today.

During the year ending June 1931, there was an outward balance of settlers from Britain to the Dominions of only 300, and the outgoing persons exceeded returning area, only in the case of New Zealand. Figures for the first time in history—except during the war—show a net inward balance.

In the same period the total British emigration to all parts of the Empire was 28,000 compared with 80,000 in the preceding year.

And many Britons who settled in the United States since the war are returning to Britain, the "Overseas Settler" added.

John Munro Electrocuted Verdict of Coroner's Jury

Adjournment Hearing Held In Police Court Rooms On Tuesday Night

FATHER TESTIFIES

Munro Must Have Touched Live Wire, While Making Repairs

That John Wesley Munro came to his death by electrocution was the substance of the verdict given by the jury which listened to evidence given in the unfortunate accident which befell the young man on Monday afternoon, September 14th inst., while engaged as a lineman in the employ of the Belleville Hydro Electric Power Commission.

At the police court room, Tuesday evening the enquiry took place with Dr. W. W. Boyce, coroner, presiding and Mr. H. C. Yeoman, County Crown Attorney, examining the witnesses.

Father Testifies

Mr. John Munro, father of the victim, testified that his son was working on a tower on Field Street, when he received the fatal shock. The afternoon of the 14th inst., when he received the fatal shock. Witness and Clarence Cook were at the same place. Witness' attention was standing on a plank between two poles assisting in the changing of some wires. The wire was not charged they were working on, but some wires were. Deceased told witness he was not touched a live wire, except the voltage. Deceased shouted and fell towards witness who caught him and they lowered to the ground with the aid of a rope.

Taken Down Unconscious

He was unconscious when taken down. Witness tried to revive him on and was in the act of fastening it to the pole when Mr. Cook arrived the shock.

It was the reasonable and safe way of performing this act, was his answer to a question by the Crown Attorney and it was also ordinary to leave the wire charged. The work was being performed. Forty-two seconds elapsed and had deceased died in this work and was 34 years of age.

Post Mortem Report

Dr. Cronk, who performed the post mortem, presented his written report, which in effect was that death was caused by electrocution. Witness was called to the scene shortly after the accident and could not say the victim was alive, but thought he was dead. Absence of blood from the heart showed that electrocution caused death. There were slight burns on the right arm and wrist.

Clarence Cook, who was working on the tower with Munro, gave evidence similar to that of witness of that given by Mr. Munro, father of the boy. Was working on foot over a live wire and may have touched it with his foot.

John Moore, a laborer of the Hydro Commission, was assisting in handing up material and evidence but it was of an immaterial nature. He did not see the contact of the wire and only assisted in lowering the victim to the ground.

This concluded the evidence and the jury returned their verdict as recorded above.

New York, Sept. 22 — Sterling cable transfers opened today at 4.86 3-8 and show little or no close yesterday, which compares with 4.86 3-8 at which its value was fixed under the Gold Standard Act suspended this week by Great Britain.

Dollar Fluctuates

New York, Sept. 22—The Canadian dollar fluctuated widely on local foreign exchange markets today and at noon was quoted at 92 cents, one cent below that time Wednesday, but a cent higher than today's low figure.

The dollar opened at 92 1-3 cents in United States funds, 1-3 cent below Wednesday's final figure. It dropped speedily to 91 and then came back a bit.

The Journal of Commerce today said it had learned from local bankers it is impossible to make purchases of Canadian dollars with purchases of gold. Canadian banks are not exporting gold to bolster the Canadian exchange, the newspaper said.

New York, N.Y., Sept. 23.—In the swift succession of spectacular economic developments in the past three days, an important section of Wall Street was announced progress in completing major economic readjustments necessitated by the depression.

Share prices, particularly rails were sent hurling upward, in the most brilliant market recovery since the war debt moratorium of June. Stock Exchange officials lifted the ban on short selling, once more providing a relatively free and open market, after two days of the most stringent control since the Great War. Trading was confidently resumed in London, with a good effect both here and in Paris.

Many shares surged up 2 to 15 points. Some conservative brokers have regarded such a decrease as too rapid.

Prospect of Wage Cuts

The wage reductions initiated in the railroad industry may affect some 1,000,000 workers if generally accepted, and the talk of reductions in the steel industry threatening the pay of some 1,300,000 workers, could be of more, as regarded as of wholly favorable import, even by those severe and economistic who believe that a general wage revision downward is inevitable. While acknowledging that the immediate consequence of such reductions may be a time curtailment of purchases of automobiles, radio sets, and other luxuries, they say that ultimately this school of thought, of which Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale, Chase National Bank, is a leading exponent, holds that wages must parallel to stem the tide of deflation already began running out two years ago has proved more rapid and thus prolonged its flow.

These observers assert that the shrinkage in commodity prices, which has been the most rapid, must penetrate through the economic structure before our economy is again stable.

late who are joining with the scientists of the Empire in the great memorial. Here is given an unrecalled opportunity for examination of the man's character and examining the roads that lie ahead. The memorial will be the Royal Albert Hall, which is being devoted to the Faraday Centenary Exhibition.

General Smuts also inaugurated the Darwin memorial marking the centenary of Michael Faraday, the noted pioneer in the discovery of electro-Magnetism.

Presidential Address

Curiously enough in its 100 years the British Association has never departed from London. The scope of this year's programme, however, is a break in this tradition, especially in view of the difficulty of getting accommodation elsewhere for so great a company.

General Smuts was installed in the presidential chair at 3 o'clock by P. G. Bower, the retiring president. The presidential address usually makes his presidential address — his Scientific World Picture of Today," before the assembled delegates in Central Hall, Westminster, and three overflow halls will also be packed, for great public interest has been aroused.

Science Changes World

Accepting the task of setting the keynote for the greatest gathering of scientists ever seen, General Smuts appears in a new role altogether. Soldier, military admiral and true statesmanship which took him to a prominent position in the world of statesmen has already framed the peace treaty and created the League of Nations. General Smuts adds a keen perception of the entire scientific effort of modern day.

In his presidential address General Smuts will confine himself to no particular branch of science. Rather he will show the information science has undergone in the past years and will indicate the important possibilities opened up as a result of the new light thrown upon materialistic to research in which the known forms mind and matter, between life and death itself will be sought.

SCHAAF RULES A FAVORITE

Meets Tuffy Griffith in 10 Round Bout at Chicago

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 23 — Answering Ernie Schaaf's stirring knockout victory march through the American heavyweight ranks may be heard at the Chicago Stadium tonight when he stacks his new reputation against Gerald Ambrose "Tuffy" Griffith in a 10 round bout.

Because of the Boston heavyweight's great showing since last spring and Griffith's budding hopes to stop him, the battle had the complexion of one for best fight naturals of the year. Chicago was so excited about the match that 13,000 were expected to pay $40,000 gate to watch it.

Because of his seven straight knockout victories, Schaaf ruled a slight favorite. He outweighed Griffith by 18 pounds.

2 CAMPS ON PROHIBITION

American Legion National Convention Meets at Detroit

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 23 — The American Legion National Convention went into business session today with the controversial issues of prohibition and bonus payments in the foreground.

The bonus question was pushed into prominence last night by a statement from the National Commander, Hanford J. O'Neil, in which he renewed his promise that there will be full and free discussion of the issue. It was the first utterance on the subject by a Legion leader since President Hoover's address at the opening session Monday in which he called attention to the condition of the national treasury and asked that no burdens be added to it.

The convention was divided into two camps on the prohibition question. It was not a wet and dry division—rather, one group insisted that the Legion follow the policy of past years and keep the issue out of its discussion, while another favored a vote on one of the many numerous resolutions which have been presented. The latter group was not in agreement as to whether the convention should be asked to advocate repeal of the 18th Amendment, modification by referendum or liberalization of the enforcement acts to permit manufacture of beer.

Resolutions containing a wide range of prohibition proposals were in the resolutions committee, which got into a technical wrangle last night and failed to act on any of them.

Madman is Sought For Collings' Murder

New York, N.Y., Sept. 23 — Convinced that Mrs. Benjamin P. Collings is "relieved of all culpability for her husband's strange death in Long Island Sound, District Attorney Alexander B. Blue, of Suffolk County, today pressed search for a madman, who he believes murdered the Standard Oil executive.

Detectives and New York police were looking for a man, whose name, Mr. Blue said, was known. This man, described as a recently paroled lunatic from a New York institution, was missing from his usual haunts.

Three certain youths also were sought on the possibility that one might be the youth who boarded the cruiser Penguin with an older man and then attacked Mrs. Collings after throwing her husband into the Sound.

YOUTH DIES FOR MURDER

Brockenshire Expressed Contrition in Last Hours

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 23 (C.P.) — Walking bravely to the scaffold, John Brokenshire, of Windsor, was hanged this morning at the local jail, for the murder of a police constable here on December 11th last. Just before the trap was sprung Brokenshire said: "God is merciful to me, a miserable sinner."

The trap was sprung at 7.57 and he was pronounced dead 13 minutes later. Throughout the night Brokenshire maintained a perfect calm according to his spiritual adviser. He dressed, ate a fair breakfast and met death bravely.

On the eve of his execution for the shooting of P. C. Roy McQuillin last December, 22nd, Brokenshire last night openly expressed his contrition for the deed which brought him into the shadow of the gallows in a letter which he wrote to Constable McQuillin's widow.

Brokenshire underlined that last at the suggestion of Rev. T. W. Barnett, his spiritual adviser, but he was eager to adopt the suggestion according to Mr. Barnett, in his final effort to put right matters with the world.

As well, yesterday afternoon he wrote a final letter to his mother in Windsor, who was unable to stand the strain of a farewell visit to the final other friends. There was, however, no mention made of Harry Clarkson, his companion at the time of the shooting.

This morning at eight o'clock the 23 year old youth was led from his death cell in which he has lived for the past six months to the scaffold, to pay with his life for the crime which caused a province-wide sensation last, December.

His spiritual adviser was with him throughout all of his last 24 hours on this earth, sitting up with him through last night to console him and give him last minute spiritual aid.

Just after midnight Mr. Barnett expressed the conviction that Brokenshire was at peace with his Maker and quite prepared to die. Up to that time he had not broken down outwardly, but Mr. Barnett was not at all certain that the boy would be able to maintain the same courageously calm exterior."

Story of Shooting

The crime for which John Brokenshire paid the supreme penalty of the law today was the murder of P. C. Roy A. McQuillin, of the Toronto police force, on the evening of Dec. 11, 1930.

Brokenshire with a companion, Harry Clarkson, had stolen an automobile in Windsor. They drove to London and exchanged the car for another with their attendance continuing the journey to Toronto. About seven o'clock in the evening, McQuillin sighted the stolen car and with Constable Hailburton, gave chase in a police machine, On Scarlett Road, on the outskirts of the city, the two officers men caught up with Brokenshire and Clarkson. McQuillin halted them and stepped to the running board of the latter car. "Have you got a driver's permit?" he asked Brokenshire. The latter fumbled in his pockets, drew a gun and fired six shots into McQuillin's body, killing him instantly., Hailburton ran to the back of the stolen machine and fired five shots through the window. One bullet struck Brokenshire. The two men then ran.

Then began the dramatic chase. Every available police officer in this district joined in the search for the slayer. Shortly after midnight Clarkson was captured in Windsor while Brokenshire made a gun but did not resist arrest. They were taken to Brockenshire.

Twenty hours afterward, word came to the police that the slayer was seen prowling within miles from the scene of the crime, and the search centred in that district. Eventually two officers sighted the youth in an orchard. One of them, Constable Wright, called him but when Brokenshire reached toward his pocket as though searching for a gun.

During the many hours following the shooting of McQuillin, Brokenshire had crossed the icy waters with the thermometer hovering around zero. He had broken into a school and there obtained a first aid kit with which he bandaged the minor wound. His feet had swollen so badly that he discarded his shoes and socks early in the chase. He had bled profusely from the wound and was a pitiful object of fright and exhaustion when eventually captured.

But it was the wound inflicted by Warden Willis which caused death for the Widnsor lad. For months he fought for death in the hospital. The bullet had ragged through his abdomen and the surgeon's stitches were required to close the wound. In addition complicated operations were required. They were given by fellow officers of the slain officer.

Meanwhile, Brokenshire and Clarkson had been held in custody with the latter under custody. Brokenshire, absolute in the confession of all blame in the shooting at a dramatic meeting shortly after his capture. Clarkson went on to face trial for carrying concealed weapons.

Brokenshire was unable to face trial at the winter assizes, owing to his physical condition, but at the spring assizes he was convicted and sentenced to death. Clarkson was sentenced to five years imprisonment.

VILLAGES ON THE DECREASE

Tabulation of Population of Hastings County Villages Given

Increases and decreases in population are equally divided according to the census returns given out by the Bureau of Statistics at Ottawa, the result of the recent census in 25 villages taken in July. The tabulation given included only the villages of Ontario and these will make interesting reading for the people of Hastings County.

Hastings County, from which it is cut, has decreased slightly in population since the 1931, the census of the last census. Madoc decreased in population by two, while Tweed showed a decrease of 71. The population of Madoc is now 1036, while Tweed is 1587.

Marmora showed an increase of 52, this being a steady growth in this village, Frankford is up 58, the census now giving the latter town a population of 844. Marmora has increased 46, their standing now being 996. Stirling advanced in population seven, the ten years' increase in addition of this thriving village now being 937. Wellington, in Prince Edward County, has increased 147. Population now being 963. Picton has showed a decrease from the years ago of 12, their population being 753.

Blasts Hard But Are Unexplained

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 23.—Mystery surrounded the explosion which wrecked the Don Jail here last night, shattered residents and spread rumors that a demonstration was being staged on behalf of John Brokenshire, hanged today for the murder of Constable Roy McQuillin.

There were three separate explosions. Squads of police rushed to the scene after the blast, but into the night had found no trace of damage. No complaints were made from Jail authorities of any disturbance.

20 COMPANIES TO FACE JURY

Movie Companies to Appear Before Grand Jury

Toronto, Sept. 23.—Announcement was made last night by Attorney-General William H. Price that Ontario is launching prosecutions against the alleged motion-picture combine in this Province.

Proceedings will be instituted by way of indictment. The indictments are now in course of preparation. R. H. Greer, K.C., chief Government counsel, has been instructed to move at once to bring the cases before the Assizes which open in Toronto on Oct. 5.

Other Provinces Co-operate

Both the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan will, it is understood, co-operate with Ontario in one set of prosecutions against the alleged combine.

Seven twenty companies are affected by Ontario's action. All these were named by Peter White, K.C., as parties to the combine, he "found" as the result of his investigations of various phases of the motion-picture industry.

They are companies:

Famous Players Corporation, Limited, and the following affiliated theatre companies: B. and P. Theatres Limited; Eastern Theatres Limited; Premier Theatres Limited; Mansfield Theatre Company, Limited; United Amusement Corporation, Limited; Theatres Holding Corporation, Limited; Hamilton United Theatres, Limited; B. C. Paramount Theatres, Limited; Allied Theatres, Limited; Radio-Keith-Orpheum (Canada) Limited; Paramount Public Corporation; Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada; saw the following distributors: Canadian Educational Films Limited; Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited; Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited; R.K.O. Distributing Corporation of Canada, Limited; Columbia Pictures of Canada, Limited; Regal Films, Limited; United Artists Corporation, Limited; Vitagraph Limited; Tiffany Productions of Canada, Limited; First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and, Vitagraph, Inc.

Attorney-General's Statement

A brief statement covering Ontario's course of action in the matter was issued last night by the Attorney-General. It is as follows:

"On July 20, 1931, this department received from the Minister of Labor at Ottawa the report of Mr. Peter White, K.C., Commissioner appointed under the Combines Investigation Act, to investigate certain phases of the moving-picture industry. This was a very extensive report, and it exhibits comprising 10,000 pages, and other data.

"Immediately requested Mr. R. H. Greer, K.C., to act as counsel and to co-operate with Mr. L. A. Humphries, K.C., solicitor to this department, in reading the evidence and the exhibits, and advising the department whether there was in the case that could be proved in court.

"Mr. Humphries spent most of his time in reading the evidence and exhibits, and Mr. Greer and Mr. Humphries have been engaged doing nothing else but this work.

"Consultations have been held at that there was a combine and has stated this specifically in his report. Messrs. Greer and Humphries have found that, in their opinion, there is evidence to justify the finding of Mr. White that there was a com bine.

"I have therefore, asked Mr. Greer to proceed at once to bring these cases before the Assizes which open in Toronto on October 5. Proceedings will be instituted by way of indictment in full.

BALDWIN AT BRITISH HELM

MacDonald Expected To Be in "Skipper" in Few Days

London, Sept. 23 (AP)— Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, leader of the Conservative party, was at the helm of the British Government today.

As Lord President of the council Mr. Baldwin became acting Prime Minister yesterday when Ramsay MacDonald left for a secret destination in the country to recuperate from the strain of keeping the round sterling afloat on the world's money markets.

Mr. MacDonald's friends and associates were not alarmed over his condition and felt that a few days of golf and rest would restore him to tip-top shape as they have on previous occasions wherever overwork dictated temporary retirement from official cares. He himself is understood to be pursued by the ups and downs of his physical condition.

The Daily Express quoted him as having told a colleague recently that on his customary early morning walks he often meets those who tell him how pale and haggard he is and others who congratulate him on looking so well.

"A Shifty Lot"

"The first fellow telephones his friends that I seem at death's door," the Prime Minister was quoted, "while the other spreads the news that I am as fit as a fiddle, and they are both right. It only shows what a shifty lot we politicians are."

Some newspapers professed to see in his departure a connection with the growing movement for an early appeal to the electorate on a protective tariff issue. The Herald, however, in reading the evidence was being offered a bewildering mass of advice and was seeking a way to take counsel with himself on a decision other newspapers wrote of the election as an assured fact. Others declined to be asked to set the date. They reiterated that Mr. MacDonald was willing to go to the country on a tariff policy on which it was said he was sure of the support of the Conservatives and half of the Liberals headed by Sir John Simon.

David Lloyd George Liberal leader, was understood, however, to be hostile to an election and was said to have prepared a scathing manifesto against it if it becomes an issue. The Labor faction was considered to be watching the course of events and was ready for eventualities.

WOMEN WITHOUT WORK

The plight of the thousands of men at present out of employment excites the sympathy of all who are grateful that they know where their next meal is to come from. It is not perhaps so generally realized that with the increasing numbers of men out of work, the number of women without employment is also larger. The distress of a family whose head has been fruit lessly seeking work is only heightened when the daughter whose efforts have barely kept the home going finds herself without work in factory, store or office. And the distress of the woman without home or friends and no work is likely to be even more acute than that of a single man without a job.

The Women's Department of the Employment Service of Canada could tell many hard tales of the women and girls with the best of references and experience who cannot find employment as clerks, typists, stenographers and saleswomen. The idea is fortunately drying out because person in a woman she is therefore domesticated and capable of performing the manifold household tasks efficiently and compatibly. Nevertheless there are women courageously entering domestic service from office and store who continue happily in the new work.—Ottawa Citizen.

STANDING THE SHOCK

The way in which the financial world stood the shock of the departure of Britain from the gold standard was a credit to civilization, when much more serious results might have been anticipated.

Of course these things do not come out of the blue without some sort of preparation. Though the decision to abandon the standard came as real news, there have been movements in the world of international affairs which gradually prepared the way for the announcement. Just as the financial conditions did not reach this state suddenly, so the blow was not quite sudden. The world staggering from such a series of blows as have been rained upon it and public confidence for many months stood up and took the shock like a man and survived.

been lost at sea was one of the most unexpected good pieces of news the world has had. More than ordinary interest is taken in men who take their lives in their hands and set out across the ocean though they know the way is hazardous. For more than six days not a word of the fate of the trio had come to civilization, the men having been adrift off the coast of Newfoundland.

SENSATIONAL STORY

The rescue of three fliers who had

To add to the mystery little information was given out by the Norwegian motorship Belmoira. Yesterday the trio were transferred to an eastbound ship and still little detail has come out.

The dash across the ocean was one of the most daring on record. Wily Rody, a German bought a secondhand plane with his entire savings, and with him he had as pilot Christian Johanssen and Fernando da Costa Viega, a Portuguese, who went along with the party for the fun of it.

This was the happy group who set out, and this was the group picked up off the face of the Atlantic.

Fate has been good to them, and they gave the world a sensation when the world needed something to take its mind off pounds, shillings and pence and also dollars and cents.

SEA SERPENTS

Sea-serpents do not die willingly. They may disappear for a month or a generation but they come back, even after forty years as the other day at Eganville when the original which appeared forty years ago or a descendant came around.

It seems that the sea-serpent only returns with someone's memory. The sea-monsters have an uncanny knowledge of what humans are thinking and come back just to satisfy them.

Suppose there should be a great sea-monster—what of it? There were greater monsters on earth than the sea-monster was in the sea, many aeons of time ago.

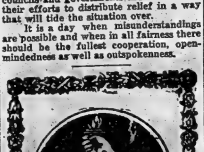
IDEALISTS

How idealistic men and women are after all! They look for a golden land, a land of beauty and eternal spring and summer, they look for a well of eternal youth, they look for eternity of pleasure and joy.

A fabled tropical valley has been found in British Columbia where streams of boiling water flow even when the weather in the country around about suffers at a temperature of fifty below zero. The spot which has been told in fable does exist, Dr. J. Norman Henry of Philadelphia, who went to the place declares all that has been told of it is true. The valley is honeycombed with hot springs.

This land remained in the knowledge of Indians alone until a few weeks ago when Dr. Henry's party arrived within the canyon, three quarters of a mile in length. That is the sad part of it. The valley is too small for the whole human race to resort thither.

Columbus discovered America in a mistaken idea of making the west route to India. That was an event worth while, when one stops to realize that until 1492 the world practically knew nothing of this land except in the stories of the Vikings.



Someone may now look forward to the discovery of the fountain of eternal youth and springtide. Who knows but that it may exist somewhere. But it hardly seems likely. The fountain would not be great enough to satisfy all humans who would resort to it, to seek for it!

THE PRESENT

The present time with unemployment the most pressing result of world problems is one calling for consideration on the part of all. Councils and governments are doing their best to make it possible that relief shall be distributed in the form of work and no doubt many are bewildered with the immensity of the task. On the other hand is the problem which vexes the very lives and minds of men who have families to support and no work by which to earn their living.

This is a day and age when the sense of brotherhood and cooperation must be expressed, in deeds as well as in words. Men are harassed with the worries of lack of work and pressing obligations while councils and governments are harassed in their efforts to distribute relief in a way that will tide the situation over.

It is a day when misunderstandings are possible and when in all fairness there should be the fullest cooperation, open-mindedness as well as outspokenness.

IN EVERY LAND

By Aline Michaelis

In every land, in every town,
Perhaps in every street
As I go roving up and down
Lives like my own I meet.

We may at first seem far apart,
With distant goals to win;
But later, reading heart in heart,
We find ourselves akin.

One has a dream, long-cherished, dear,
One has a beckoning hope,
His hope is mine, reflected here,
And towards his dream I grope.

Ah! Beautiful it is to find
Where but a stranger stood,
A being, kin in heart and mind,
And of kindred mood.

It must be we are fashioned so
To show us, in the end,
How in dear brotherhood we go,
With every man a friend!

ROSES HAVE A WAY of blooming when and where like as Glenn T. McLaughlin, of the St. Charles Motor Co. can testify. He planted some rose bushes early this season and by his regret saw them wither and apparently die. Then to his surprise the rose bushes were born again, apparently, and commenced to show signs of life, developing every day until they were bearing beautiful blooms. Now these bushes are budding again, for although nocent men have been railroaded to prison via the third degree route. Stories are told of suspects being flogged, of sleep being denied them until, utterly exhausted, they finally consent to sign prepared confessions of their guilt. Such is a recent article in The Nation. A simple suggestion that modern third degree methods was suggested. It was that a law be passed making any such confession invalid unless made and signed in the presence of the prisoner's attorney. Police of cities where the "rough stuff is considered part and parcel of the day's grist will declare that this will provide another loophole for the crooks. Admittedly, it will mean more work for the police department, compelling the personels to go out and get evidence instead of devoting themselves to hammering confessions out of men. But it is to be doubted that it would impede justice very much.—Hamilton Spectator.

BELIZE, STRICKEN BY HURRICANE and tidal wave, where the dead bodies were so many that they could not be buried on time and were burned in huge piles, one hundred and fifty found in a church being burned in the ruins of that edifice, though only a few days away, reached the screen in Belleville Saturday night, pictures of the stricken town being shown at the Belle Theatre during the second show. In addition to scenes of the disaster a picture was shown of the visit of the British Governor who spoke for him on account of his illness caused by overwork following the hurricane. She was carrying on for him and made a dramatic figure as if she had herself just stepped out of the hurricane, a typical example of the nobility of England, always equal to the emergency of the moment no matter how momentous and taking it all as in the day's work. Other scenes showed distribution of hot soup to the black population who marched along in single file and had their bowls filled by jolly faced Britishers who kept chanting, "Hot soup", Hot soup, here'ye'are, move on now, keep moving," while newspaper men had their films hurrying to bring out pictures and films from Belize so that the world could quickly see the extent of the disaster.

BETTER DRESSED

Those of us who are prone to sigh for the "good old days" and wish that they would come back might take heart from the reflections that the standard of living in the past twenty years has improved enormously. For instance, how many working class families of that period could have afforded an automobile or how many were there who could afford even one cinema a week.

There is the matter of dress, we have Frank Chitham, of Harrod's, the famous London store, as the authority for the statement that evidence of the high standard of living can be seen on every side. In a recent address he stated that not only were people of today better clothed, but they were more fashionably dressed. Style, he said and not mere utility enters into the purchase of almost every article of clothing to a degree unthought of before the war.

More money is being spent in English homes too, it is confidently asserted. The growth of the practice of buying furniture of the hire-purchase system is held largely due to increased earnings and the more confident view of the future that has a larger income engenders. Countless social pleasures are within the reach of people to whom they were unknown before the war.

THIRD DEGREE

Employment of the third degree is an admission of departmental shortcomings, of the inability of the police to secure convictions ethically. Undoubtedly, it has resulted in the conviction of criminals who otherwise might have escaped punishment for their wrong-doing but they not been subjected to third degree pressures. The result of such cases, however, must be recorded by those cases in which innocent men have been railroaded to prison via the third degree route. Stories are told of suspects being flogged, of sleep being denied them until, utterly exhausted, they finally consent to sign prepared confessions of their guilt. Such is a recent article in The Nation. A simple suggestion that modern third degree methods was suggested. It was that a law be passed making any such confession invalid unless made and signed in the presence of the prisoner's attorney. Police of cities where the "rough stuff is considered part and parcel of the day's grist will declare that this will provide another loophole for the crooks. Admittedly, it will mean more work for the police department, compelling the personels to go out and get evidence instead of devoting themselves to hammering confessions out of men. But it is to be doubted that it would impede justice very much.—Hamilton Spectator.

21ST REUNION ON SATURDAY

Unit's Annual Gathering Will Be Held in Belleville

A battalion reunion every year since they were demobilized in Kingston, Ont., in 1918, is the proud record of the Twenty-First Battalion C.E.F. claim. This year the thirteenth get-together is to be held at Belleville on Sept. 26, and constitutes a record inasmuch as this is the only battalion of the line that has hung together through the hectic days of peace as through the trying days of war.

They were recruited in Eastern Ontario, with Kingston as head quarters, in 1914. Starting with the Somme in 1915 they have the proud boome of not losing an objective they had taken it and of not failing to take an objective when they undertook to do it. It was the enviable honor for the band of this battalion to form the Canadian Corps across the bridge at Bonn, where General Sir Arthur Currie took the salute, into the occupied territory of Germany.

It was in Kingston in 1918, on the eve of arriving home, that the decision that city rendered to this battalion a welcome and farewell dinner. Since then battalion clubs have been formed in Kingston, Peterboro', Ottawa, Belleville Toronto and Cornwall, and each year in turn the comrades of these centres send out invitations to Canada and the United States inviting their pals of other days to gather with them to renew acquaintances, and to tell over again those experiences which only the returned man can fully appreciate and understand.

Major-Gen. William St. Pierre Hughes took the battalion to France and led them until promoted to Brig adier Commander, and to this day this bond of affection is as strong if not stronger, between the "Father" of his battalion and his "boys", the "Twenty-First Battalion Tyne, Madden, Secretary, Box 340, Belleville, Ont.

British in Better Position to Buy

Washington, Sept. 22 — The trading position of Great Britain will likely be materially aided through the temporary suspension of the gold standard, the United States Commerce Department was informed yesterday by its London office.

The Commerce Bureau cable said that since the pound sterling will be cheaper, Britain will relatively be a better market to buy in than before. It will be a poorer market in which to sell.

Letters to the Editor

LABOR AND STRAM SHOVEL

Belleville, Sept. 22, 1931.

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

I trust you will find space in your valuable paper for the following:

Some local unemployed twitter included called on the Mayor yesterday afternoon asking him to see that some were placed on the North Front street job. Now this is the much-talked-of steam shovel. His answer was, Boys, the steam shovel will do the work. Is this a worthy answer from one who professes to do so much for the labor men? I don't think so.

This shovel will take work from at least 100 men, and three 100 men would have made a few dollars to help tide them through the winter. Surely Belleville men don't want charity! But they have to live, and on what? The unemployed men now, if called upon to work this winter, have they not got the warm clothes, boots, etc., needed for cold weather?

The Mayor's reason for using the steam shovel was the fact that it would save the taxpayers a few miserable coppers, quite right. But the taxpayer is losing more in help ing to keep these people (the labor class) in groceries, coal, rent, doctor's bills, if you are lucky enough to get one.

Does Mr Mayor realize if the labory has no work, the grocery man who is a taxpayer, gets no money, the landlord, who is a taxpayer, gets no rent; the coal merchant, who is a taxpayer, gets no money.

Surely Belleville isn't going to see the humble poor turned out in the streets, through no fault of their own, as has happened in Toronto and other cities, jst for a few miserable coppers which they are willing to to work for in order to live only as human beings. Let's all turn out to Friday night's council meeting and ask for jus dums.

(signed) PLAIN SPEAKER.

Women's Interests in the Home

The Beauty Box

By Helen Follett

Now is the time when the permanent wave of the gentle sex gives us a bit the worse for wear. It has extended somewhat from the scalp but that doesn't matter as fashion's coiffures, many of them, are flat-topped, sleek and tidy. Summer sunshine has dried out the old mop changed its color possibly. All in all the brain thatch is in need of attention, and a monthly visit can't work it in form again. Every night brush thoroughly. Twice a week apply hot oil, mineral or olive oil will do, or you can buy some special preparation at your favorite beauty shop. Next morning, a shampoo. Friction the scalp whenever there is a minute to spare.

Thick lips sometimes result from mouth breathing. They can be tightened up by exercising the muscles. Simple enough. Just smile and unsmile. Grin to the limit, then pucker. Good plan to make it a habit to hold the lips close to the teeth. If their surfaces are rough, use camphor ice, or any cream that isn't highly perfumed. Bad luck girls that better lips, keeping them in a ragged state of unlovelieness. Mum'l!

Few women recognize their arms nowadays. Freckles, sunburn have wrecked them. Give them extra heavy scrubbing when taking the daily bath, using a heavy brush vigorously to skin off dead scales. Give a massage with tallcum. And, during that beautifying hour at night, anoint them with a heavy emollient, one that will stick on till morning.

Too much hip spread is as distressing as it ever was, despite the fact that curves have been boyed. They can be rolled away. Lie down on the bed on the floor. Lift a foot, extend it across the body, stretch the leg far across. roll over. This pulls hard on muscles around the centre of the body. Good to rouse a sluggish color.

A healthy woman, in good form, should be able to walk five miles a day without suffering fatigue. She should do at least three miles an hour. Can you do that? If you don't can and will? Don't ask me;

Fashion Fancies

By Alice Aiden

Just a strand of pearls, not only on the neck but to trim your dress. Paris is showing evening gowns of black velvet with pearl studded straps and fringe and many ropes of pearls in fichu effect as trimming.

You can't go wrong if you select an evening ensemble of velvet in black and white. Lovely is a frock of black transparent velvet its upright cap encrusted with diamante embroidery. It is worn with a hip-length coat of black velvet with ermine collar and cuffs.

The high point of closing the coat seems to have been reached with a coat of heavy black velvet that closes high up at the side almost near the shoulder. It has a large shawl collar of mink.

Just a dash of glitter is to be found in many of the best afternoon frocks. Over a dress of heavy black transparent crepe has a white mesh yoke and black net sleeves. The yoke and cut out sleeve sections are bordered with strass in a leaf design.

A suitable compromise on the length of an evening wrap for early Autumn wear is the three quarter length. This is used for a wrap of wine colored velvet with a high shirred collar and shirred sleeves. The KNEE is wide and there are golman armholes.

A colorful cavalry is promised the evening shoe find this season with shoes of many colors in brocades and satins. The new mode brings us an open-shank sandal of silver brocaded multi-colored satin with a stripping of the same colored satin and metal kid scallops of alternating gold and silver.

SPEED

by Jack Lawson

Geraldine emerged from a cloud of dust and swung her roadster into the service filling station. She raced her motor and bore down on the horn button as the attendant failed to appear.

A tall youth in greasy overalls climbed out of the greasing pit.

"That's right, lay on it!" he grinded.

"I thought you were dead," Geraldine scoffed.

"I looked like a tornado coming up the road, so I just ducked for shelter."

"Well, you can check my oil, water and gas."

"You must be going places."

Geraldine loosed her head and started off over a yellowing cornfield. The young man stood by, wiping his hands on an oily rag and feasting his eyes on her.

"I suppose you're contemplating leaving the country—when you lose the race this afternoon," he said.

"Mind your own business," Geraldine snapped.

He lifted the engine hood and buried his head a moment.

"Serious, just how good is your boat?" he asked as he stood up again.

"Just good enough to pass anything on the lake," Geraldine replied.

"You're really figuring on winning this race?"

"And when did I accept you into my confidence?"

"I understand you're throwing a big party tonight."

Geraldine didn't reply.

"Make the other poor suckers feel better, I suppose."

"Say, listen, you're altogether too fresh."

"Oh, yes—and no. I'm figuring on attending your party.

"O, you are?"

"Yes." She closed the hood.

"Well, I'll send over and let you know if we need any ice cuppers. Charge it."

"Another groan for the old man," Geraldine roared off in a whirl of dust.

As Geraldine sped homeward she grinned over the naivete of this fellow. He was an impertinent chap. But there was something nice about him. They called him Bill. Geraldine always tried to snub him, keep him in his place, but generally it didn't do any good. He was always a couple of steps ahead of her. And the funniest part of it was, no matter how fresh he was she always came back for more.

The caterers were preparing the house for the evening festivities. Geraldine parked her car on the driveway and strolled down to the lake. Then, her mechanic, was out tuning up the boat. He whizzed over the water in the flashy craft, Geraldine's eyes glowed. It was a beauty. It would surely walk away from everything in the race.

But that afternoon the trim mahogany speedboat, with Geraldine at the wheel, had a hard time keeping on the heels of a scarlet and gold entry. Round and round the six-mile course they went. That red boat, gaining at the turn, crept ahead of Geraldine to make it exasperating. And as they neared the finishing gun a roaring whoop from behind told the victor. But Geraldine was on the verge of tears. She was sore inside.

The house was stirring with activity. A dance orchestra played. Guests were arriving. Geraldine's lawn chairs. But Jerry was not in the crowd. Not that she was for went.

She was in her room, with the door locked. She had been there since the end of the race. Jerry's mother rapped gently on the door.

"Come dear, don't act like a child," she called.

Geraldine wasn't sobbing, nor were her cheeks tear-streaked when she opened the door. She pouted and hung her head.

"What have you been doing here all this time?" her mother asked.

"Nothing," Geraldine replied.

"I know you wanted to win that race dear, but as long as you lost you must make the best of it. Your father wasn't just running right today."

"That's the whole trouble — it was," Geraldine said. "And, what's worse, the fellow that won is that Bill, the filling station attendant down at Three Corners."

"But he was driving his father's boat, and his father is David King, the superb boat maker. And Jerry's neighbors of ours. They just bought the place next to Geraldine's. And furthermore, dad invited them to the party tonight."

"Not Bill?"

"Yes, of course."

Finger Print on Plaster Cast Reveals Murderer

Prints Fatal to Strangler in Vienna

Not long ago the body of a young man was found in a woods in the environs of Vienna, Austria. He had been choked to death. The police made use of "negroid" an extremely plastic modelling material by which smoothly accurate masks are secured. A "negroid" bust of the victim was identified by his relatives after the body was buried.

Examining the cast closely, the police discovered a reproduction of finger prints—evidently those of the murderer. The print was compared with the finger print records on file at police headquarters and there a similar print was found. The name and history of the owner was laid bare. He was arrested not long afterwards and convicted of the murder.

So finger prints are being used in every country to protect society from criminals.

Prints on Things you Eat Are Dangerous to You

It is not only to criminals that finger prints are dangerous. They are full of peril to honest people. For, if you are living a scientific or a liberal life much as you read, your prints may be preparing the way for your visit to a sick bed, the scene of a germ disease. This is not mere sensation. A'S CAN TIE THEIR RECORD OF 110 WINS

Registered 105th Victory at Expense of Detroit Tuesday

FIVE TO PLAY

Cards Were Defeated in Their Last Home Game of Season

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr., Associated Press Sports Writer)

With one game left today before the year's intersectional play in the Major Leagues ends, the last East-West series in the big circuits has merely proved what the earlier ones indicated. The Eastern Clubs of the American League and the Western teams of the National, which have outshone their rivals from the other sections all year, wound up with the most thorough triumph yet.

Playing on the home grounds of the strongest sections, the American League's Eastern half won 41 games and lost only 14, while the Westerners of the National League turned in 36 triumphs to 19 defeats. The Chicago Cubs, which had lost nine straight games to the Clubs of their own sector before leaving their stand against the East, made the best individual showing. They won eleven games and lost only two. Boston, Philadelphia and New York shared the American League honors, the Red Sox winning eleven games and losing four and the A's and Yankees each recording ten victories to three defeats.

When they closed their intersectional stand with six to 5 victory over Detroit yesterday, the Athletics, once said to be weaker than the pennant winners of the past two seasons, accomplished a feat, that no other Philadelphia Club ever had done before. It was their 105th victory of the season, one more than the great A's of 1929 could win all season. They still have five games left and the possibility of tying the American League record of 110 victories.

George Earnshaw, who won his 21st game of the year, and Roy Mahaffey gave the champions some wobbly pitching, but three Detroit errors more than made up the difference by issuing 13 walks. And Jimmy Foxx started the A's off with a lead that never was overcome when he hit his 44th home of the season with two on in the first inning.

Senators In Red Place

Washington snatched the opportunity offered by an open date in the New York schedule and took undisputed possession of second place in the standings with a 7 to 2 victory over the Chicago White Sox. Six runs in the first inning on five hits off Ted Lyons and Dolph an error and a walk aggied the game.

Boston's great sport was checked in the last inning of a battle with the St. Louis but the Red Sox managed to hold onto fifth place, Leading 3-0 going into the ninth, Milt Gaston weakened, the first connolitted two errors and Wiley Moore, who was tossed into the breach, could not get the side out until five runs had crossed the plate to give the Browns a 5 to 3 victory.

National League

After wasting a number of opportunities in the regular route, the Pittsburgh Pirates finally beat out the Phillies 3 to 2 in the thirteenth inning of the National League's best battle. Heinie Meine held Philadelphia to five hits, while the Pirates made ten and got the benefit of 11 walks and six sacrifices but 20 Pittsburghers were left on bases, one of the passes followed by Traynor's single and Wen's fly produced the winning run.

Brooklyn closed the National League season as far as St. Louis is concerned by downing the champion Cardinals 6 to 3 in their final encounter. Paul Derringer's streak of wildness in the fifth inning of Grimm's error and O'Doul's timely single gave the Robins three runs to put them ahead and Jack Quinn, relieving Mungo held the Cards in check to the end.

The other National League Clubs had an off day.

Ellsworth Vines, when he defeated George Lott of Chicago in the final this year, Ellsworth Vines twenty year old tennis star won the National singles championship of the U.S.—the youngest player ever to do so in the history of the game. Last year Vines showed great promise by his sensational play, but before the season was over the critics had forgotten him because he was very erratic. This year he has come back with a determined vengeance and is now being hailed as the No. 1 ranking player in the States. Vines has every known tennis stroke in his repertoire—and that includes great courage. Before a game with Frederick Perry, the great English star, Vines was told that Perry was unbeatable at net play, so he elected to play the baseline. Perry was undaunted however, and before long Vines changed his tactics and moved up to the net. It was apparently a suicidal move, but to the amazement of the fans and critics alike Vines outraked and outplayed the British sensation. By his triking colorful play, Vines seems destined to fill the vacancy that Bill Tilden left in the amateur game.

Hon. Meighen Says People Should Pay For Probe

Kincardine, Ont., Sept. 23— If the people of Ontario desire a Royal Commission to investigate payments made to John Aird, Jr., of Toronto, by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, they ought to pay for the cost of the probe, declared Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, former Prime Minister of Canada, in an address here yesterday. Mr. Meighen was addressing municipal representatives of the Eugenia Hydro Electric Association.

Mr. Meighen, who is a commissioner of the Provincial Hydro Board declined to discuss the dealings of Aird in connection with the Madawaska power project or the Beauharnois project. "I have really nothing to divulge upon that famous man, Mr. Aird," he said.

He reviewed the growth and development of the Hydro system throughout the province since its inception in 1903.

"NO HOLDS BARRED"

Dean Recalled By The Cards

Houston, Tex., Sept. 23.—(UP)—Jerome "Dizzy" Dean, who broke all pitching records in the Texas League this season, was recalled last night by the St Louis Cardinals. The Houston Club's management announced. Dean will not be eligible for participation in the world series but will join the Cardinals at Cincinnati, leaving the Houston Club as soon as the Dixie series is completed.

Yesterday's Stars

Heinie Meine, Pirates—Held the Phillies to five hits in 13 innings and won 16th game, 3-2.

Frank O'Doul, Robins—Drove in pair of runs against Cardinals with double and two singles.

George Blaeholder, Browns—Pitched effectively in pinches to beat Red Sox 5-3.

Jimmy Foxx, Athletics—His 30th homer with two on aided in defeat of Tigers.

Extra Grant To House of Industry

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 23 — The city council has approved of a supplementary appropriation for the House of Industry to carry it thru' to the end of the year of $125,000.

In introducing the motion, Controller Ramsden said that the matter had been brought up too late for consideration by the Board of Control, but that it was a matter of routine. Unemployment conditions were responsible for the amount being necessary, he explained. The item was passed without discussion.

An attempt by Ald. Duckworth to have relief given only to those who have been residents of the city for 18 months was lost when the council refused to suspend the rules.

Spanish and French interests are planning to dam the Mulaya River which forms the boundary between Spanish and French Morocco, for the production of power and irrigation of large areas.

Believe it or not:—An interior decorator shot a woman in St. Louis. This should be a lesson to women who have epidemics of their own.

All roads lead to Napanee today when Rodney and Gilbards book up in the first game of the International Series finals. Whether or not the Gilbard "All-Canadian" win the championship of Ontario they deserve much credit for the fine showing they have made to date, and they have the whole-hearted support of the fans of this district.

A clipping was sent in to the editor of this column and we will try and convey it to our fans its contents. In 1869 the first professional baseball team was organized in Cincinnati, Ohio. It was then nicknamed the "Red Stockings" and they are known as the "Reds" to this day. That first year they played from March 15th to November 15th and never lost a single game. The complete payroll for the season was $9,300. Some difference between those men's salaries and a present day ball player's. Today "Babe" Ruth receives a salary of $80,000 per annum.

The salary list of the club was as follows: Harry Wright, captain, centre field, $1,200; George Wright, shortstop, $1400, Asa Brainard, pitcher, $1100; Fred Waterman, third base, $1100; Charles Sweasy, second base, $900; Charles Gould, first base, $800; Douglas Allison, catcher, $800; Andrew Leonard, $800; Calvin McVey, right field, $700; Richard Hurley, substitute, $300.

These figures were taken from the ledger of the club treasurer. It will be noticed that the average salary for the players was about $900 and that George Wright, the shortstop, was the highest paid player, receiving $1400 for his season's services. Today there are plenty of minor league players receiving more salary than the players of this first professional baseball club. But they were the pioneers of the great game that we all love today.

Larry Gains disappointed the followers of boxing, when he failed to even touch the veteran Jack Renault down. It looks as if the fighters on the other side of the Atlantic are not to be compared with the fighters on this continent. Although Max Schmelling, the world's champion, does hail from Germany. Gains has been having quite a so-called picnic pushing over the European battlers but he failed to impress the local sport followers on Monday evening.

Burleigh Grimes, Cardinal pitching star, is to be tied to Gabby Street, and here is why: "Strange to say, Gabby Street gave me my first lessons in pitching. I joined the Chattanooga club in 1913 and Street was the catcher and took me in tow. It is a pleasure to be working for him again."

Dizzy Dean, eccentric pitcher for Houston, has been chosen by sports writers as the most valuable player in the Texas League. He is a former member of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Upward of $30,000,000 is spent by American people each season for admission to major and minor league baseball games.

The World's Record Trout

The largest known specimen of brook trout taken by an angler was that caught by Dr. J. W. Cook, Fort William, Ont., in the MacDonald Reglds of the Nipigon River, and weighed 14½ pounds. This record brook trout was caught in the presence of ten witnesses.

The RECORD SPEAKS for ITSELF

This is indeed a record breaking trout—one to make fishermen smile with pleasure . . . as Turret's record of high quality makes smokers smile with satisfaction.

Millions of Canadians have found in Turret the Cigarette which is mild and fragrant, yet perfectly satisfying.

After all, nothing can replace good, honest tobacco; grown and ripened right out in the field under nature's own sunlight—nothing artificial about that—and the high quality is "inbred".

REPORT DENIED BY CHAIRMAN

"Grossly Exaggerated" Says Premier Henry About Story

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22 — Reports that 15,000 permits for 1931 issued by Control Board of Control had been sold Monday in Windsor were denied yesterday by Sir Henry Drayton, chairman of the Board. The statement of the American Legion special Monday at Detroit, Mich., across the river from Windsor, and there were reports sales of permits had shown a sharp increase.

The total number of permits sold was about 1,400, said Sir Henry. Gross sales were not anywhere near $100,000 as was suggested, but were in the neighborhood of $35,000 he declared.

Hon. George S. Henry, Premier of Ontario, described as "grossly exaggerated" a telegram he received today from Rev. Sen H. Spence in Windsor, which said that there was considerable drunkenness in that city.

General Butler's Duties Are Closed

Evanston, Va., Sept. 22 — As a spectator at the last charge he will command, Major General Smedley D. Butler today came to the end of his official duties with the Marines for whom he has led forged a spectacular attack on many a Caribbean base here.

Their charge, reminiscent of many he has led in foreign lands, marked the end of a career in the Marines of nearly a generation as a soldier of the sea. One week from tomorrow he becomes a civilian, for the first time since he was a schoolboy, his duties ended today.

Present High Discount Due to Passing Phase

London, Sept. 23 (CP)—Bankers in London are disposed to regard the present high discount on the Canadian dollar in New York as merely a passing phase due mainly to sympathy with the general financial unsettlement. Fluctuations in the exchange will likely remain wide for some time, it is believed here, but it is hoped they will then gradually narrow.

Canadian banking circles are hesitant to offer any comment. One suggestion which reaches here from New York is that the speculation took place prior to the Canadian National Railways $60,000,000 bond issue there a few days ago, when certain operators imagined the loan would result in transference of funds from here to Montreal. Instead the proceeds were used to liquidate loans maturing in New York.

Gold Flow No Good For United States

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 23 — Senator William E. Borah of Idaho expressed the opinion today that if an international monetary conference is not called "the money question will be one of the issues in the next presidential campaign.

"If the flow of gold," he said, "should continue in the next five years in the way it has in the last five, the United States and France would have from 60 to 65 percent of the world's gold. The rest of the world would have less than it has ever gotten from mining to do business. We should be rich in gold, but bankers and the people for our goods and the products of our farms."

The Senator described the discontinuance of gold exports by the Bank of England as "rather startling" and declared "the gold standard has failed."

Judge Fined For Speeding With Car

Windsor, Ont., Sept. 23.—Judge James M. Jeffries, who presides over Wayne County Court on occasion plies at Detroit, yesterday was administered a fine and dose of the medicine he doles out to many others. A fine of $5 was imposed on the judge after he had expressly pleaded guilty for him in East Windsor Sport in charge of speeding in his automobile on September 20.

Hydro Plans Many Meetings in Ontario

Hamilton, Ont., Sept. 22.—(By The Canadian Press)—To acquaint people with the magnitude of the Hydro-Electric Power development in Ontario, public meetings are being planned by the Ontario Municipal Electric Association. The meetings will, it is explained, give officials an opportunity to answer criticism of the Hydro, especially in connection with payments made to John Aird, Jr., of Toronto, for advice regarding power sites on the Madawaska River.

CATHERINE TAUGHER

At St. Mary's hospital, Toronto, on Monday, Catherine Taugher, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Taugher, formerly of this city, passed away. Many years ago the family removed from the city to Toronto. Deceased was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. Mass was held this Wednesday morning at Our Lady of Louders Church, at Toronto, after which the body by motor was conveyed to Belleville for interment in St. James' cemetery.

Gandhi's Cell-Like Room

A London settlement worker is shown reading one of the books placed in the monastery-like cell in which Mahatma Gandhi of India is living as a guest of Muriel Lester, well known welfare worker, while attending the second India round-table conference. This tiny room is also a shop. A London settlement house and is in strict keeping with Gandhi's vows of poverty while conferring with the British leaders.

UNMENTIONED IN HER WILL

Miss Slade, Disciple of Gandhi, is Satisfied

London, Sept. 23 (A.P.) — Miss Madeline Slade, daughter of an English admiral, who forsook her high position to become a disciple of Mahatma Gandhi, was not mentioned in the will of her mother as published today.

Lady Slade bequeathed an estate of about $50,000 to another daughter, Mrs. Edward Verrier. Miss Slade said that she had requested the omission of her name from the will and that it met with her whole hearted approval.

"Years ago when I first became a disciple of Mr. Gandhi," she said, it took a vow of celibacy and non-possession. Therefore it goes without saying that inheritance of worldly wealth from my mother's estate would be contrary to my code of living."

Miss Slade's father was the late Admiral Sir E. J. Warren Slade.

Hurricane Hits Near Montreal

Montreal, Sept. 22 — Wind of high intensity swept over suburbs of Montreal on Tuesday, hurling Stanger residences in the air, uprooting trees and blowing down light and telephone wires. No one was injured but property damage amounting to thousands of dollars was caused.

The town of Cartierville and portions of Bordeaux, Ahuntsic, Sault aux Recollets and Laval des Rapides were plunged into darkness when power lines were blown down along the O'Brien Boulevard, Cartierville. Twenty-eight poles were uprooted along the boulevard.

Leclaire's restaurant on Gouin Boulevard lost 11 roof, while landed 60 feet away. A beautiful sw of popular trees on the grounds of the Sacred Heart Hospital at Cartierville was uprooted. The Ste. Croix school at Cartierville lost a portion of its roof, while the fence of Belmont Park, an amusement resort, was destroyed.

THREE ARE RESCUED

Toronto, Ont., Sept. — When a 40 foot cabin cruiser caught fire in Lake Ontario off the Exhibition grounds here last night three men and two women got safely ashore. The blaze was extinguished by the men and city life savers.

PARALYSIS AT HAMILTON

Hamilton, Ont., Sept. 23— (CP)—Infantile paralysis claimed the life of Ernest Stevens, aged four, here and civic health officers redoubled their vigil, that there might be no spread of the dread malady. The health office was notified one other suspected case was under surveillance.

All Supplies Will Be Purchased in Ontario

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 23.—Hon. George S. Henry, Premier of Ontario, yesterday denied charges, that quantities of supplies to be issued in housing and feeding men at work on the Gran-Canada highway project in Ontario, were being purchased in Quebec. The contract for this work was let to a Sudbury outfitting firm at a contract rate of 80 cents per day.

"The Government has a very definite control," said the Premier, "that these supplies are to be purchased under agreement with Hon. William Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests, who is administering the work and specifies that all supplies are to be purchased in the Province.

It is a common fault never to be satisfied with our fortune, nor dissatisfied with our understanding.

BRINGING UP FATHER, By George McManus

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

"So you thought the protection of El Coyote not enough, amigos?" asked the masked leader. "You will have other thoughts before dawn. But now I bring you this message from El Coyote. Listen carefully, as you value life, for the patience of El Coyote is not endless. For two years you, Paco Morales, and you, his hirelings, have held dominion over the borderland. You have driven men and their families from land that is theirs. You have done it without fear, for you knew that the gun endured much and did little. We had no leader, and for these reasons the herds of Morales have become fat and multiplied, while the people have lived in poverty and dread. Our women have not been safe, our children have had no future to look forward to, our old age has become filled with fear. And all this because Morales wanted a land that was ours by right. Today few of us now have enough land to cover a grave, and still the herds of Morales grow. The mandate is passed speaking.

"The dying flames of the haystack spectral shadows across his face and caused the eyes behind the black mask to glisten. Still no one moved. Beside him Ted could hear Adela's quick breathing. Jito stood stiffly before him, not knowing whether to expect capture or quick death, while behind, in an outer circle, the outlaws sat in quiet watchfulness.

Once more the masked man raised his voice. "Vaquros of Morales, a leader has risen. You call him El Coyote. Many times you have fought to kill him. Mexican cavalry has joined with the gringos to run him down. But he is still free. Tonight he is out there with us. Why do you not go forth to him, Jito, you who have sworn to keep out his heart? See, he is out there!—only a little way,"—and the masked man pointed to the darkness behind him. A shiver of fear ran through every man. Even Jito himself darted an uneasy glance toward the shadows. Out there, just beyond the ring of light, the unknown Killer was. A trembling vaquero made a fleeting sign of the cross. "Dios mio," he murmured. "Tonight for him or me, señor."

"Listen now to what El Coyote bids me say. The ranchers of the border will no longer bear the yoke of Morales and his minions. From now on we will strike back, and, Jito, if El Coyote himself is taken, still we will strike back. And for every one of you that we take or kill, we will kill two. For every man you give twenty lashes we will tie to a tree. Take your band and give him forty. We are men with our backs to the wall. We have nothing to lose, for life itself has long since lost the things that give it value. Save a living profit us nothing, for we have neither peace nor security. But that day is done. From now on we fight for the things that make life good."

Stepping directly before Adela, the masked man's sombrero swept the ground. "Señorita, señorita," he said. "The peon in his hut remembers Juana Adela in his prayers."

Turning again to the vaqueros he pointed toward the village. "El Coyote bids me tell you for this one time to go. Next time it will be a different tale. Your horses and guns stay here."

Jito shrugged his great shoulders, deliberately lit a cigarette, then walked over to the old rancher, still bound to the door, and pulled out his knife, severed the bonds. He turned.

"Tonight is yours, señor," he said indifferently. "Tomorrow it is mine, other day. And sometimes when your coyote leader wishes to settle all disputes hand to hand or knife to knife with Jito——" He raised the heavy knife.

A blue blaze of light burst from out of the darkness and an automatic barked. The blade of Jito's knife leaped upward, then fell at his feet with a dull thinks of broken steel. Only the hilt remained in the great vaquero's hand.

"Now by the blood of all the saints," Jito marveled. "El Coyote shoots straight."

CHAPTER XIV.

It was a silent group that returned to the hacienda. Music still played within the patio, but the grounds were deserted. The people had fled. Don Sebastian sat beside the fountain, and to him Morales told the brief tale of their passage. Then again they mounted.

The little lanterns were swinging in the night wind that blew directly from the desert, and a few stars hung low over the hills. For a time Adela stood watching them, until at last Morales touched her arm.

"Go, my dear. You are tired."

She turned and smiled a little weary smile. "Until tomorrow," she said, and left them.

Morales watched her pass up the stairs. "Only the very young know how to suffer," he sighed, and turned toward his guests. "It is yet too early for bed. Let us join them in the smoking-room. We will all be better for a little brandy and a cigar." He, too, seemed weary, and his eyes weary, but he smiled that courteous smile of his, and walked toward the outer room.

Jito, enveloped in cigar smoke, sulked in a corner. As [illegible] sank into the deep leather chairs, Morales said: "Gentlemen, there is no adequate way of apologizing for this so painful episode of tonight. Tomorrow I shall want to know from you, Jito, why it was allowed. No, not tonight, tomorrow. Tonight I am considerably tired of the delights of your herdsmen. Personally I have not the slightest care what they do, but they must not molest Adela or my guests."

He poured out another brandy. "And now let us talk of more pleasant things, such as——" He waved a hand toward Radcliffe. "I am told that tomorrow Adela will take you to the Spring of the Saints. It is a very beautiful spot. A good fifteen miles from here but you are a natural horseman. If——" he smiled his child's play."

"Who attends them?" asked Jito suddenly from his corner.

Morales looked sharply up. "No one. You know Adela will not have servants on her rides."

But Jito had risen. "I will not have her going unattended. It is—" "It is what?" Ted asked quietly, but a flush had crept to his face.

For a moment the two men stood at gaze, while Jito seemed to consider his reply.

"For one thing, it is not safe. My men have known that. None of the lookout country is safe."

Again Morales raised his hand. "With ten servants or twenty, would it be any safer? You know it would not."

But Jito only answered stubbornly: "You should not let her go. You should forbid it."

With a faintly amused air the old Spaniard answered: "I should forbid it. Who forbids Adela to do as she likes? Suppose you forbid it, Jito is your child."

Jito walked the length of the room. "I shall tomorrow. You shall see."

"I shall see once more your great capacity for making a fool of yourself."

He turned with the same look of amusement to the others. "This thing called love, señors, it does not make for rational action. It is to some men as strong drink. It makes my good Jito here act even like a smaller child than God himself made him."

A sudden noise in the doorway drew his attention. A tall vaquero stood in the entrance, dusty sombrero in hand.

"What now?" barked Morales.

"Señor, I would speak with Jito, the vaquero!" he added quickly.

Jito rose. "What the devil is it, Pedro?"

His pain shudders seemed more bowed as he left the room. Jito followed after him, and at the two Americanos.

LAVAL MAY GO ACROSS SEA

May Accept Invitation of President Hoover

Paris, Sept. 23 (A.P.).— Premier Laval's tentative invitation to visit President Hoover in Washington was welcomed in the press today and it was taken for granted that he would accept forthwith.

Expressing the general sentiment the widely-read Petit Parisien said:

"If no capital question arising from his duties as head of the French government retards him in his way, it seems very difficult for Pierre Laval to refuse the invitation to visit Washington. It would be a unique appeal, so flattering both for himself and his country, and to abstain from it would be to expose M. Laval to be so rich in consequence and of such national and international interest."

The first shock of Great Britain's suspension of the gold standard was wearing off and optimism in the future of international finance was beginning to assert itself. Technical factors underlying the Great Britain had suffered a hard blow but would recover rapidly without great trouble to the rest of Europe.

Embarrassing Moments

SHORT SALES BAN REMAINS

May Be Continued For Several Days to Come

New York, N.Y., Sept. 22.—The New York Curb Exchange announced to maintain its rigid ban against short selling today.

Officials of the Exchange regard the ban as an important factor in effect on a free market for securities in normal times. Richard Whitney, President of the Exchange, has often described short selling as an important stabilizing factor.

Information as to how long the ban against short selling will be maintained was lacking, but it was said it is usually well informed brokerage circles that it will probably be maintained for several days.

The Exchange issued instructions to members revoking its previous order on margin for sales which on August 6, instructed members to report short positions only weekly. They had been reporting these daily since spring. Daily reports will not be required until further notice.

Sea-Serpent Back After 40 Years

Ottawa, Sept. 22—After remaining hidden in the depths of Lake Clear ten miles west of Egansville and 100 miles northwest of Ottawa, for some forty years, what is described by sightseers at the lake as "a sea-serpent" has appeared once again. There is some doubt that the "serpent" is the same one that local residents claim to have seen several years years ago, but it is the belief that it is at least a member of the same family. Mark Conlon, who has frequented the lake for nearly half a century, is the latest authority for the presence of the "sea serpent" this year. Recently while in the vicinity of Cherry Island, Mr. Conlon was literally chased to shore by some hideous aquatic creature, which, he declared, was ten feet long and as thick as a man's thigh.

Farmhand's Wife Perishes Bathing

She went out over her depth and her screams attracted Glen Church of this city, bathing near by He went to her rescue, but she dragged him under his water several times. He was not a strong swimmer, and when she sank from his he came ashore for aid.

AMUSEMENTS

WARNER BAXTER AT BELLE IN DE MILLE'S "THE SQUAW MAN"

Cecil DeMille, always a director to paint on the screen in bold, strong colors, has made an interesting evening's entertainment from Edwin Royle's famous play, "The Squaw Man," which was given a private screening in Belleville and in the feature attraction, at the Belle today and Thursday, it shows again.

His divides equally, and contrasts with excellent dramatic insight, thrills in an English castle and on an English fox hunt with thrills on an American cattle ranch.

His newest show, done in a strikingly new way, are magnificent, as he said he executed scenes for weeks to get the exact portrayal.

Great, however, as is "The Squaw Man," visually, his most enduring claim to fame is undoubtedly its remarkable cast of real stars and what they have done with the parts assigned them.

Three great actors played on the stage and in silent pictures the role of "Jim Carston," namely, William Faversham, Dustin Farnum and Wallace Reid, and none of these, in the writer's judgment exceeded in strength and virility of performance the work of Warner Baxter.

The part of Richard as the Indian girl, later Jim's wife, is splendid. It is a marvelous study of inscrutable idolatry of a man, and does strange things to the contrasted dramatically with it is Eleanor Boardman's work as Lady Diana, "Jim's" proud sweetheart.

It would take too much space to list individually, with adjectives, all the players of this highly entertaining production. However, deservedly belongs to Charles Lloyd, Roland Young, Paul Cavanagh, Raymond Hatton, John Miljan, Monty Jennings, J. Farrell McDonald, Dickie Moore and Mitchell Lewis

YOUTH LET LOOSE IN MARK TWAIN CLASSIC

Another wallsiding, heart-warming juvenile comedy-drama, will make its appearance at the Belle theatre for two days, commencing Friday next. It is the...famous Mark Twain story, "Huckleberry Finn," with Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green, Junior Durkin and Eugene Sear in the featured cast.

"Huckleberry Finn" is the further adventures of the lovable youngsters who we have met on the screen in all ages in "Tom Sawyer." Junior Durkin, as Huck, runs away from home in fear of his angry father. His father follows him, takes him to a deserted cabin, but Huck is rescued by Tom Sawyer, and the boys decide to embark on a life of adventure. The story tells how they save two young sisters from a pair of roving desperadoes, and gain the gratitude of them. The adventure is there in great satisfaction and honor.

In the cast of this picture are two well known character players, in addition to the talented youngsters to continue in the roles they portray, as in "Tom Sawyer." Eugene Pallette and Cesar Aptril give a humorous interpretation of the two desperadoes. Clara Blandick is again seen as Tom Sawyer's Aunt Polly, and Jane Jones appears in the role of the good-hearted Widow Douglas.

More than two hundred children were used in the production, the larger number than found employment in either "Tom Sawyer" or "Skippy."

Norman Taurog, who made "Skippy" also directed "Huckleberry Finn." A whole Mississippi River town, in the middle of the 1850's, was constructed as a setting for the story, with every detail faithfully reproduced.

"TOO YOUNG TO MARRY" CLEVER COMEDY

"Too Young To Marry" was well received at the Capitol yesterday, and the simplicity of the story proved very charming.

Ona Munson is very outstanding as the henpecked husband, and can be returned home after meeting the worse for cider, his acting becomes superb. a.g.

Loretta Young gives an excellent performance as the pretty daughter who at first in love with a delivery boy, taken by Grant Withers, and Emma Dunn portrays the role of the overbearing Mrs. Sumpsond to perfection.

The "shorts" on the programme are entertaining, and include "Sweet Nothings," Terry-Toon's cartoon by on the discovering of America by Columbus, and a very funny comedy, "Against the Rules".

This programme ends tonight at 7.15 and 9.15.

"THE GREAT LOVER" THURSDAY AND FRIDAY

On Thursday, Charles Rodgers and Hugh Adolphe Mendjou arrives in his latest picture, "The Great Lover."

"The Greta Lover" is a brilliant story of a man, loved by many, who discovers a girl a little different from the rest, but who plays about with his affections in exactly the same way he is accustomed to deal about with the rest of the girls he meets.

Irene Dunn is the girl, and the distinguished cast includes Cliff Edwards, Neil Hamilton, Ernest Torrence, Baclanova and Rosco Ates, the fluttering dove actor.

Adolphe Menjou has hard work to prevent that cast from outshining him, but when patrons see "The Great Lover," they will place about Mr. Menjou's greatest role.

The Great Lover" is the first at The Capitol on Thursday and Friday, matinee daily, and will be supported by a galaxy of featurettes.

At The Capitol Thursday (Sog at Shell Gift Night) and Friday — Hugh Herbert.

Madoc

Madoc, Sept. 19 (by mail) — The Madoc Women's Institute to the number of about forty were entertained by the Ivanhoeburn Institute on Tuesday evening, September 13th, at the I.O.F. Hall, Ivanhoe.

After singing of the Institute Ode, Mrs. Jas. Bailey, president of Ivanhoeburn Institute, presiding; a graceful address of welcome was given by Mrs. Bond, and given by Mrs. Donly, and briefly replied to by Mrs. C. W. Whytock on behalf of the Madoc members. The Roll Call of the members was responded to by naming the Birth month. Forty-two responded, eighteen having birth months to be included. July was the most popular month, and the nine or ten July members were gated to come forward and were presented by Mrs. Bailey with a box of home-made candy, which, by unanimous vote, went to Mrs. James Hunter, as the oldest, or rather youngest, member present. A fine program was placed in the hands of the Madoc president, Mrs. C. W. Whytock.

A very interesting Travel Talk was then given by Mrs. F. Harris on on her trip from St. Petersburg, Florida, to Havana, Cuba, and was heard with flattering attention. Owing to the absence of a pianist the visitors had to omit the instrumental music prepared. A short time was spent in discussing one of the old folk songs after which an interesting contest followed, led by Mrs. Nickle on the discovery of various near Wilkes-Barre in Hamburton.

Mrs. W. E. Conner presented to the Madoc members an account of urgent need and after a short discussion it was decided to call a meeting of the Executive Council to consider the question.

A very pleasing feature of the evening was the presentation of the Bannockburn president, Mrs. Bailey, of a gorgeous vase of glass made by Mrs. Whytock on behalf of the visiting members. Taking Mrs. Bailey entirely by surprise, words were not readily available, but Mrs. Bailey proved equal to the occasion and expressed her thanks and pleasure at the gift in a suitable manner.

The National Anthem closed the meeting, but a very pleasant social time was spent over the lunch so bountifully served by the members of the home Institute, and the hour was late before the "Good-byes" were reluctantly said.

"With the Federal Government compounding banking companies for the difference between Canadian and United States funds, virtually all the entire production of Canada's gold mines is being poured into the Capital for use in halting the drop in the dollar in the New York money market.

Official admission that the Canadian government had to pay a premium on Canadian-mined gold, coupled with word of the Post Office department's hectic rush to prevent speculation in money orders, were the outstanding developments here yesterday as dollar sinking steadily, reached a new low of almost 12-per cent. discount on Wall Street.

Back Stiff and Sore An Effort to Get Up

Toronto, Oct.— "For many years I had trouble with my kidneys. I had pains like lumbago in the lower part of my back and would be so distressed that my work was a burden to me. I could hardly wait for the day to end," said Richard Fowler of 11a Stafford St. "It was an effort for me to get in and out of bed; my back would be so stiff and sore. I saw Dr. Pierce's Anuuric Tablets advertised and began sending for them and by the time I had taken one bottle my kidneys were all right, my back limbered up, the pains disappeared and my kidneys and back have given me no more trouble." SEARCH FOR FLIER CRAMER

Ships Asked to Keep Sharp Watch in North Sea

London, Sept. 23 (A.P.)— Hope that Parker V. Cramer, United States airman, who was lost on a flight from Detroit to Copenhagen, remains alive, lingered today.

On the request of the United States Embassy, the British Broadcasting Company announced to ships in North Sea waters and residents of the barren Orkney and Shetland Islands to keep a sharp watch for Cramer and his radio operator, Clarence Lyndt.

The radioed message said that the wreckage of Cramer's plane, recently salvaged by the British trawler Lord Trent, indicated the possibility that the men might have taken refuge on one of the uninhabited islands.

The Daily Mail pointed out that the search was taken for a flying suit was found in the cockpit of the plane by the master of the Lord Trent, demonstrating to the newspaper that the pilot might have been able to discard the suit and leave the machine before it crashed.

The Embassy acted on orders from Washington, forwarded by a plea of William H. Cramer, brother of Parker Cramer, that when the flyers may be marooned on a remote island they will have enough to live on unless rescued. The state department asked the Embassy whether a search by the Orkney by aeroplane would be feasible and what would be the cost.

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 38. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

Within the cabin Jane saw the lioness almost through the window. She reached for the fallen revolver. Raised it. Then she saw Esmeralda in bert but alive. She could not leave her, she must use one cartridge on the senseless woman before she turned the cold muzzle toward herself again.

Quickly Jane ran to the side of Esmeralda. She pressed the muzzle of the revolver against that devoted breast, closed her eyes, and — Sabor, the lioness, smitted a frightful shriek. The cartridge recoiled and turned to face the brute, again raising the weapon against her own temple.

She didn't fire again. Surprised, she saw the huge animal being drawn slowly back toward the window and in the middle height of the two men. Tarzan had raised the long tail in both hands, braced himself, and thrown all his mighty strength into the effort to draw the beast back.

Slowly the lioness was emerging from the window. Tarzan, suddenly releasing his hold upon her, sprang back. Tighter his strong young arms forced her head lower and lower. The immense muscles of Tarzan's shoulders and biceps rippled beneath the tension of human effort—and Sabor's vertebrae snapped!

Instantly Tarzan was on his feet. For the second time Clayton heard Tarzan give the bull-ape's savage roar of victory. He ran toward Jane's agonized cry. Calming her fears, they came out to the dead body of the beast, to thank their rescuer. But Tarzan of the Apes was gone.

KIWANIS CLUB HEARS REPORT ON ASSEMBLY

Delegates, Geo. Cole, E. Fircle and Ross Hunter Report

ON TO OTTAWA

Members to Join in Big Rally of Kiwanians In Eastern Ont.

Comprehensive reports of the recent Carnival and the convention held in Windsor were given at the luncheon meeting held on Tuesday last at the Queen's Hotel. George Gritz, Jr., secretary of the club, gave a report on the finances of the Carnival and brought a vote of thanks to the members for their week's hard work, when he announced that the profit would run close to $1,000.00. This is slightly lower than the profit of last year, but considering the times, the result was satisfactory. Certain work that has been laid out by the club will be carried out. President George Cole, Ernie Finkle and Ross Hunter, delegates to the Kiwanis Convention at Windsor, also gave their report and it could easily be seen, that Kiwanis in Brighton and the clubs as a whole are doing a useful work in the community in every and manner.

President Presided

President George Cole was in the chair on Tuesday with James Rathbun as secretary pro tem. The Wolves as sergeant at arms. Leo Riggs presided at the piano and the community singing included songs that touched the hearts of residents of the British Empire. Discussion took place on the trip to Ottawa on Friday next and it is likely at least five of the members will make up a motor party to visit the capital and enjoy the comradeship of members from other clubs in Eastern Ontario.

Prominent Speakers

The delegates apparently tended strictly to business while in attendance at the convention, for each one gave a detailed account of the convention from time of opening till closing but still had plenty of time for recreation as their account of the trip to Bob-Lo, near Detroit Isle, was most entertaining. George Cole, in his report, stated that Mayor Croll of Windsor, welcomed the delegates on Monday morning, the opening day, after which addresses were given by members prominent in the organization. Practically the whole morning was taken up with reports of committees, while M. A. Reesor gave an address on Vocational Guidance.

Fred O. W. Parker of Chicago, was the speaker at the noonday luncheon, speaking on "The Perpetuation of Kiwanis Ideals." Governor Isaac McHaffie of Peterboro, then presented his report followed by Andy Cecil of Hamilton. Sault Ste. Marie was the successful bidder for the district convention next year. The final banquet of the convention was held at the headquarters with Mr. Norman Keewan, of Ottawa, as the chief speaker. In the report submitted by Mr. McHaffie he stated he visited twenty-five clubs and found all in a sound condition. The total membership of the Kiwanis Club is the Ontario-Quebec-Maritimes district is 2,961, distributed among forty-five clubs. The total number of accredited delegates was 118 with Pembroke not being represented.

Training schools are to be held between the 1st and 15th of December and it was recommended at the convention that all officers be elected before that date so they might attend the school for a short period at least. A report on the attendance, efficiency and inter-club relations by Ernie Finkle.

The Henry Memorial was won by the Montreal Club.

Inter-Club Relations Report

Henchmen of "Al" Are Held For Shooting

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 22 — Two of three alleged gunmen who fired at least five shots into the bullet-proof sedan automobile, intending, police said, to kill an enemy near Michigan Boulevard and Lake Shore Drive were held today. Crowds in the streets were thrown into confusion.

The pair, both henchmen of Alphonse Capone, were identified as James (Re) Forsythe and Sam Hunt. They were captured in an areaway behind the Goodwin theatre. Both had thrown away their pistols. "We just ran in to see what the shooting." Hunt explained. "We're bundsts men."

"Stop Signs" Must be Observed, States Police

Stop signs are not things of beauty, yet there are many drivers of motor cars, who evidently think that they have been erected as ornaments to be used principally as sign boards upon which to paint bold letters the street names. This according to the city police department, is an entirely erroneous idea, the signs are placed to give warning of "danger ahead" not only to pedestrians, but to motorists themselves.

City Traffic Officer Taylor has been engaged upon an educational campaign for some time past, calling out to drivers that these signs mean just what they say—"STOP STREET". This campaign has, of course, been confined to streets at the intersection of which Stop say the police authorities.

Signs have been placed within the last month or six weeks—such as Queen street from John street as far east as Queen street runs. The police have decided that this street has been a through street for a sufficient length of time for motorists to know and remember it. Queen St. is a THROUGH STREET and they purpose in future to impress this fact, upon their minds by personal interview which means money.

Monday night Traffic Officer Taylor stopped the citizens who failed to stop at the intersection of Queen and Charles streets and one citizen at the intersection of Queen and Albert streets. Warnings are a thing of the past from now on.

Too Old for People to Bother With, Muses Ancient Pilgrim

He was an old man—a real old man, frail, deaf and crippled with rheumatism and he presented a pitiful sight as he sat on a bench in the transients' room at the police station, Tuesday morning eating a hearty breakfast, which had been supplied for him by the department. All the other lodgers for the night were gone—twelve in number — they were younger and hunkier and found forage for themselves but the kindly instincts of the police officers would not allow them to let this old man go without receiving food.

To the question: "Well, how are you getting on?" he replied that he was enjoying his breakfast very much—in fact it was better and more food than he had eaten for several days. "I've been wandering around, Mr. ——, away east it is a hard lot.

of here, looking for odd jobs that I could do, but I guess I'm too old for people to bother with me any too slow—so I'm trying to get home." When asked where his home was and if he has friends there, the old man said: "Hamilton is my home. Mr. and I've relatives there, but I guess they haven't any more money than I have." With this, he went on quietly enjoying his first good breakfast for days.

Towards noon, the police department procured a railway ticket for the old man which will take him for some distance on his homeward way and Sergt. Arthur Harman sent him in the police car to the C.N.R. station to catch the train. There may be all sorts of reasons why the old man is in his present condition at his time of life, but nevertheless it is a hard lot.

Consuming, Not Reduced Wage, Mass Consumption, Not Production

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 23— city at a dinner.

"What we need in this country is a reduced consuming wage; not a reduced wage. Cutting wages will only aggravate the situation; it is no solution," declared Tom Moore, veteran president of the Trade's and Labor Congress of Canada, last night when he and 60 delegates to the 47th meeting were guests of the Lion."

"You won't solve the question by reducing wages. If that were possible Great Britain and Germany would be on the top of a wave of prosperity right now, instead they are the centre of a world financial crisis. Reducing the standard of living is not a solution, what mass production needs is mass consumption."

LAWS TO CURB MOTOR TOLL

Public Will Awaken to Necessity of Strict Measures

Lucerne-in-Quebec, Que., Sept. 22 (C.P.)—The appalling toll of human lives taken annually in automobile accidents along Canadian highways will have the eventual effect that public opinion will demand safety legislation that will perhaps curb the use of motor vehicles, J. P. Bickell, registrar of motor vehicles of Ontario, concluded in an address delivered before the annual convention of the Canadian Good Roads Association which opened here today.

"Operators of motor vehicles must awake to the need for greater care on the highways," said Mr. Bickell. "They must become conscious of present dangers and before too long there will be brought into effect at the instant demand of the thinking public laws and regulations which will considerably curb the use of motor vehicles. Life is too precious to permit the awful waste which the present year has been occasioned by the use of motor vehicles."

NEW PENSIONS FUND FAVORED

Church of England in Canada Considers Proposals

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 22 (C.P.) — Consideration of a plan for a new pensions fund for the Church of England in Canada occupied the entire evening session of the church's General Synod yesterday.

Alternative plans which were also submitted will be discussed more fully today.

Rt. Rev. J. C. Farthing, Bishop of Montreal, presented the report of a committee which considered the pensions scheme. The committee was appointed at the last meeting of the General Synod in 1927. Professor M. A. MacKenzie of the University of Toronto, presented the actuarial analysis of the proposed pensions plan.

An alternative scheme was submitted to the Synod by Canon Gould of Montreal and its text distributed by Rt. Rev. G. D. Schofield, Bishop of Saskatoon. A motion by Mr. Justice Hodgins, Toronto, suggested appointment of a committee of insurance experts to consider all schemes presented to the Synod and report on their respective merits. Both these ideas will be considered.

The plan submitted by the committee provides for pensions for the potential liability of $4,384,000, over and above what could be received from assessments upon the stipends of ordained clergy. As there is only about $1,000,000 on hand in the present General Synod pensions fund, to meet obligations, adoption of the scheme would mean sooner or later the sum of more than $3,000,000 would have to be raised to place the fund on a sound financial basis.

Sympathy for and confidence in the British people in the present crisis facing the country was expressed by the General Synod. The resolution was introduced by Canon H. J. D. Woodcock and Canon H. J. Cody, both of Toronto. It was passed unanimously. The Synod then paid tribute to England by singing the National Anthem.

Gov't May Have To Meet All Interest

Ottawa, Sept. 22 — Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, was asked by the Canadian Press yesterday as to the published report to the effect that work on the Montreal terminal was likely to be discontinued. While Dr. Manion refused to make a definite statement he admitted that the financial condition of the C.N.R. was such, due to very marked decreased earnings, that it looked as if very little, if any, of the $57,000,000 of interest due the public in 1932 would be met in cash. This would necessitate the government meeting most-or all of this interest. In addition to this, the requirements of the railway were so heavy that all capital expenditures of any kind would probably have to be given very serious consideration before being permitted to be spent on with or continued if they have already been started.

Partridge Cracks Glass Falls on Kitchen Floor

A beautiful large partridge was actively enjoyed in foraging for breakfast on the grounds of Queen Alexandra School about six-thirty o'clock Wednesday morning when it was disturbed and frightened by a passing citizen. The bird, in its alarm, flew across William Street into Mrs. Carley's grounds, where it alighted for only a moment, then continued in full flight until it came in contact with the kitchen window of a house near by—the glass broke and the partridge landed on the kitchen floor. The inmates of the house were aroused by the crash and rushing to the kitchen they were much surprised to find the cause of their alarm to be an innocent partridge which gazed at them in fear and bewilderment. The unmerciful climax to this true story is that the bird was arrived at this juncture and into his hands the poor captive was given for liberation.

ARM BROKEN WHEN JIGGER CAR COLLIDE

Crash at Railway Crossing West of Foxboro

JIGGER DAMAGED

Freight Passed Just Before Collision Occurs

Leonide St. Dennis, an employee of the C.N.R., living at 137 Pinnacle Street, Belleville, sustained a broken arm, compound fracture of the forearm, dislocation of elbow joint and bruises in a collision between the railway motor "jigger" which he was operating in company with his son, Leo St. Dennis, 17, en route on the railway going toward Stirling and a car driven by John C. Lutz, of Carlyle Pa., who was on his way to Weryiekmokon Lake on a fishing trip.

The accident occurred shortly after nine o'clock Thursday morning at a railway crossing about a mile west of Foxboro. A freight train had just passed and it is understood that Mr. Lutz considering the way clear proceeded to cross the track. Owing to a slight obstruction of the view, sufficient to conceal it is said, the advance of the railway jigger, it being set low, he had no knowledge of the presence on the track of the "jigger"—the latter was a collision.

Mr. Harry Lalonde, of Hillier, who was passing at the time, conveyed St. Dennis, accompanied by his son, to the General Hospital, Belleville, where Dr. Faulkner attended to his injuries. The "jigger" was, it is said, very badly damaged, the Lutz car was not very greatly injured and after a few repairs Mr. Lutz was able to resume his journey. Before doing so, however, he reported the occurrence and reported the accident to the Ontario provincial police and Constable Hammer and Constable Byles visited the scene of the accident.

Dr. Faulkner will operate this afternoon at the hospital on St. St. Dennis for the reduction of the fractures.

No Restriction Upon Gold Here, State Local Bankers

Little However is Carried and Less is Called For

ABOUT CHANGE

"Would it inconvenience you to give me change in United States currency for my United States money?" is the question often heard by the merchants during these thirty days of stress, when the Canadian dollar is farther below par than for any time since the Great War period. In cases where possible United States currency is given in exchange for American money tendered but if not possible no premium is always charged by merchants on American money. These facts were ascertained by a reporter today as he visited several merchants on Front Street and also queried the banking institutions on conditions, which have arisen out of this lowering of par of the Canadian dollar.

An incident was noticed in a restaurant today that is typical of the attitude of the U. S. tourist in our country. Four men came in to the cafe for a meal and when they presented the cheque for payment, a five dollar United States bill was tendered. The proprietor handed the man his change in Canadian currency and the question above was repeated. Fortunately the proprietor had one United States dollar bill but no silver and this was all that was offered. Likely this money will be used for gas before the party returns to their home in the States.

Bank managers state that very little United States money is finding its way to the banks through deposits of customers. During the month of July and August due principally to the United States tourist traffic to Canada, there was a fair volume of this currency but nothing to be compared with pre-war years. The reporter asked if depositors ask for the difference between Canadian and United States money in changing deposits and bank manager replied that the depositor does not have to ask. If the rate is at par or at a set rate of percent, the depositor receives credit on his deposit of United States money.

"Of course deposits up to $10.00 are not considered at any rate for the cost of sending the money back to the United States would not allow us to pay the customer a premium." The reporter asked if the banks would give gold in exchange for currency and the manager replied that branch banks carried very little gold but that a depositor or a transient would not be refused a reasonable amount for a present or a prize.

Canadians will be given United States money providing they are willing to pay the rate of exchange in the banks but generally the money is traded evenly by the merchants of the city.

Armaments' Race Poisoning Whole Life of Europe

Moscow, Idaho, Sept. 24—Senator William E. Borah, Republican of Idaho, chairman of foreign relations committee, warned today that unless the world turns away from its armaments race among nations, "we will seek greater depths of economic misery than we have heretofore known."

He appealed for a revision of European post-war treaties which he said are "poisoning the whole life of Europe," with the result that "Europe arms and arms, and arms still further."

Production Down 225 Million Bu.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 24 (CP) — World wheat production in 1931 exclusive of Russia and China, is estimated to be 225 million bushels less than in 1930, according to a statement issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics today. To the foregoing amount will have to be added any deficiency in the 1931 Russian crop as compared to production in 1930. It is generally recognized that Soviet production this year is less than 1930.

The decline in world wheat production in 1931 is due to unsatisfactory wheat crops in North America, drastic reductions in early estimates of the European crop, no estimated decrease of 57 million bushels in the Indian wheat crop and reduced prospects from the Argentine and Australia as a result of major reductions in acreage.

ELECTION AHEAD?

Non-Political Banquet For MacDonald is Postponed

London, Sept. 24—(CP)— The government was challenged in the House of Commons this afternoon by Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson, Labor Opposition leader, who demanded to know when the government hoped to bring to an end this part of the session.

Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Conservative leader and acting Prime Minister, replied a statement would be made as soon as the government was able to announce when the legislative business would be concluded. At present he is not in a position now to give that statement.

Mr. Henderson then gave notice he would repeat his question next Monday.

The main topic in political circles at the moment is whether the Conservative backbenchers who are pressing for dissolution in about two weeks and an appeal to the nation, will prevail on the government to adopt their view.

Cruiser Hull Torn by Sunken Wreck in Bay Fishing Party Rescued

BOAT FILLING

Craft Sunk in Eight Feet of Water as Party Is Taken Off

On Quinte's placid water on Wednesday afternoon tragedy was averted by the opportune arrival of a party, when Walter R. Patterson's pleasial open cruiser, struck a sunken wreck, in 14 feet of water, punching a gaping hole in the bottom and leaving the occupants, the skipper, Alderman J. D. Maclennan and Harold Legate, manager of the Canada Cement Company, in the sinking boat. When the party consisting of George A. Lee, Gerald Lynch, and owner of the craft, Douglas (Daw) Whalen, arrived on the scene, the party in the fast sinking boat were preparing to leave the ship and be at the mercy of the water. The last tragedy occurred near the entrance to Big Bay or between the old cement dock and the gas buoy.

Mr. Patterson and Mr. Legate, being younger and more active than Mr. Maclellan had prepared the alderman for the plunge by placing a life preserver on him. Happily the rescue party were able to low the cutter to the slip near the old cement dock before she sank in eight feet of water. The owner with other help is today at the scene trying to lift the boat from its watery bed and bring it to the city for repairs. The loss to Mr. Patterson will be considerable. None of the party today, however, are any the worse from their harrowing experience and all give credit to the party who gallantly and opportunely came to their rescue.

Soldier, Scholar, and Citizen, D. R. Coleman Dies

Professor Emeritus of O. S. D. Was in His 92nd Year

FINE PERSONALITY

A link between the present and past history of this city was severed today when Professor Daniel R. Coleman, died at the age of 91 at his home on Highland Ave. He had been ailing for only a few days, although he had been in ailing health for some time. The late Professor Coleman will be missed in this city, as he was a daily visitor to the downtown section, making the journey from his home on foot, even at his advanced age. His smiling countenance and sunny disposition were widely known in Belleville, while his active specialty in educational and church work was deeply sought and earnestly followed.

Native of Washington

The late Mr. Coleman was born in Washington, D.C., the eldest son of the late Daniel Coleman, who was a well known merchant postmaster general at Washington. After receiving his early schooling in the United States, he graduated from the University of North Carolina with the degree of Master of Arts. About this time the Civil War broke out in the United States and he served actively with the Confederate Army for four years. Later he married Miss Kate McDonald of Charleston, South Carolina, coming to Belleville at the opening of the Ontario School for the Deaf, then the Institute for the Deaf and Dumb, in 1870 and since that time has been a continued resident of this city.

For 45 years he took an active part in the administration of the Institute for the Deaf as a teacher and counsellor. A number of times he assumed the temporary principalship of the school and his administration of the office was always of a high character and in keeping with the work which the school was engaged. In church work he took an active part. He was a member of the Sidney Street Methodist church and entered into the union when denominational ties were made. He was superintendent of the Sunday school at John Street church for many years and also actively engaged as choir leader and for many years was a class officer at elder. Fraternally the deceased was an honorary life member of the Masonic Lodge in Concord, N.C., and was a member of the Royal Arch chapter of Belleville.

Surviving are his widow and one daughter, Mrs. H. L. Mcallister of this city. In public life the deceased was a staunch Liberal.

W. C. T. U.

The Belleville Union of the Women's Christian Temperance Union reopened for its Fall work at the Y.M.C.A. building with religious exercises conducted by the President, Mrs. Farnsworth. Mrs. Lincoln's group was in charge of the programme. Mrs. Marshall read Romans XII. and prayer was offered by Mrs. Merry. The President then introduced Rev. Mr. Rev. Hilliard Jones of the Baptist church.

Mr. Jones gave a very timely and stirring address. He spoke of his interest in the work of the W.C.T.U., mentioning the devoted service of his own mother and sister. He referred to the years when one lived under the License Law when drunkenness was rampant. In contrast, he instanced the days under Prohibition, when parents were happy with their children and had not seen a drunken person. Then as a parent he spoke of his parent's anxieties under League Control, when no law forbade the insidious temptations surrounding the youth of today.

Mr. Jones quoted P. T. Barnum's saying 1914, the people like to be humbugged, and advised scientifically that alcohol is a narcotic poison. He said that those supporting merely a false appearance of strength and endurance. He stated that all athletes are required to abstain from the use of alcohol and it is absolutely forbidden and banned from all voyages of exploration in the Arctic and Antarctic Oceans. He said that the electors in the various provinces had been thoroughly bugged also by the promises made by parliamentary candidates, when Government Liquor Control had been introduced as a sure temperance measure for lessening drunkenness and abolishing bootlegging and all illegal methods of selling and manufacturing liquor.

The settlement that under Liquor Control we were all particularly interested in business, in order how unwilling we were to be cheated as such. He referred to the government statistics that in this province of Ontario the government liquor store is one of the few business that is increasing its sales and profits. Also that sales in automobiles and radios are feeling the depression, but liquor sales are retrenching business. On the other hand, the permits issued in Ontario is rapidly increasing. In 1926, the Liquor Control Liquor Stores sold 400,000 permits and 1930 represented a purchase of $12m of liquor. The same was true in the Dominion of Canada for liquor consumption in the past years was millions last year.

He quoted extracts from various newspapers and government reports, including the Hon. Mr. Ferguson, which he presented. These showed that while the sale of every kind of liquor had increased, the greatest increase is in hard spirituous liquor, such as whisky, rum, gin and brandy. He showed that the increase in crime and deaths by automobile accidents is largely due to the increased use of alcohol as a beverage.

Mr. Jones in his investigation of the evils of the liquor traffic confined himself only through prohibition. Mr. Jones showed that prohibition never gain prohibition by parliamentary legislation, but was largely influenced and controlled by the organization of the liquor interests.

He mentioned prayer as the only lasting remedy for the evils of intemperance as they exist in our land today. Women's Crusade won its victories by Temperance by prayers; he appealed to all present, to all friends of prohibition and total abstinence, to approach almighty God daily in believing, persistent, united prayer, that the sanction of our government may be no longer approve and uphold the liquor traffic, but that its attendants and increasing evils.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Jones and Mr. Merry.

Mrs. Farnsworth confirmed the speaker's appeals for united prayer as the source of strength in every good work. Mrs. Farnsworth closed with prayer and the members of the Union entered upon the business meeting. Mrs. Pearsall, Provincial Superintendent of Citizenship was asked to represent Belleville Union at the meeting at the provincial convention to be held in London in October. Action was taken upon the recommendations in the constitutive. A special effort is being made to increase the membership. schools in the city in the prize contest and Temperance educational competition in the Sunday schools, are and Supplemental schools, teachers and parents to enlist as many October the interesting programme Nansan, Mrs. Mavin, Mrs. President Falconer, etc., in the S. Canadian corps in France. During the Great War, with the perfectly coordinated fighting machine that was taken over by General Sir Arthur Currie.

Calvary Officer

After service in the Red Sea, South Africa and Egypt, General Byng began in the Great War as commander of the 3rd Calvary Corps in June, 1915, but two months later was sent to the Dardanelles and became responsible for the Suvla Bay area, from which he skillfully withdrew his IX army corps in the autumn of 1915. Later he was almost immediately called back to the western front to take over the XVII. army corps.

Canadian Corps in 1917

In May 1916, General Byng took command of the Canadian Army Corps, which he commanded for a year. The Dominion troops under his orders, distinguished themselves heroically on several occasions, but most notably in their epic capture of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. General Byng commanded this battle when he chose his time after being elevated to a Viscountcy.

In June, 1917, General Byng became Commander of the Third Army and retained that post until the end of hostilities towards the end of November he received the brilliantly successful surprise attack on the Cambrai front. After the war, in addition to being raised to the peerage, he received a grant of $150,000 from the British government for his services.

Governor-General, 1921-26

Lord Byng succeeded the Duke of Devonshire as Governor-General of Canada in June 1921. He remained here for five years until 1926 and then returned to England, planning on retirement in his country home at Thorpe (Lord Thorpe-Le-Soken, Essex, with Lady Byng (Miss Evelyn Beatrice Moreton). Less than two years elapsed before he was called to take charge of the Metropolitan police force, which had been passing through some vicissitudes and had needed a strong man at the helm to restore it to its old position.

On account of ill health Lord Byng has been forced to spend many months in the Pyrenees from London, and reports of his retirement had been current for a long time.

of patterns, or machines which are unceasingly being woven into more complex or to simpler designs.

Eternal Cycle of Change

"In the large it appears to be an ever-varying, ever-changing cycle which attained to the perfection of its development in the present day past and is now regressing to its simpler forms—perhaps for good, perhaps only to re-start another cycle of organization.

"In the small, the cosmic process of decline we notice a smaller but more distressing process of decay in the streaming, protoplasmic tendency, the unbridgeable infant world evolving, throbbing with passionate life, and striving toward rational and spiritual self-expression.

New Patterns

"Instead of the fantastic or mechanistic or the mathematical universal pattern, the fluid, organic, symbiotic universes in which the dwellers in the earlier physical patterns provides the opportunity for the emergence of the more advanced, the more spiritual beings.

"In this holistic universe man is not the product of chance, but of the stars. The world consists not only of single entities and individuals but also of souls and aspirations. Finally, wholeness are as much aspects of nature as singleness and entropy.

"And evolution is perhaps the only way of approach to the framing of a consistent world-picture which would do justice to the immensity, the profundity and the unutterable mystery of the universe."

Patterson boat had called at the old pavement dock to take on Mr. Lesage, while the tug-boat craft was proceeding down the bay to the fish ing grounds. Sometime during the day, the party in the Whalen boat noticed smoke in the Patterson boat frantically waving their arms. This party took no police however, as it was thought they were waving to Bernsley Gribbie, who was fishing at the gas buoy.

The waving continued and believing there was trouble Mr. Whalen speeded up his motor and rushed to the assistance. On being grounded to find the boat partly full of water and rapidly sinking. A low line was fastened on the bow and all haste was made to beach the craft. The cruiser was forced on near the dock at the old cement works when she sank in eight feet of water. "Some excitement, but it was a close shave," said one of the rescue party today.

HENDERSON IN CHALLENGE TO GOVT

non-political banquet which Scots men proposed to tender him on the 25th birthday of the event, Oct. 12, has been postponed.

"When I look so far back as July to be the guest of my fellow-Scotsmen in London early in the autumn," the Prime Minister wrote, "the position of affairs in the country was different than it is now. It has become.

"Under the present circumstances I think it would be a great mistake to carry out the programme as originally arranged."

London, Sept. 24. (C. P. Cable)—The Labor opposition organ, The Daily Herald, assumed today an early general election was virtually certain. The conference of the Labor Party next month would be asked to make government control of banks and finance the spearhead of their election policy, and hostility towards a protective tariff one of the main planks in the Labor platform, The Daily Herald said.

Referring to the latest movement among Conservative "backbench" members for abandonment for an immediate election in which the Neville Chamberlain group is opposed to the people, on a programme of national reconstruction including tariffs, The Daily Herald denounced the Conservatives for "driving Prime Minister MacDonald's government, in defiance of subserviently leading them to the verge of an election." The Herald referred to the Prime Minister as the "prisoner premier of Downing."

Labor would sweep the country in the event of an election, the Daily Herald claimed. At the moment the Labor, Conservative members of parliament claim the National Government would obtain an overwhelming majority in the estimates going so far as to give it 600 out of the 615 seats.

The Liberals appear to be sadly divided on the question of an early election. About half the Liberal members of the House have assured Premier MacDonald that they, like their support to any steps he may consider necessary. But Sir Herbert Lloyd George was understood to be opposed to an election. The other wing of the Party—the Free Trade wing—is opposed to an election on the ground that the confirmation of the possibility of such an election took it for granted a preliminary step would be reconstitution of the Cabinet and probably the replacement of Sir Herbert Samuel, Liberal Free Trader, by Sir John Simon, Liberal, who would be included in an emergency, in the Home Office.

NOT SPARKS FROM THRESHER

In the report of a fire in Rawdon which occurred last Saturday it was stated that the belief was held that sparks from the threshing outfit had caused the fire, by which the crops were destroyed. A diversion of the wind and the large size of the fire from the thresher outfit and the place where the fire first was discovered proves that could not have been caused from the separator, which was working at Mr. Fred Richardson's barn. Mr. Stapley, the owner of the threshing outfit was loth to the report that there was no possibility of sparks having caused the blaze. The fire was first seen along a fodder where an electric wire runs between. Whether the fire originated from this is not certain. Since the fire was discovered the progress of the blaze was very rapid. Henry Sills, the helper whose name was given as Mills, in charge of the outfit at the time it is believed burning straw fell on his person and the fire was quickly put with the recovery of the plant. Mr. Stapley made it clear that there was no blame to be laid at any door between the fire and the separator which was working properly.

ENJOYED OUTING

Following the luncheon the guests were called upon to devour many delicious melons, which was done despite the fact that a heavy meal had already been eaten. Those present regarded a hearty vote of thanks was moved to Mr. and Mrs. Kellaway for their delightful evening. These present made the journey to and from the lake in cars provided by the hosts.

BUILDING DESTROYED

Fire of an unknown origin completely destroyed the home of Mr. George Taylor on Foster Ave., early Thursday afternoon. The building was only a one-roomed, frame storey frame structure and before the local fire department could get to the scene of the blaze, the fire had gutted the building. The department made heroic handicapped as they to lay over 500 feet of hose to reach the scene of the fire and before they could get the streams of water playing on the blaze the building had been completely burned to the ground.

The marriage was solemnized at St. Michael's Church at 8.30 yesterday morning of Miss Monica McGowan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael McGowan of this city, and Mr. Francis Gilgot, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. Gilgot, of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Nicholson, V.G.

The bride and groom were attended by Miss Dorothy McGowan and Mr. C. FitzSimon, both of Toronto. Mr and Mrs. Gilgot will reside in Toronto.

REID — COONEY

A very pretty but quiet wedding took place at the Tabernacle Parsonage yesterday afternoon when Rev. A. E. Wagar united in marriage, Catherine, only daughter of Mrs. Miles Reid, of Toronto, and Charles Russell Cooney, also of Trenton.

The bride looked charming in a gown of brown georgette with cream trimmings, and carried a shower bouquet of American Beauty roses, fern and baby's breath. The bride and groom were unattended.

After the ceremony a buffet lunch was served at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. Fred Cornell, Crier Street. Later the bride and groom left, amid showers of rice and confetti for a wedding trip to eastern points. The bride travelled in a tailored ensemble of navy blue with hat to match.

On their return they will reside in Trenton where the groom is engaged in farming.

SULLIVAN — PASCOE

The bride, who was attended by Miss Mary Hall, Melrose, was attired in a gown of pink georgette and lace fashioned on long princess lines, and wore a Dutch Empress bonnet hat to match. She carried a shower bouquet of Butterfly roses.

The groom was assisted by Mr. Harold Pascoe, brother of the bride.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Pascoe, Melrose, following the ceremony.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan left on an extended trip through the United States.

HILES — BRADFORD

A pretty wedding was solemnized at Bridge Street United church on Saturday afternoon when Lydia, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Bradford, became the bride of Mr. Charles Frederick Miles, son of Mrs. J. Hiles and the late Mr. Miles of London, England. Rev. Dr. R. H. Bell officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, entered the church to the strains of the wedding march played by Mr. V. P. Hunt, and looked charming in a gown of white ratine and georgette. Her veil of tulle was arranged in cap effect, being caught at either side with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Annie Bradford, the bride's sister, was bridesmaid, wearing a pale green georgette dress and hat to match. Her bouquet was of deep pink roses and fern. Mr. Allan Kerr was groomsman.

The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a silver compact, to the best man gold cuff links. After the ceremony a short luncheon was served at the home of the bride's aunt, about fifty guests being present.

The happy couple left later on a motor trip to Toronto, Hamilton and Niagara Falls and on their return will reside at 181 James St., city.

INSTALLATION OF PRIMATE AT ST. PAUL'S

Archbishop Worrell is Attended By Two Presbytors

CREED RECITED

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 24.—(By The Canadian Press)—Most Rev. Charles L. Worrell, Archbishop of Nova Scotia, was installed as Primate of all Canada, in a service conducted in St. Paul's Church here today.

Long before the opening hour of the service, members of the clergy and the laity from Toronto parishes who were not delegates to the General Synod, began to file into the church, and sharply on the half-hour the members of the Upper House, clad in their episcopal robes, followed by the clergy in cassocks and hoods, took their places in the chancel and in the front pews. Lay delegates to the Synod took their positions in front with the clergy.

His Grace was assisted by Ven. E.-C. C. Heathcote, Vancouver, precentor of the Lower House, and Rev. Canon F. H. Hartley, Honorary Secretary of the Synod, acted as presbyters. There was no sermon. His Grace, Most Rev. A. U. D'Epencier, Archbishop of New Westminster, officiated as celebrant of the Holy Communion. He was assisted by the Archbishop of Rupert's Land, Most Rev. J. O. Stringer. The Bishop of Toronto read the Epistle.

The installation of the new Primate followed the recitation of the Nicene Creed. Right Rev. D. T. Owen, Bishop of Niagara, read the Archbishop of Canterbury's letter which was presented to the Primate-elect by the Archbishop of Rupert's Land.

The Bishops of Ottawa and Montreal were then presented to the Primate in the chancel. With them in the chancel were the Archbishops of Quebec, Moosonie, Qu'Appelle, Keewatin, Calgary, Mackenzie River, Caledonia, New Westminster, Columbia, Cariboo, Kootenay, Caledonia and Honan, as well as the Bishop Coadjutor of Nova Scotia.

The Benediction was pronounced by the newly installed Primate.

SIX CHILDREN LOSE LIVES

Flames Block Exit From Home on Western Prairie

Hague, Sask., Sept. 24—Six of the nine children of Mr. and Mrs. John Peterson, of Hague, were burned to death Tuesday night when their farm home was destroyed by fire. Three of the children managed to escape from an upstairs window, but apparently the fire had swept downstairs, who ranged from 1 year and 10 months to 12 years of age.

The dead are: Issac 13; Annie, 11; Jack, 9; Peter, 7; Mary, 5; Cornny, baby.

The three who escaped are: John 17; Tetarine 15; Peter 7.

Mr. and Mrs. Peterson left their home in the evening, leaving the children upstairs sleeping. They had gone to visit a cousin, who lives near by.

Fire Escape Blocked

The fire, which was believed to have been started by an overheated stove-pipe, first was discovered by Peter, the second boy, who opened the hall door and then the door to the door, but the flames shot through both apertures and the only way in no exit was possible.

The boy had then called the other children and had jumped from the bedroom window, but was followed only by Tetarine and Peter. The children who ran around frantically searching for a way in which to save their sisters and brothers; but found nothing they could do they had then run over to their nearest neighbor, Henry Unger, one mile away.

By the time the rescuers arrived at the burning building it was virtually demolished.

Bodies Found

The bodies of the six little victims were reduced to ashes. Four of the children apparently had huddled together, as their remains were discovered in a heap, while another was found at one side and the baby had been burned to death in her bed.

Tetarine and Peter, who escaped, are badly burned about the face and body, as by the time they had reached the window to jump to safety, the flames had shot into their room and they had had to rush through the flames to reach safety.

TORONTO SAYS GOODBYE TO ST. HILDA'S

Massey Hall Crowded to Capacity at Farewell Concert

Toronto bade farewell to St. Hilda's Band Wednesday evening in kindly fashion, Massey Hall being crowded to its utmost capacity by an enthusiastic audience who thus expressed pride in the achievements of this premier band of the Empire and regret that the organization was leaving Toronto for the home across the seas.

St. Hilda's Band will give its last concert in Canada tonight at the Auditorium, Belleville.

Playing at the Exhibition this band became very popular in Toronto and the farewell concert is widely reported in the Mail and Empire:

With an audience of people that were willing to sit almost under the big drum or at the bells of the flexible bass horns and other seats had been taken, with applause that was mingled with cheers for the first pause in the program, Toronto said farewell, probably an revoir, to the St. Hilda's Band and James Peter's Choir concert in Massey Hall last night.

The Lieutenant-Governor, the Hon. William Donnelly, was there and their party attended this event, in which all classes of the community joined in an ovation. It was a full house in every available corner of the hall—boxes, platform, and even the lofty seats of the panelling on the stage.

And appreciation was as varied as it was generous. While there was there national sentiment seemed to sway first in favor where Empire Hall shows were in the majority, one would occasionally get intermingled near such a comment as that made by one outstanding artist—"If I could carry a phrase like that I'd be happy." While part of the audience was stampeded by obvious virtuosity of technique, there was no lack of appreciation of the more delicate accuracy of control which has won high-class admiration for the band in Canada.

The program was again built directly to hold interest, but there were more heavy numbers than had marked the programs at the Exhibition, but the second section alone there were a Liszt Rhapsody, a Tschaikowsky 1812 Overture, and a Parsifal selection. Which alone would have justified one's going to the concert. Wagner number was also played with great dignity.

Other numbers included the Schubert Rosamunde Overture; a Weber selection, "Hercie"; excerpts from "Fredericka," Cowan; a Gounod selection, "Romeo and Juliet," four Indian dances, Finck Finden, and, to close the program, the hymn "Jerusalem." The band was encored again in enjoyment of treating the public to a bit of the more frivolous playing of "Three Blind Mice."

W. W. Oughton cornet player, and W. Blanden, trombone, the soloists of the evening, added greatly to the key with the aura spun on the concert.

The manager of the band announced that they would probably make a return visit to Canada in 1932 and he was assured from the audience that the St. Hilda's players would get back greetings to England from the great throng that combined away of music, sentiment and good will of success brought resounding applause.

STEVEDORE UNDER SEVERE PROBING

Is Subjected to Questioning

Timothy Quinn, Not Under Arrest, Is Subjected to Ques-

New York, N.Y., Sept. 24 —Timothy Quinn, 40, a stevedore, was subjected to protracted questioning today in connection with the killing of Benjamin P. Collings, who was bound and gagged aboard the yacht in Long Island Sound two days ago.

District Attorney Alexander G. Blue, of Queens County, said that Quinn was not under arrest and would not be detained, although the questioning was continued after the District Attorney made the statement.

Quinn was found at the home of a brother, a Queen's physician. The Long Island city police who said he had been arrested three times on suspicion for murder and had escaped from several insane asylums, at last being the Central Islip States Hospital, to which he was committed in 1927. The police said Quinn was thoroughly familiar with the north shore of Long Island and had been seen in the vicinity several times during the last three weeks. They said he was an expert boatman and until recently owned a canoe. He was described as a man of great physical strength. The police took him to Hunter's Point police station and Blue questioned him there.

Importance was attached to the ownership of a canoe because Mrs. Collings told authorities the men who boarded the Collings power boat Penguin, murdered Collings and threw him into the Sound and took off off the boat in a canoe.

Blue has been proceeding on the theory that one of the assailants, described by Mrs. Collings as a middle-aged man, was a lunatic.

Spain will spend $80,000,000 on public works before next January, it is today made of aluminum, weighing only four ounces, was recently exhibited in London.

FEARS DISPELLED

Fears which any citizens of Belleville might have of a duplication of the tragedy which enacted in Toronto on Tuesday evening when a young woman was the victim of hydrocyanic gas used in disinfecting a small apartment house were set at rest by the statement of a member of the local board of health that this chemical is not used for fumigating here. A harmless gass, formaldehyde is used which is destructive to disease germs only.

FLYING HOUSES

"The dish ran away with the spoon" runs the adage but it was no fairy tale which is related of Montreal when houses flew away. It was a cyclonic which took houses aloft.

Houses flying through the air! enought to frighten the bravest of the brave, except that the accompaniment to the houses' flight is such a terrific gale that the human being has not time to bother with flying residences.

Seriously considered, such a scene must be terrifying in the extreme. Houses are built for stability upon foundations of rock and are not intended to fly. When the usual becomes the unusual and the unusual becomes common it is time for humanity to become frightened.

MORE BAD NEWS OR LESS?

The papers seem to be very full of dire disasters on land and sea. Are they more so than they used to be?

There is so wide a service for collecting news the world over that is only a minature gale which escapes the press of the world.

More stories of dire events are told today because the news is flashed about the world while it is news. Yet it is doubtful if these events are any more plentiful than they were. There are more accidents on highways than there used to be because more people are using roads than there used to be. Air crash is a new type of accident not known before since Daedalus lost his wings when they melted from his shoulders according to the old legend of the Greeks when he started to fly in the light of the sun.

On the other hand curative agencies are more at work. What would have made sensational news stories generations ago such as the Black Plague, is scarcely possible now because of the supremacy of science.

News changes from age to age, though what is real news is ever news, because of the inherent desire for news in mankind.

The newspaper taken up to-day which would have been in the way of gossip a few generations ago.

The world is, it must certainly be said, is safer from calamity than it used to be, though no one can prevent a hurricane or a tornado though it is possible to build buildings so strong that such scenes as happened in British Honduras need not be duplicated in their entirely. Native huts offer no resistance to the twisting of the winds. Civilized man has learned that.

PREMIER'S REST

The world will wish Premier Ramsay MacDonald speedy recovery from the worries of public life during these trying days when he is with others aiming to set a topsy turvy world on its proper course after its flight at a tangent from the usual route.

Confidence in MacDonald as a man sincerely seeking the best for his people, and the world is felt by every one.

INFLUENCE

By Aline Michaelis

We are products of all that has gone before
In the ceaseless march of time,
Since our race set out from an unknown shore
On its quest of the paths sublime.

We are fashioned of all that the years have known,
We are makers of all to be,
And none can live to himself alone
For the wave must be part of the sea.

There was never a gesture of lifted hand
Or the sound of a spoken word
But its force was felt to Earth's uttermost land
And the winds of the ages stirred.

It may be that some whimsey no man can know
Shaped the deeds we have done this day;
Some faint echo of fancies of long ago
Guides our steps in their chosen way.

We are holding the future in lifted hand
Or the sound of a whispered word,
And its force may be felt to Earth's farthest land
While the winds of the years may be stirred.

WATCHING THE ATHLETIC EVENTS at the Belleville Fair when a splendid program of running, walking, jumping contests and bicycle races were run off, it seemed too bad that the young athletes, full of life, vigor and the desire to try their prowess against others, should have to compete on such miserable ground, the result of heavy rain the night before. Why not encourage the athletes by building a cinder track? Everyone who watched the contests were delighted with the clean and clever exhibitions of athletic youth and it is such meets as these that help to build up a robust and vigorous citizenship for the tomorrow when they will have to carry on the affairs of state and communality.

"DEPRESSION IS DOING WITHOUT things our fathers never heard of," said a man whose vision is not entirely befuddled by the gold and glitter of present day prosperity peaks. Think it over, the pioneers who had to keep the fire in because they had no matches, who had no telephones, radios, motor cars or any of the many luxuries which are common, property nowadays, if they could see conditions as they are today would think the world had become Utopia indeed.

TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND shouting, cheering people thronged Belmont Park, near New York City, Saturday afternoon to watch "the sport of Kings" and incidentally see a lot of money change hands on a horse race or two. One race paid the winner $94,780, the Futurity, won by Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney's filly Top Flight, the total purse for the event being $115,140. Top Flight has won six races for her owner with purses aggregating $162,830. Twenty Grand, owned by Mrs. Payne Whitney, won the Jockey Club Gold Cup, valued at $2,500 and $10,400 cash the same afternoon, while Mrs. John Hay Whitney annexed the Grand National Steeplechase and $28,250, with Green Cheese. Altogether it was a most pleasant afternoon for the Whitney family.

CIVIL WAR SURVIVORS

Howard Williams, 84 Weybourne Crescent, Tuxgilo, served in the American civil war, enlisted in 1862 with the 23rd Ohio Regiment. Now 90 years of age, he missed this year by the first time attending the annual reunion of the Grand Army. In publishing a little interview with this old soldier, Toronto Star describes his as "probably Canada's last survivor of the civil war."

The few remaining pensioners have been dropping off rapidly in recent years but Mr. Williams is by no means the sole survivor in Canada, or in Ontario. Until last year there were in Toronto three former members of the new defunct Knowlton Post,—G.-A. R. Charles Bolden, died in February, 1930, but it is not long since the Star published a picture of Thos. Hughes, now 92 London had quite a number of these veterans, most picturesque of whom was Pitt, the watchmaker, now passed on. Ira Kilbourne, late 4th Michigan Infantry, died recently, but there are probably one or two yet in that city. St. Marys had a former member of the 23rd Illinois, in the person of Hugh W. Kilpatrick, who died in June of this year. A little farther west, on a farm near Arkona, still resides, to far as one is aware, a former dashing cavalryman, Captain James H. Campbell, now about 85. In Oxford, the death last year of an Otterville veteran removed one of the last, but at least there remains Dr. Henry Adams, of Embro, now about 87 years of age, who served in his father's place in the artillery, saving, as he recalls about a year after the war started.

If the pensions office at Washington were to search the list of civil war survivors, the number remaining within the bounds of the Dominion would perhaps be surprising; and there are still many U. S. pensions being paid to widows.—Woodstock Sentinel Review.

INVENTIONS BY WOMEN

The man who vows he never saw a woman use a hammer to nail without smashing her thumb will tell you that all labor-saving devices for household work were invented by men. But proof will be found at this year's Exposition of Women's Arts and Industries, to be opened Sept. 30 at the Hotel Astor. A section will be devoted to models of patented devices of women, many of them with an eye to lightening women's work.

Among them is an electric iron with rounded edges and corners and a swinging handle designed to do tricks difficult for an ordinary iron —pressing a dress under the sleeves, shoulder seams and beaded or quilted fabrics. A woman who hated to darn and wanted to save on hosiery bills invented pads for the heels of shoes to save wear on stockings. A typewriter attachment by which five copies can be made without using carbon paper was devised by a woman who had already invented forty-two other things, including collapsible umbrella, an ice cream freezer and an electric fan shield.—New York Times.

SIGNS AT LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSINGS

Motorists who have walked at a level crossing till a train has passed have not infrequently proceeded on their way only to fall victims to another train on a second track, the presence of which had been unsuspected. It is to guard against such unfortunate happenings that the Ontario Safety League has very reasonably suggested that the warning, as dangerous, where, for instance, signs should indicate whether the view is obstructed. It urges railways are single, double or multiple track. The league further recommends that crossings shall be classified. Those that are regarded should be designated as "stop" crossings or, where physical conditions do not justify a full stop, as "slow" crossings. Others, where there is a full view in all directions, it would simply designate as railway crossings.

The suggestion of the Safety League affords ground for compromise between those who urge that the stop order should apply to all crossings and their opponents who see in such an order merely an interference with traffic that would lead to congestion and confusion. Every season's record of casualties points to the necessity of further safeguarding unprotected crossings. When a warning sign is the only protection the motorist has, it is essential that the sign shall be as intelligible and as explicit as possible as to the danger which awaits the unwary.—Toronto Telegram.

How John Bull Cuts Expenses In Crisis

By Artist Joe King

BY JOE KING

NEA Service Staff Artist

The short-lived "passive strike" of British sailors which shook the 1000-year traditional loyalty of England's navy focuses interest upon the financial problems of the most heavily taxed people in the world who are trying to make up for the $680,000,000 deficit in the nation's budget.

The new emergency budget, with its increase in taxes and its decrease in doles and wages of government employes, affects virtually every English-man from the jobless man in London's shabby East End to the dapper millionaire society set.

The drastic cuts among sailors that brought on the strike reduced the daily pay of a chief petty officer from $2.12 to $1.87; that of a leading seaman from $1 to 75 cents and that of an ordinary seaman from $8 to 50 cents. Efforts to revise these cuts are now under way.

The far-famed English "Bobbie" or policeman, who heretofore received $23 weekly, now gets $21.75. School teachers drew a 15 per cent salary cut. An unemployed man, who previously received a weekly dole of $4.25, gets $3.75 under the new budget.

The English smoker must pay $2.28 tax on every pound of tobacco English motorists now pay 18 cents tax in each gallon of gasoline.

Beer-drinkers must help bear King and's new burden, the beer tax having been increased, by two cents a pint.

King George has returned $243,000 of his income to the depleted treasury and high government officials, including Premier MacDonald, have taken stiff pay cuts.

Under the increased income tax, the basic rate is at 24 tax on every $4 earned. However, incomes in the higher brackets are so heavily assessed that wealthy Englishmen must pay as high as 54 cents tax on every dollar.

Letters to the Editor

DAYLIGHT SAVING

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

In answer to Mr. Ralspayer's letter of the 22nd inst, and several others which I have read recently with reference to Daylight Saving and the pavement under construction on West Moira Street. Does Mr. Ralspayer ever consider clerks in the City of Belleville who clerk behind the counter for eleven hours a day? Doesn't he stop to think they might appreciate an extra hour of daylight? 'Sit occurs to me that if this ratepayer was so much wiser than Mr. MacMillan or Mr. Mott as our very sensible council which pot in "Daylight Saving for the young people he would be Mayor or Alderman so that he could be right on hand to take care of things for us.

Gandhi, Idol of Women

HERE'S A STORY THAT PUTS FAMED MAHATMA—ADVOCATE OF SEX EQUALITY—IN NEW LIGHT

By Milton Brenner
NEA Service Writer

London, Sept. 24.—If Mahatma Gandhi, unrivaled leader of the Indian people, remains for the whole of the second Indian Round Table Conference to decide on the future government of India, will he exert the same magnetic influence on the women of England that he has had in India?

This is a question that serious Englishmen are asking themselves.

It seems odd to speak of Gandhi as a magnet for women. For he is the very extreme antithesis of all that men ordinarily consider magnetic for the other sex. He is not tall or young or handsome or romantic-looking.

Instead, he is 62, a wisp of a brown man, a mere wraith in which the pulse of life nevertheless beats ardently for great causes. He is almost skin and bones, due to his ascetic practices and his strict observance of a fast day and a silence day each week.

His face is the kind that would ordinarily repel most women—a bigoish nose topped with big glasses, hollow cheeks, a mouth which displays itself almost toothless when it opens to smile. His voice isn't particularly pleasant. He does not go out of his way to pay pretty compliments, which might appeal to others.

Two American mission workers will serve Gandhi during his stay in London. They are Mildred Oelgheot (left), who will prepare food for the little Indian leader, and Miss Camille A. Solomon, who will wait on the Mahatma.

Magnet for Women

Nevertheless that he is a magnet for the other sex is a fact beyond dispute. For the women of his own land and his own blood and color there has been nothing like him in modern times.

The women flock to his meetings. They make pilgrimages to his home and leave their paltriest gifts of flowers and fruits bought out of their poverty. It was they who carried his cult of passive resistance to the British Raj to its ultimate perfection. It was the women who demonstrated more than the men. It was they who furnished most of the pickets. It was they who accompanied him on his famous march to the sea when he started his attack on the salt tax.

How does he do it? The answer is, in part, by his mysticism and his spirituality. The Hindus are a very old people and there are certain qualities that appeal to them more deeply than they do to the more materialistic westerner.

But that is not the whole story. He has aided the lot of his brown sisters because he has made himself their bold, outspoken champion.

Over and over again in public meetings he has expressed his absolute view that men and women are equal. He practices what he preaches. In his Ashram, or settlement, at Sabarmati, women have equal rights with the men. They vote on all important matters just as do the men. No child marriages are allowed. In the ashram he maintains boys and girls are brought together in the classes like brothers and sisters.

He is opposed to the system of purdah—seclusion of women in a fixed part of the house, with all that this entails of ignorance and isolation. He has declared that men must cultivate a far greater respect than they have for women.

Gandhi's Principles

He has said finely:

"All of us men must hang our heads in shame so long as there is a single woman whom we dedicate to our passions."

And again:

"Of all the evils for which man has made himself responsible, none is so degrading, so shocking, or so brutal as his abuse of the better half of humanity; to me—sex, for it is the nobler of the two. It is, even today, the embodiment of sacrifice, silent suffering, humility, faith, and knowledge. A woman's intuition has often proved truer than man's arrogant assumption of superior knowledge."

Converts Follow

Some of this doctrine appeals to the mass of Indian women. Although Sarojini Naidu, the famous Indian poet and whose verses are the finest a Hindu ever wrote in English.

And this same tug of the little brown magnet that is Gandhi had proved irresistible to white women too. There is Miss Bal, for instance. Her real name is Madeleine Slade, daughter of the late Admiral Sir Edmund Slade. Six years ago she left England and a life of ease, luxury and society to become one of Gandhi's most devoted disciples. She is one of his secretaries. She works with her hands. Eats little in the simplest of rooms and eats the plainest of food. Mixes her own.

My attraction to the Mahatma is entirely religious. He is the symbol of religion to me, Gandhi's message to humanity proved irresistible. The outside world is far too materialistic. It needs mysticism. Gandhi is a practical mystic."

So she is here in England to serve him as she serves him in India. And only lately have the wires announced that Miss Slade was to have a companion service, an American girl, Miss Nilla Cram Cook, daughter of the late George Cram Cooke, poet and playwright. Around the world has felt the tug of attraction by the little brown magnet. She desired to follow in his path of renunciation of the material things of this world.

Two From America

And while Gandhi lives in Kingsley Hall, a settlement house in the crowded east end of London, he will have serving him two white girls from the North American continent—Miss Mildred Osterhout of Vancouver, British Columbia, and Miss Camille Annette Solomon of New York City. They did not come over for that purpose. In fact, they came before it was even dreamed that Gandhi would come to London after all.

But they are thrilled to death about the assignment. Miss Osterhout will prepare such food as Gandhi can eat. Miss Solomon will serve it to him.

The two girls who are to have this unique experience both came to Kingsley Hall to engage in social settlement work. Miss Osterhout used to teach school in Van couver. Miss Solomon engaged in settlement work in New York.

Long for a start is the new dictum as to length for the evening wrap. Luxuriously lovely is a very long, slim wrap with a top of off-white velvet, a diagonally yoke skirt of silver lame and a big collar and wide cuffs of snowy ermine.

Broach the subject of a brooch with interest for brooches are coming back. And who would not want to own a brooch in gold, platinum, blue and black enamel and brilliants, in a design of exotic flowers?

A diagonal blessing is the coat frock that combines the good points of both frock and coat. Such a model is made of dark red broadcloth. The lines are slim. It is buttoned at the side front, has long plain sleeves and a black fox collar. There is a removable cape, over the shoulder, to add slimness to the hipline.

Hold on to your new hat if it is one of the new disc hats that look like plates and are placed very much on the side of the head. Such a model is made in black velvet and is trimmed on top at the left with an Empire green and black aigrette. It ties behind the ear with black velvet ribbons.

Slim elegance is the watchword of the new mode. A coat that follows three lines is of navy blue cloth with a tweed line. It fastens at the side with one button. The cloth is printed with outlines of the map, giving a shiny and a dull effect. The collar is black fox.

Watch your game and see if clothes designed for freedom and ease, flare and shortness of blue, white and black striped, wash tub gingham. It has a cropped effect and a jersey scarf and is worn with a skirt of white jersey with a kick pleat.

Correct Manners

The Correct Signature

Dear Mrs. Beecham:

Will you kindly tell me how divorced wives should sign their names? Should a divorced woman sign Mrs. Mary Baker or Mrs. James Baker? I had to hand my name over to the "other woman" a few years ago.

B. S.

The very best social form, the form of signature approved by the real social world, is the use of her last name of the maiden name prefixed to the last name of the married name. For instance, if Mary Allan Johnson marries and later divorces James Baker, she would use, as her formal name, Mrs. Johnson Baker. Very dignified this is, too, for it doesn't use the first name, always to be avoided in the formal name of a married woman, a widow, or a divorced woman. Then too the last name of the maiden name is an identification, and the last name of the married woman is the other personal identification. A perfect solution of form of signature, I think.

Some women, divorced, do use the form of Mrs. Mary Baker, or Mrs. Mary Johnson Baker, but, as I say, it is not a socially approved form. Some women too use the form Mrs. Mary Johnson Baker—this is better than the use of the first name, but not nearly so good as the form suggest in the first paragraph.

The perfect form of signature for the divorced woman, to a business letter, or a letter in which she must inform the reader of her formal name, is:

Very truly yours,
Mary Johnson Baker.
(Mrs. Johnson Baker)

An Invitation

Dear Mrs. Beecham:

A friend of mine has invited my self and me to a bridal shower as she is giving for a girl with whom we are not acquainted. She has requested that we are not to bring bed gifts; she just wishes us to meet the bride-to-be and the other girls and not one of whom we know.

We feel that our presence will be somewhat embarrassing to the bride-to-be at a shower. What do you think? N.

This is a question that is often allowed to come up nowadays. Formerly this could not have happened, in the days when showers were strictly for close friends of the bride-to-be. So now we must decide each time if we really wish to go, under the circumstances that we do not know the bride-to-be and, if you think that your friend will be embarrassed in going, then it certainly advise that you do not accept the invitation, no matter how kindly it was meant. There will undoubtedly be other occasions on which you may have the opportunity of meeting this bride-to-be.

And, if you decide to go, I advise you to take a gift, a shower gift, of the same kind that the other guests will take. For instance, linen, if it is a linen shower, although your gift may not be the "consequential" kind that the close friends of the bride-to-be may take. Whereas linen might be a half dozen tea napkins or a tray cloth.

Bridesmaid Requirements

Dear Mrs. Beecham:

Will you kindly inform me if it is appropriate for a divorced woman to act as a bridesmaid at a wedding ceremony?

Readry.

Yes, it is perfectly correct and in good form for a divorced woman to act as a bridesmaid at a wedding ceremony unless the rules of the denomination forbid it.

RODNEY WINS FIRST GAME FROM NAPANEE

Defeat Gibbards at Napanee Wednesday By Score of 4 to 3

DORLAND GOOD

At Young Best Hitter With Triple and Homer. 2nd Game Saturday

Defeated but not disgraced was the position of the Gibbard "Athletics" Wednesday afternoon, when they took the short end of a 4 to 3 score from Rodney. The game was filled with thrills from the first to the last inning and had it not been for a couple of misplays on the part of the Athletics perhaps the outcome would have been different.

Not wishing to take any of the glory of the win from the victors but if Bill Street had not lost a fly ball in the sun and Ervin Gibbard had not tried to stretch a single into a double in the big eighth inning the score would have been much different.

But getting into the game Heinie "Sid" Dorland, on the mound for Rodney, hurled a game that will be long remembered in Eastern Ontario. The fans have not had the pleasure of seeing a "southpaw" like Dorland since the balmy days of Jack Williams. Dorland's control on the pie pitches was uncanny and it was chiefly through his superb pitching that the Rodney "Sodbusters" now hold the victory of the first game of the Intermediate "C" finals. Dorland retired the side in the first inning on four pitched balls and continued to throw in "apple" by the "Athletics" all the afternoon. He retired no less than fourteen Gibbard batters via the strikeout route, while his team mates gave him airtight support in the field. The "Sodbusters" presented a smart team for the Intermediate "C" ranks and after the exhibition displayed enough class to convinced the fans present that they are worthy representatives of Western Ontario.

Good Enough to Win

On the other hand Doug Fraser pitched good enough ball to win the average baseball game and had the team mates given him the support due to a pitcher who turns in the class of ball that Fraser has displayed so far this year things might have been different. "Doug" literally pitched his head off but the breaks did not seem to come his way—such is baseball. The only real threat that Gibbard's made was in the eighth inning, when they managed to work two hits after "A" Young had crashed out a home run in the seventh inning. Young was the big hitter for the Athletics when he collected a triple and a home run out of four trips to the plate. Gordon and Gibbard also hit the ball hard but could not seem to get their hits when Dorland started to bear down.

After reviewing yesterday's game it might be added that the Gibbard Athletics are far from being a beaten team as they play much better baseball away from home than they do "in their own back yard."

The Intermediate "C" tilt played in Rodney on Saturday afternoon and the winning team will battle in their special pullman car on Friday night for Rodney. It is more than likely the same two pitchers will again face up in Rodney on Saturday afternoon with Dorland and Fraser face each other in the second game of the intermediate finals.

Errors of omission and errors of commission spelt defeat for the Gibbard Athletics yesterday afternoon. They seemed to be able to do the wrong thing at the right time in order that the Rodney team could score first as well. But it is the misplays that make baseball the popular game it is today. It would not be proper to place too fully upon the subject of errors as some of them were so called for we think. Such is baseball.

"Sid" Dorland on the mound for the Rodney "Sod-busters" gave the fans an exhibition of pitching that they will remember for some time. The lanky south paw seemed to have the ability to bear down when the occasion arose and set the opposition back at a will. Dorland gave an exhibition of pitching that has not been seen in this district in some time. He pitched steadily and smoothly all through the game and deserved the win that was his.

On the other hand "Doug" Fraser hurled a masterful game and did not give up in the face of the errors that his teammates committed behind his delivries. "Al" Young was the hero of the day when he crashed out a home run in the seventh innings and a triple in the eighth. Card was close upon his heels when he collect ed a single and a double out of four tries. Had the tail end of the Gibbard's batting order hit the ball at all the game would have been much different than it was.

Gibbards play" the return game in Rodney on Saturday afternoon and they display the same spirit that has seen them turn into the intermediate finals this far, it will not surprise us if they came home with the series tied up. At any rate the Gibbard Athletics are to be congratulated on the fine game they have made to date. Good luck Gibbards is all we can wish them.

"If the Cardinals can make a few runs off those big fellers, Grove and Earnshaw, I think the A's will have plenty of trouble winning the series. They've got to win with Grove and Earnshaw or they're gone."

Is Hass going to play in the series?

"Yeah, he'll play. I asked him about it when we were over there. And Bishop will play, too. All the regulars will be in there except Boley."

Why not Boley?

"Well, the way I look at it is that this Williams has just about taken his job away from him. But maybe Cronin would rather have an older feller in there for the big series."

The Athletics have more pitchers than Grove and Earnshaw.

"Yeah, they have," said Bob, "but I don't know that they can beat the Cardinals. That's a good ball club. No, sir. They've got to win with those two big fellers. If they don't, it will be just too bad."

Boston Braves Win From Red Sox in Exhibition Till 4-3

(By Clayte Talbot Associated Press Sports Writer)

Walt Johnson's Washington Senators, inspired by the thought that those fat fortnightly pay cheques will cease coming around after the current week, have won the opening round of their "money" series with the New York Yankees.

By nosing out the McCarthymen, 3 to 2, in the first game played yesterday, the Senators increased their hold on second place in the American League to one game and a half, as a result they will need to win only one of three remaining games to beat out the Yanks for the coveted runner-up position.

While the general public might not become particularly excited over a joust for second place, taking the stand that a club finishing out of first place has nothing to look forward to until next season, the players have a vastly different attitude. It means several hundred extra dollars to each member of the outfit, that finishes second, when the time comes for the annual division of world series spoils.

As it turned out, Vernon Gomez, Yankee southpaw, made what might prove a costly error in yesterday's game. It came when Buddy Myer's sacrifice bunt in the sixth inning, and before he could right himself, the Senators had scored all of their three runs and had the game won. Gomez was trying for his 31st victory.

Lloyd Brown allowed the Yankees but five hits in the first seven innings, and Firpo Marberry blanked them completely the last two. It was Brown's single through the left side opened the Senators' rally in the sixth.

Indians Divide

In the only other scheduled games played in either Major League, the Cleveland Indians and Detroit Tigers divided a double-header. The Tigers took the first 9 to 1, knocking Willis Hudlin from the hill in the sixth inning, but the Indians came back to win the second, 6 to 5, behind Clint Brown's good pitching and gain an even break.

The highlight of the two contests was the batting of Earl Averill, Cleveland centrefielder. Collecting four hits, two in each game, the Indians' star batter hiked the year to 206 and passed Lou Gehrig of the Yanks, Major White leader of the American League who has the mark.

The Boston team proved themselves heroes for Boston fans in their home town rivals, the Red Sox, by taking a 4 to 3 decision in an exhibition game at Fenway Park. Waite Hoyt and Ed Brandt on the mound, Jimmy Dykes and Jack Rothrock on the bench, Bill Regan and Bill Dinneen behind the bat, and Worthington's single drove in the winning runs in the ninth.

Philadelphia and Pittsburgh were rained out in the only games scheduled in the National League.

Yesterday's Stars

Earl Averill, Indians—Made four hits in double header with Detroit to take American League leadership with 207 batting average.

Lloyd Brown and "Firpo" Marberry, Senators—Held Yankees to five hits to win important battle for second place in American League.

Hebert (Red) "Worthington, of the Braves—Slashed a single to score two runs and beat the Red Sox 4 to 3, in an exhibition game.

Acids In Stomach Cause Indigestion

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food sours, causing the usual stomach symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows.

Artificial digestents are not needed in such cases. They do more harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any druggist some Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful of powder or four tablets in water after each eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or bloating. Bisurated Magnesia in powder form or tablet form—never liquid or "milk"—neutralizes the acids in the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most efficient form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.

AMUSEMENTS

THE SQUAW MAN" EFFECTIVE PIECE OF ENTERTAINMENT

One of the most enduring and popular stories the American stage has known made its local talking picture debut last night at the Belle Theatre.

It is "The Squaw Man", magnificently produced by Cecil B. DeMille for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

DeMille has assembled a remarkable cast for his presentation of the famous Edwin Milton Royle play, rated with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "Ben Hur" among the first three most popular stage tales the U. S. has known.

Time has not dimmed in any way public enjoyment of this story of moving quickly between English castle and the Arizona cattle country. The action has been modernized, but the background is the same as in the past, a strong, gripping melodrama with a conflict at blood tint, Indian and white, that strips with "box office" potentialities.

Baxley Scores

Warner Baxter is convincing as James Wynnegate, who after the English episode, becomes Jim Carleton, ranch owner. If one, is to compare him with those who have played the role before, it would be well said that he does it with more finesse and quietly than the typical predecessors on the stage and Wallace Fergusson, and in silent pictures (Dustin Farnum and Elliott Dexter). He does a great job.

Lupe Velez is a splendid Nakrich. She doesn't speak twenty words of English, but her speeches in the Apache tongue are fraught with significance. The final scene, when she sees her boy being taken to England, as the posse arrives to arrest her for the murder of Cash Hawkins, is without a doubt the finest thing the capable player has done. Eleanor Boardman is effective as the English girl Lady Diana Carlton. Richard Arlen scores as the villainous Cash Hawkins, and Roland Young in a bit also is up to the high standard he has set in previous pictures.

"The Squaw Man" will be exhibited again tonight for the last time.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN" PICTURE FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

Wheeler & Woolsey in New Comedy

Manager Forbes of the Bells Theatre, has assembled a splendid array of screen entertainment for presentation tomorrow and Saturday, matinee daily.

Special mention must be made of the short or Junior features to be exhibited which includes the return of the famous Coo-Coo comedians, Wheeler and Woolsey, who introduce a new brand of nuisery, stories and laughs, in their new thirty minute laugh jamboree, entitled "Nurse Marry Me." These two popular comedians have a large number of admirers in Belleville who no doubt will be on hand to see them.

Miss Hollis Garrard, of the title assigned one of the most sensational wrestling exhibitions ever recorded on a local screen, and introduces the late Stanley Stasiak, known as "The Polish Lion," and Gus Sonnenberg, styled "The Wrestling Demon." Stanley Stasiak was known to friends while in Belleville and he is rightfully given credit for making wrestling the popular diversion it is today in picture houses.

The ever welcome Paramount Sound News has been selected to open the program.

Such was the success of Paramount's two juvenile comedy-dramas "Tom Sawyer" and "Skippy," the company has brought the bright characters of "Tom Sawyer" together in a splendid story based on Mark Twain, "Huckleberry Finn."

"Huckleberry Finn" which is the feature attraction with the above short subjects, was written for Jackie Coogan back to the screen in the role of Tom Sawyer, Junior Durkin as Huck Finn, and Mitzi Green as Becky Thatcher. Robert Gordon as Jackie Searl makes more mischief as Sid, Tenia managing little brother.

The adult cast which won such favor in "Tom Sawyer" is augmented by two popular character actors, Clarence Muse and Lucien Littlefield for "Huckleberry Finn." These two funny men are seen as a pair of desperadoes from whom Huck and Tom rescue two innocent young girls. Clara Blandick is again seen as Aunt Sally, Jane Darwell as Miss Jane Darwell re-enacts the role of the lady-schoolmarm of Tom's days.

The same attention to production detail which made "Tom Sawyer" such an outstanding picture of the past century, is a feature of "Huckleberry Finn," the adventures of the 1850's are built and populated. Costumes, settings and speech idioms were faithfully copied. And the story progresses with the whole village going busily about the everyday tasks and pleasures which are typical of the life of the grandfathers and great-grandfathers of the present generation.

More than two hundred children were assigned bit and character parts in this production, under the direction of Norman Taurog, who achieved such success with "Skippy" he is known as Hollywood's "kid mentor." "Huckleberry Finn," in book form, is one of the classics of American literature. On the screen with "Tom Sawyer," it will take its place as one of the memorable pictures of all time.

SUGAR SHELLS FREE

"The Great Lover," the brilliant story of an impulsive, romantic Italian, opens today at the Capitol.

The popular Adolphe Menjou, together with a distinguished cast including Neil Hamilton, Baclanova, Irene Dunn (of "Cimarron"), Lilyan Edwards and Rocco Alex, the studio-trained canine, assist in making "The Great Lover" indeed outstanding.

Paula, the irresistible, is adored by many women but adores only one, who, in turn, repays with his affections in the same way he has been paid with the affections of his paramours.

Of these paramours, the fascinating Mrs. Loring is the last to affect the heart of the famous Paula, when he meets Diana Cross (Irene Dunn), aboard the boat, which is taking the great baritone back to America. Diana's lover, Carlo Nesbit (Hamilton), vows vengeance on Paurel, Gavarova, (Baclanova), madly in love with Paurel conceives an equal hatred for Diana and the outcome of all these mixed feelings is a strange polygonal of sacrifice, forgiveness and disillusionment for "The Great Lover."

The operatic scenes and the singing in this production are wonderful, and will find appreciation in any audience.

The supporting programme of comedy, interest and travel accompanying "The Great Lover" is up to the usual Capitol standard. This programme will also be shown on Friday and there is a matinee daily.

The article of silverware to be presented to each lady tonight is a Sugar Shell. This beautiful 8½ inch shell is one of the complete fifty-two piece set, that an extra large number of ladies are expected to attend the performance of the Capitol tonight. With this anticipation, the management announce having provided for emergency by ordering extra, so that no lady will be disappointed. The management also announces that tonight is the only opportunity of obtaining the article. Those attending patrons should be guided accordingly, and make every effort to secure their gift tonight.

I wonder but how many race followers throughout the land grasped their teeth when they heard of Geo. Crowe, father of nine children, confiding a five dollar bank note to the cashier's wicket at Thorncliffe the other day, and getting back $4.50, being one of the two fortune-favored individuals who had tickets on the daily duet, which paid the longest price of the year in Canada. Crowe says it was luck, plain luck. No one will begrudge him the money, but three years he has been out of work and for several years previous to that he worked only occasionally, war disabilities having rendered him constantly subject to illness. "I have had my luck now, and I'm going to stay away, though the money will not last very long, so you spy for in a big family like mine. But let somebody else have the chance of getting winners through." he says. Crowe's tickets were on Rocho 'Or and The Dipper. No Hum!

WAGE-CUTTING IS CONDEMNED

Labor Battle Reductions As Economic Experts Disagree

Washington, D.C. Sept. 24 (A.P.) A charge of bad faith and unsound policy was raised against the wage-cutting steel corporations today by organized labor.

While President Hoover and his advisers remained silent but seriously Intent, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, took the initiative with a public assertion that the steel industry had broken its two year old pledge to the White House.

The Labor leader quoted a statement made by Julius Klein, assistant secretary of commerce, that there will be Hell to pay through-out the United States in the event of a general wage reduction." This Green said, was a logical and sound conclusion.

All federal economic experts, however, are not agreed as to the final outcome. From one side have come predictions that the wage reduction will strengthen business, increase employment. In the other camp are expressions of regret and forecasts of a decreased buying power on the eve of a business recovery.

Dewatering Started By Kaladar Mines

Dewatering operations have been begun this week by the Kaladar Gold Mines Limited on their property in the Township of Kaladar, north Northbrook. This work, it is expected, will be completed in three weeks after which, according to officials, a force of thirty or forty men will be set to work sinking and drifting.

This property was formerly operated by the Star of the East Mining Company. The Kaladar Company has another property but as the Star of the East has a shaft two hundred and twenty-five feet down it was decided to proceed with work upon the latter property. There are no buildings on the property.

Mr. T. J. Johnson, of Toronto, is president of the Kaladar, and Messrs C. E. Hanna and H. E. Fairfield are directors.

Jail Prisoners Known to Governor by First Name

Indicates of County Prison Respond to Kindly Treatment

CASE IN POINT

"Well Bill, what is it?" asked county Jail Governor French of a new young man with slicked-down plastered designs upon one arm, who strolled apparent by casually into the office at the court house yesterday about noon. "How do you want your work done?" Bill dispassionately answered the man. Governor French discussed the job with him—in fact he listened to specifications from Bill—finally the new method was decided upon and the man went back to his work. To the question as to who he was and how he were an employee about the building, the Governor simply replied, "No, Bill is not an employee, he is a resident. He is here for one month on the order of the Governor—he has been here a month and a half and he likes it. He is a fine fellow and will be there a little time when he goes."

"What is the job he is doing?" he asked and the Governor explained that he had several men working on the grounds and "we have a guard watching them." "Yes, I guess," This remark brought a talk from Governor French which showed a knowledge of psychology.

"Guard," he exclaimed, "certainly not—they won't run away, they know where they are well treated—see them like human beings and they respond to my treatment. They're not bad men, only weak men, but I don't think I shall, because you know that I class discipline the best way to do the job with him also that is the way to get his name. I do this with nearly all the men, who are in there for any length of time. I endeavor to have them take an interest in the work when they come here for I give them, nor do I "feed them" to them. I let them work together rather do-I order them to do the work in a certain way—I suggest the way to do it and it is always done that way. I have the men doing the job must be finished by noon; I give it another day. Under criminal offences—they are not bad men, only weak—I feel that when all handling and proper suggestions are given to men they have the capabilities in them and cause them to take that the world is against them, as some of them think when they come here but that they "play square" they in turn will get a "square deal." That is why I give them work. I have men in 36 inmates in the jail at the present time and the greater number of them I can trust as I do not feel that those who are at the work working out in the fresh air without a guard watching over them constantly reminding them that they are considered untrustworthy but while under bonds to work and with that they are made that way and are handled with confidence. But being trusted, that is different matter to decide upon their dispositions and give them a different treatment. Some may think that I am a little idealistic but I feel that is right."

On the way from the court house session was made to pass the men at work and the Governor stopped to them—"You have a good boss and I—several applied in unison—You bet we have."

Not as the evidence was about to close for the night, two men, alleged to have been intoxicated, set upon a third man and beat him up. The man's wife, on this, drew the attention of a nearby garage proprietor and his wife, who were also attacked by the two men. The pair, however, eluded the two and managed to get the information to garage while a call was put in for the police. When the police arrived the man in the ditch had disappeared and Belanger and his companion, whose name was withheld, were taken to the police station for questioning.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

For a time Don Bob smoked on in silence while Ted paced the length of the room.

"It's hideous," Ted exclaimed. This cold contempt for life these agencies have. Morales himself cares nothing. What's to be done? Is he continue to take his hand and eat his food."

"My dear fellow, what earthly good would it do to insult him now? Take my word, there are better and more subtle ways. That Yaqui, for instance. He gave me something to think about." And for a space of many minutes Don Bob smoked, his eyes fixed in thought. At last he took his head.

"Morales must be worried. It is if he too felt the breaking up of things. This kingdom of fear that he has built can't go on forever. There are mutterings. That Yaqui lied his way to freedom. Morales didn't dare hold him. The people themselves aren't taking things lying down as they once did. And behind all this is the shadow of Hoyote. He, I think Senor Morales is many things to think of this night. Thoughts that will be uncomfortable bedfellows for the Spaniard."

But Ted was gazing out toward the desert, and a little smile was playing about his mouth. When he waked up it was obvious he hadn't been a word of Don Bob's soliloquy, for he murmured: "You should've seen her. She was—magnificent."

"My son," answered Don Bob sorrowfully, "when they reach your stage, hope, if any, lies in a good night's rest."

And slipping his arm through Ted's he led him up the stairs.

Regional Conferences Upon Prohibition

Washington, D.C., Sept. 22 — Twenty-five regional conferences from coast to coast are planned by the Women's Christian Temperance Union "to take the prohibition message to every section of the United States in person."

In announcing the conferences today the organization said they would constitute "advance work in the important months preceding the national conventions of the major political parties."

the walk to where the horses stood she looked silently up toward the mesa. High on its edge, touched with the sun's first rays, glittered the forms of the Conquerors. Ted slightly parted, she gazed up in a kind of silent communion—then turned toward the man.

"The legend of the Cross may yet be answered," she said slowly, "and down the long drive."

She mounted and led the way down the long drive.

"The first morning of creation must have been like this," Ted told her, as they rode through the gate and out toward the desert. "Everything washed and dusted. Even the mountains look as if they were only a few miles away."

"They're about thirty. We're going back to the mines in the Spring of the Saints. There we'll try to eat all the food in our saddlebags and come back through the sunset. A whole day devoted to your lordship. I'm being very nice to you, Ted Radcliffe, for no reason at all."

"You're being quite perfect to me. I'm wondering if it isn't because you pity me for—what's happened," he said.

Leaning forward she fondled the soft ears of her horse.

"I'm not sure. At least twinge of pity. Why should I when it's going is all ahead of you and you have a world and a body to do with what you want? Besides you have something I never could—the memory of a father. Mine died when I was too young to remember. I only know he was big and handsome and had a wild temper. And I know he loved my mother very much, too. Don't give me credit for too much charity. The strongest of mine, they have need of all the charity I possess."

"I love the way you call them your people."

"They are my people! Don't forget my mother had Mexican blood in her veins as well as Irish. And she loved this country and these people just as I do. She taught me their language, you know. So I am not a creature of this desert country." After a long moment she added, "I wish I could make it a country of happiness instead of tears."

"You mean—"

"What you saw last night. That sort of thing. There is a curse of blood on the lords of this land. They love cruelty for its own sake. Even my uncle. With me and Jito he is the soul of kindness. I love him. But to him these people in their dirty adobes are not real people with blood and feelings or immortal souls. They are just things that do his will."

"Who certainly seems a little inclined that way."

"Oh, Jito is a child, mentally. My uncle is a child, and to be cruel even as a child is cruel. Sometimes when I'm alone here I'm afraid I'm going sorry. But deep inside he is proud to be the friend and ally of my uncle's herdsmen."

The clop of a little mule's hoofs stopped, and together they looked up through the fresh morning air and over the rolling desert to where far-off purple mountains shimmered against the blue world. A little breeze stirred the desert flowers and the leaves of the trees, distant waters, and in a kind of enchantment the three men watched and listened, held by the beauty and peace of it. Then at last the girl turned, great tears stood in her eyes, she whispered, as if half afraid to break the spell: "How wonderful this all is, this beautiful country of hers. Life could be so perfect here. It could be always a land of song and eternal sunshine, a land where everyone might have his little piece of land, his house and his work to do. When I was away at school, like an alien out there in the world, I realized then how much I loved all this desert country of mine. Each night I would pray to the Mother of God to show me how I might come back and change this land of slavery into the paradise it should really be. Its freedom and hopefulness that in your country you have. And so easily we could have it. Only to change my uncle—that would be enough." She laughed with a little mirth. "I came back, I tried to change it all, but ever between me and all I wanted to do was his iron will. Each year he is more obsessed with the desire to be absolute law in everything."

She touched the horse with her spur. "But, why cloud a perfect morning? I had resolved to put all this behind me today—and be gay. If I did not sometimes forget, I should go mad. So now you will tell me about your own country."

But Ted shook his head. "You already know about my country. Let's talk of you. You are serious-minded, aren't you? And yet you told me you've been in love."

"In love? Oh, many times." She laughed.

"I don't think I like the thought of your being in love many times."

"You wouldn't, Senor Ted. The big, conquering male never does. He waits always to think that the one woman he selects has been dutifully waiting for him through the years. But I am a woman with a past. Back when I was twelve years old I was madly in love with Jito because he could bring me gila monsters in his hands and carry snakes in his blouse, and I could—and did—I've been long in love with an old priest. Even now I'm in love with him, grown up as I am. You shall see him some day. And I'm in love with still another man, even today."

"Who?"

"A man older than you. A man of the world."

"Who?"

"Don Bob. Isn't he a dear?"

There was a strange quality of relief in Ted's laugh. "I know one reason why you love him. Both as savage as you are the wrongs of the peons. I'd advise a combination between you and Don Bob and El Coyote. There's no telling what the three of you couldn't do."

"The three of us? You should say the four of us. Because we'd enlist your talents too. We would have you rub Jito's nose in the dust each morning before breakfast. And now watch that horse of yours, for we're going down into the arroyo here, and it's a crazy, crumbling path from now on."

They fell silent, intent on watching the trail, which now sloped rapidly off the mesa and descended abruptly in the dry bottom of the stream.

Chaparral and stunted aspen grew thicker as they twisted their way along the narrow canyon and for two hours stopped at a noon rest. Then the ascending grade told them they were entering the foothills. There they dismounted and led their horses up the narrow path. The sun was already at its height when the girl pointed to a grove of fir trees on the hill above them.

"That is the Spring of the Saints."

A place of dreams and rest Ted found it. Cool and shaded after the blazing desert. A stream welled up from among the rocks and along its banks tall firs and pine trees grew.

"The sacred trees of the Aztec people, those firs," the girl told him. "Men still call them in Spanish, 'the religious fir.' Smell how fragrant they are—"

They walked knee-deep through rustling grass. On the knoll behind them stretched a low, rambling wall of stone, and beyond it the gray ruins of a church, with the belfry still standing. Through the windows they could a rusting bell, silhouetted against the sky.

"The Spanish monks built a monastery here," she said, as they loosened their saddles. "How long they lived here and worshipped God in their quiet place no one knows. The Indians back in the hills still remember them as the good people but now it is a place of bats and ghosts. Listen to that brook and the wind among the fir tops. I often think this is one of the most peaceful places in the world—you might live here all one's life and just be happy and let the world pass by. As a matter of fact, that is what those old monks did.

"And now, if you will bring those saddlebags, we'll see what they've packed for us."

They ate with all the appetite a long morning ride can give, then lighted cigarettes and smoked. Ted watched her as she lay back on the soft grass, looking up at the dark trees now, for last he said, "You're a healthy young animal, aren't you?"

"If you mean that I've just eaten enough for two men, I'll have to plead guilty."

"No, but it's been crossing my mind that you're not really an old Mother Nature, if she has any plan at all, you'd want women to be."

"That's too dark a saying, Senor Ted."

"What I'm trying to say is that I find you quite unspoiled by the world. You've never learned nor bitter, neither are you ready to accept the world as it is. You know there are holes in it, and you try to help. You do help. And there is something of a child in you, too. That swift love of beautiful things in a land overrun with sin and sorrow, your hate of cruel power. So, do you mind if I say I find you perfect and quite adorable?"

Leaning over she laid a cool hand on his. "Don't make love to me, Ted," she smiled.

"It's because I couldn't make love to you that I can say all this."

"I'm not sure I like that either.

MR. & MRS. LIFE IS FURTHER COMPLICATED IN THE HOME OF JOE AND VI

LARGEST CROWD IN HISTORY ATTENDS STIRLING FAIR AND EXHIBITS LARGELY INCREASED

Receipts Increased From Those of Last Year By 15 Percent

GOOD RACING

Cheese Exhibit Best To Be Shown in County This Year

Frustration of the Canadian debtor, thoughts of depression and kindred subjects, that have kept residents of the central part of Hastings County in the dumps for the past year, were all forgotten on Wednesday afternoon, when all gathered to pay homage to the science of farm, the home, and the garden, it being the occasion of the Stirling Agricultural Society's annual fall fair. A larger crowd has never witnessed the exhibition than that present on Wednesday and never in the history of the fair has there been such a large exhibit in every class and the exhibits of such superior quality.

Exceeded Expectation

The attendance at the fair this year exceeded the fondest expectation of the directors. The President of the Society, E. J. Pryer, stated to the reporter, who was an interested spectator that the Society expected a decrease in the receipts of at least 25 per cent., but after the gate was checked it was found that an increase of 15 percent over last year was recorded. The receipts will be well over $1,000.00 which is exceptional considering the times. The secretary, J. E. O'Donnell, who has taken over the duties so ably performed for many years by his father, also stated that the fair was the best since his association with the Society as manager. Reports such as these will do more to stabilize the country than probably any other factor. There were 102 more entries in the various classes and over 2500 exhibits shown, truly a remarkable showing, for this thriving community.

Every Class Increased

Every class showed an increase and the reporter spent a profitable half hour viewing through the palaces, later visiting the cattle shed, the poultry shed, the sow pens and the horse barn. It did not seem possible, that such a wonderful exhibit of ladies fancy work and domestic science could be shown in a small community. The work of the ladies was new and did not appear shelf worthy, while the work which called for novel and new features was fully lived up to by the exhibitors. The fancywork table was a work of art and unreservedly awarding the table was tempting. Turning to the vegetable and seed table the display shown was of the best and the competition was exceptionally keen.

Cheese Exhibit

Of interest especially to this district was the exhibition of cheese. Twenty eight boxes were on view and the judges stated that they had not seen any finer cheese this year at any fair. The award for the best white cheese was won by T. V. Spencer of Queensboro, while the best white cheese exhibited from a factory, that sold on the Belleville Board, was won by John Acres of Harold. The best finished cheese made by Harry Juby, and the highest scoring cheese was made by John Acres of Harold. The best scoring cheese as to flavor award was won by John Acres of Harold while Bert Anderson of Queensboro won the prize for the best scoring cheese open to all and the best made white cheese.

There were over 200 birds in the poultry division with barred rocks, brown and white leghorns and light brahmas predominating. This is one of the largest exhibitions of poultry that has been shown in Stirling in years. There was also a geese on exhibition and any one of them would make a delightful Christmas dinner. The cattle exhibit was worth the price of admission alone. The showing counted 69 head of Holsteins and a fine lot they were, besides Holsteins, Ayrshires, and Polled Angus. Richard Honey and Son, Warkworth won the award for the best dairy herd with his excellent Holstein, while Michael Shea of Stirling was a close second. The best beef herd special was won by C. Crigo of Roseneath with his Durhams and Ben Bleecker was a close second. Mr. A. E. Hubble, Havelock, took all the prizes for Jerseys, incidentally this herd being the outstanding one at the recent Belleville Fair.

Swine and Sheep Shown

Travelling over to the swine and sheep pens the competition was just as keen as in other classes. E. J. Chrpoff and Martin and Sons, who are well known in this city carried off the major portion of the awards although C. U. Heath and W. E. Heath gave stiff competition. The horses were not as good as has been seen at Stirling fair, but this could not be said of the Percheron class. William Cowan of Codrington showed at least a class of percherons as one would see at the C.N.E. or the state fair, Mr. Cowan has exhibited at these associations and did not come home without a few ribbons. The carriage and roadster type was not as extensive as former years. Mr. S. P. Hagerman managed to win a number of awards, while Mr. Hagerman was adjudged the best lady driver on the grounds. Mr. C. G. Stickle won the major awards with his excellent heavy draught team.

Fleshy Cattle

The fair was not without its humorous side and the quick kids competition was the feature attraction. There were four entries, the rules requiring the horses to be hitched in front of the stand, drive once around the track and unhitched at the starting point. Willard Cowan of Codrington was the winner with James Miller of Madoc a close second. The horse used by Mr. Cowan had a colt at foot but was not allowed to accompany its mother on the trip and the man holding the colt had his hands full during the contest.

Amusement and entertainment was provided for all who did not care to watch the races or view the exhibits. A class midway operated on the grounds, while many wheels were in operation, fruit being the prize, that could be obtained providing one was on the winning number. Many a housewife secured her peaches for preserving by this method. A ball tournament was run in conjunction with the horse racing, a beautiful cup being the award. Stirling was fortunate in winning, first defeating Bethel 5-3 and later winning from Ivanhoe in the finals 7-4.

Good Racing

Naturally the horse races was the chief center of attraction and the racing was in keeping with the rest of the entertainment being forceful and exciting. Each of the three races were decided in straight heats with local owned horses receiving the majority of the prize money. Lou Enriches, owned by Henry Diment of this city, won the 2.23 class in straight heats, while Billy Smith piloted the green mare Nance to second money in the slow class. Louis Botha, owned in Smith Falls, was much too good for his field in the free for all and won as he pleased, while Dick Sunday supplied the opposition. Geoffrey O. "Tim of Belleville was in the stand and handled the fields and the crowd to perfection. There was only one accident during the afternoon, the bike carrying Howard McQuaggs behind Red Peted tipping and throwing the teamster heavily to the ground. He was not injured. The horse ran away but no damage was done to the equipment and he was easily captured at the end of the heat. The time in the several heats was fast considering the type of going, the summary showing the standing of those participating:

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 38. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan went in search of Jane's father. Finally he found the old man, and the professor, brought them safely to the cabin. And again vanished into the jungle. Esmeralda "came to" at the lioness's last shriek. The reunited party of castaways related their experiences and talked long of the mysterious ape-man.

When it grew light they ate of their scanty store of food. They decided to bury the skeletons. The professor discovered they were those of white people. On the man's finger he found a massive ring. Clayton gave a cry of astonishment— . It bore the crest of the house of Greystoke.

And then Jane in a book saw the single name: Greystoke. Thus they identified the skeletons and with deep reverence buried them. The professor had noted that the infant's bones were not a human's. He murmured "Most remarkable," but said nothing to the others. From the trees Tarzan of the Apes watched the solemn ceremony.

Most of all he watched the sweet face and graceful figure of Jane. He knew that she was created to be protected and that he was created to protect her. Esmeralda chanced to glance toward the harbor. She cried out, pointing to the "Arrow" slowly sailing seaward.

Now they knew they were deserted —marooned by merciless sailors on this jungle shore. Tarzan saw their consternation; also the departure of the ship. He swung through the trees to see closely this strange floating house. Presently his keen eyes saw the faintest suspicion of smoke on the horizon.

CHAMPIONS NAMED FROM 17 SCHOOLS

Competitions of All Classes at County Fair at Stirling

MANY EXHIBITS

Championship School Fair Attracts Closest Competition

An event in connection with the Stirling Agricultural Society's fair that is be interest to the younger generation is the Championship S.S. 16, Thurlow; Miss Stevenson, of the best ever held. Seventeen schools from various parts of Hastings County were represented and the pupils upon parade certainly presented a creditable appearance. A number were appropriately costumed for the event and spectators were not slow to show their appreciation of the pupils' decorations by hearty applause. The children also made the display (also in the portion of the agricultural hall which was reserved for them. Native wood artistically arranged showed careful preparation as did also the other exhibits. No less than 60 plates of apples of various kinds were shown while other fruit was displayed. The writing samples was of the best and the pastry and candies shown were, to say the least, tempting.

The judges had no easy task in making their awards in the various classes as competition was keen with many exhibits. In a prominent place upon the grounds the park took place, also the Strathcona exercises and First Aid competition. Seventeen schools were represented and with their teachers were as follows:

Liberal Views on Marriage Routed at P. E. Conference

Medical Certificate For Marriages Are Opposed

8 IMPEDIMENTS

Denver, Colo., Sept. 24.—Conservatives held the matrimonial fort at the Protestant Episcopal convention today.

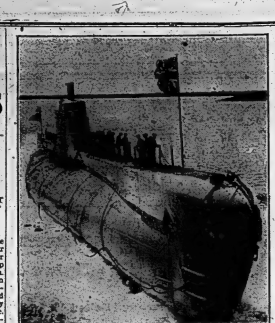
The Liberals were routed during consideration by the House of Deputies of a report of the committee on revision of the Canons on marriage and divorce.

The deputies first adopted and later rescinded a provision, which would have required parties to a proposed marriage to show medical certificates testifying to their physical and mental health. The first vote was 260 for and 215 against.

Approval was given a provision calling for the establishment of an Ecclesiastical Court in each diocese to consider cases of divorce.

Eight or nine impediments to the marriage listed in the proposed Canons were adopted without debate.

One, which prohibited marriage in the event of "impotence of either party, undisclosed to the other," was approved, but only after a spirited debate, during which the Rev. Z. B. Phillips, Washington, D.C., presiding officer, had difficulty in maintaining order. The Rev. Robert Johnston, Washington, D. C., offered an amendment to strike out the words, "undisclosed to the other", but his proposal was voted down after prolonged argument.



One section of the proposed Canon remained for consideration today. The final section concerns the remarriage of divorced persons. Sections of the proposed Canon already approved are little different than the existing church laws on divorce and marriage, with the exception of the establishment of Ecclesiastical Courts and the proposal for premarriage instruction.

Destitute Camp in House Corridors

Winnipeg, Sept. 24.—Camping in the stately marble halls of the Parliament Building, nineteen destitute families of Winnipeg, including more than forty children, took up their temporary residence yesterday in order to bring their needs to the direct attention of the Government. Outside the building 10 men are picketing to frustrate any effort to oust these guests of the Government.

The families are people who have not lived in Winnipeg long enough to obtain relief from the City Unemployment Relief, or Social Welfare Organization.

While the conference was in progress, the children frolicked on the polished marble floors, while their mothers gathered in groups to discuss the situation. The men paced slowly up and down on the outside picket line which was being constantly augmented by recruits.

CAINE'S SON LEAVES LABOR

Takes Stand on Side of National Government For Solvency

London, Sept. 22.—(C.P. Cable)—The number of Labor supporters of the National Government in the House of Commons was increased to 14 today when Derwent Hall Caine, elected in Everton, Liverpool, in the last general elections, decided to support the Government.

Mr. Hall Caine, who is a son of the late novelist, like nearly half of the Laborite supporters of the Government, won a former Conservative constituency for the Labor party in 1929. He was elected by a majority of 1,567 over Miss Beaven, Conservative.

"It is the first essential of social progress that the nation would be financially solvent," Mr. Hall Caine wrote in explaining his decision to leave the Labor Opposition benches. The 14 supporters of the Government in the House include Prime Minister MacDonald and the other Labor Cabinet Ministers.

Robbing Orchards and Cellars of Farmers

ELDERLY SPINSTER: "Girls are not what they were in my young days."

RUTTLESS YOUNG THING: "No! Some of them have become lifesome old maids."
—The London Opinion.

Sneak thieves have been busy in Rawdon visiting plum trees, apple trees and also stealing canned fruit from cellars. The farmers and their wives have to work hard for what they have and it seems too bad to have fruit stolen after buying fruit and sugar to say nothing of the work of preserving it.

4 Is there smooth control of volume from maximum to minimum? Can you tune it in without noise or blasting?
5 Is the cabinet beautiful, modern, and designed in harmonize with the home furnishings? Is it acoustically correct?

KEEN RIVALRY FOR PRIZES AT P.O.W. SCHOOL

Baby Show Was Added Feature at Popular School Fair

LARGE EXHIBITS

Program of Sports Wound Up Successful Function

Keen rivalry in competition and sports marked the annual School Fair at the Prince of Wales School yesterday afternoon one of the most successful yet held at that institution. Prized entries in all classes swelling races, and the ever popular Baby Show provided plenty of interest and excitement for the large number of visitors who were present during the afternoon.

Exhibits of livestock and pets of all kinds were arranged out of doors. These were of especially fine quality, and included everything from white mice to great bearded oats and their frolicsome kittens had an honored place, the queenly Persian side by side with the pedigreed hound babies.

Exhibits

Fruits, vegetables and plants were found in the basement of the school the lovely blossoms and rich colouring of the former making the display very attractive. Here, too, were the domestic science exhibits. Some very fine art needlework attracted much comment and the splendid cookery products pointed to an abundance of unusually good cooks among the young ladies of that community. In sewing, most of the entries were of a useful sort, and the loving care with which a battered looking little doll was placed among the more pronounced beauties spoke of some proud owner. Handicraft was a large exhibition and many models of planes showed the modern trend of boys' workmen. Tools, birdhouses, boats and other hand made articles were included in this department. An interesting exhibit was that of Sherwood Benn, a former pupil at the Prince of Wales School. Sherwood is now in technical studies at Ontario School for the Deaf and brought to the Fair some of the articles he had made while there. These showed fine workmanship and finish and were highly prised.

Baby Show

One of the features of this particular fair has always been the Baby Show and yesterday many mothers gathered with their little ones for the popular event. The judging was done by Dr. Gibson, who was assisted by Mrs. Martin. The results of the show were as follows:

1 month to 8 months—Baby Stevens, Baby Littles, Baby Noyes.

8 months to 18 months—Baby Crossen, Baby Littles, Baby Van Dusen.

Special prize for best baby in the show (Prince Hazn, donated by Clarke and Hall)—Baby Stevens.

An extensive programme of sports was carried on during the afternoon, Bicycle and foot races numbers of entries. Most amusing were the two-legged race, the wheel-barrow race, the potato and spoon race in which the runner balanced another on their prescribed way back. Needless to say horse and rider rarely reached the finish line together.

Frankford

PRESENTATION

Mr. Geo. Gillard, who has been attached to the local branch of the Bank of Montreal for the past three years, was the recipient of a fine wrist watch, Friday morning, Sept. 18th, just before his departure for Simcoe where he has been moved.

A number of business men and friends gathered at the bank and the following address was read by Mr. W. N. Simmons.

Dear Gillard,—On behalf of the staff of the Bank of Montreal, Frankford business men and friends, I take great pleasure in presenting you with this gift and as time goes on it will remind you hope that it will be a constant reminder of your many friends in Frankford.

Signed on behalf, W. N. Simmons, H. Turley, H. J. Madill, M. Sarles, and Staff.

Mr. Gillard although completely taken by surprise, made a neat reply in which he spoke of his pleasant sojourn in the village and also of his relations in banking, the relationship with the business people had been of a pleasant nature and he hoped at some future time to revisit Frankford and renew aquaintances.

After wishing him good luck and best wishes for the future in his new field of endeavour, the gather ing dispersed.

End Piles Quick

No Salves—No Cutting

Your itching, bleeding, protruding piles will go when you actually remove the cause—bad blood circulation in the weak, flabby parts —and not one minute before. Salves or cutting can't do this—an internal remedy must be used. HEM-ROID, prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, succeeds because it stimulates the circulation, drives out congested blood, heals and restores the almost dead parts. HEM-ROID has such a wonderful record right in this City, that J. S. McKeown's Drug Store says one bottle of HEM-ROID Tablets must end your pile agony or money back.

THE HUMILIATED DOLLAR

A pound sterling will buy in Great Britain anything that can be bought with 20 shillings or 240 pence but Britishers in France are having trouble in getting rid of it to pay bills. A Canadian dollar in Canada will purchase whatever 100 cents will buy but a Canadian in Buffalo is having difficult in getting a glass of milk with it. A French franc is worth only one-fifth of the former value, but a Frenchman is willing to pin his faith in it for a time. Banks have failed by the hundreds in the States, but the United States citizen now has double the currency issued by banks in that country, while he refuses to touch a bank note from Canada, where there are no bank failures. And this is all because the pound is not considered worth 240 pence in France and the Canadian dollar is not regarded as worth 100 cents in the States.—Toronto Globe.

Poet's Corner

A thrush is tapping a stone
With a small-shell in its beak;
A small bird hangs from a cherry
Until the stem shall break.
No watching song has begun
And yet birds chatter and hurry
And throng in the elm's gloom
Because an owl goes home.
—Gordon Bottomley, in "Poems of Thirty Years."

Gandhi Sees England---And England Sees Gandhi

It was Mahatma Gandhi's first glimpse of England in fifteen years and this Ontario Intelligencer Ne's Service picture shows the diminutive Indian leader smiling his appreciation of the plaudits of the crowds as he landed in Folkestone. Detectives, on guard to prevent any hostile demonstration, are seen escorting him to the private automobile in which he drove to London to attend the round table conference on India. Note the skimpy native garb in which he is braving the rigors of the English climate

His head bowed in meditation, Mahatma Gandhi is seen here in an interesting photographic study made while he was being described as "the great soul" of India in a welcoming address in London. Note the striking contrast between his flowing white native robe and the formal attire of the speaker, Laurence Mousman, author and chairman of the reception committee.

MOVIE HOUSE BOOKS TAKEN

Quiet Possession of Documents to Be Used In Prosecution

Toronto, Sept. 24—Provincial and Toronto police officers, numbering over a score, twenty-five, made peaceful invasions of the offices of seven moving picture corporations yesterday afternoon and took possession of the books and papers required by the Crown in connection with the prosecutions launched against companies mentioned in the report of Commissioner Peter White, K.C., who found that 2,000,000 admissions

The officers assembled at Provincial Police Headquarters in the Parliament Buildings about 1 p.m. and were instructed by Alfred Cuttle, Assistant Commissioner, and I. W. Humphries of the Attorney-General's Department, as to the duty of executing search warrants at the seven offices. The officers in charge in each instance was given a list of the books required, after which the seven different groups left in motors for the offices designated.

There was no fuss. The officers sought the assistance of the principal officer man in each case, and the books and papers were readily handed over. The greatest interest centred in the visit to the offices of the Famous Players Corporation in the Royal Bank Building, and the Shea and Theatre offices in the Royal Bank Building. The officers were engaged for about an hour in the offices before leaving for the Parliaments Buildings again with the books and papers in their possession. The offices visited were those of the corporations mentioned in the report of Peter White, K.C.

CHURCH NAME IS UNCHANGED

C. of E. Synod Vetoes Proposal to Use "Anglican"

Toronto, Sept. 24—So that the Church may keep unbroken a traditional link with the Church in Britain, particularly now that Britain faces a time of stress, the Synod of the Church of England in Canada decided yesterday against changing its name to "the Anglican Church in Canada," but not before Provost Cosgrove of Trinity had warned that a name will have to be found in time "to distinguish the Canadian Catholic Church."

An intense discussion preceded the Synod's decision, Churchmen and lay delegates spoke passionately against the recommendation of the Anglican National Commission. They contended that such a change was a break with the Church in Britain, that it was a reflection on their own Church, that it was unnatural and no change was needed now that their own people did not want it. Only a handful of delegates indicated their approbation of the recommendation. A deep note of regret characterized the Synod's disapproval.

Bishop Seager Expressed

Bishop Seager of Ontario, Bishop Owen of Niagara, and Canon S. Gould, members of the Commission, spoke against the change. In presenting the proposal to the Synod, Bishop Seager declared "that it is time for the Church in Canada to assert its identity." He read the Commission's findings that "minds there exists a very strong feeling against changing Canada's that the name of our Church should be changed and that the present name is a serious detriment to its success and development, we recommend that the name be changed to "the Anglican Church of Canada."

He read from the 1920 Lambeth Conference's desire especially specially to point out that the term Anglican is frequently used in the sense it originally bore. The phrase "ecclesia anglicana" in mediaeval days was a purely local connotation of the ecclesiastical and doctrinal, and the Anglican communion includes not merely those who are locally associated with it in England, but many others whose faith has been grounded in the doctrines and ideals for which the Church of England has always stood."

Campers Routed Officer Injured

Cochrane, Sept. 24.—The out-of-town unemployed who have been camped there were chased out of Cochrane yesterday after a disturbance which resulted in one man who were being fed by the municipal relief officer in the relief stores supplied, and later declined to disperse at the order of police.

A half-dozen of the leaders are under arrest and charges will be laid against them after Crown Attorney Sam Caldbick, at Timmins, has been consulted and told of developments here, says Sergeant Frank Gardiner, in charge of the Provincial Police in Cochrane. The sergeant was struck on the head with a stone. There were no other casualties and the town was quiet tonight. Most of the men who had been involved in the disturbance had left Cochrane and the others are to be requested to leave, it was said.

An address and special counsellors sworn in for the purpose, composed of about fifty citizens of the town, assisted the four Provincial officers and the town police to disperse the 350 unemployed demonstrators.

This map shows the proposed route and the one actually followed by Don Moyle, and Cecil Allen on their attempted non-stop flight from Tokio to Seattle. The solid line shows the course followed. His World is Candy and He Gets it Too

"Please, Missus, I want some of those candies," said a little chap in a leading restaurant Wednesday afternoon and he pointed a grimy finger on the glass of the tall show case, in which was displayed a tempting assortment of "sweets".

"How many do you want?" piped hastily asked the wife of the proprietor, who happened to be on duty. "Just a cent's worth, Missus," answered the little fellow.

"Well, Son, I'm sorry," said the "pleasant" lady, "but those candies are 50 cents a pound and we don't sell them in any quantity for a cent—you wouldn't get many for a copper".

This boy looked disappointed and sad—he had set his heart on those candies and his face clustered for them. The "kind lady" to whom this country is a foreign land, smiled at her small would-be customer and said: "Never mind, lad, let's see, you take these few candies and run along. No, you keep the cent (as the little fellow stretched her the copper) and buy an all-day sucker."

The boy smiled a big smile and went away happy, and the thought the lady does not know that any one saw her do it.

Witchcraft Fraud Alleged By Police

San Jose, Cal., Sept. 24.—What officials declare is an extensive witchcraft racket in the Central California was uncovered yesterday with the arrest of Clara Lasalle.

Constable Larry Harris said various powders, supposedly possessing mysterious qualities, have been sold for years to superstitious working people, including their employers to thousands of dollars. Harris said fraud complaints are expected to be issued against several persons.

The powder was described as a "love potion." Others were supposed to cause the sows of an enemy to go dry, another to "sweeten the air," the ability to pass through a keyhole if sprinkled at the threshold of a dwelling.

The constable sought copies of a book containing instructions for use of the powders, which are said to have sold as high as $10 an ounce. The powders are declared to have really been made of ground herbs and vegetables. One woman was told the powder would make "graves yard dirt full of the spirits of the dead" and would make it possible for her to talk to her mother's spirit.

BRITISH ELECTION THOUGHT NEAR AT HAND

Decision on Monday by British Cabinet When Election Will be Held

Probability of Appeal to Country is More Likely

MacDONALD BACK

King George Will Return To London On Tuesday

London, Sept. 25.—(AP)—The probability of a general election next month was considerably strengthened in the minds of political observers today when Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald cut short a brief vacation and returned to London.

The Cabinet is to meet on Monday to consider whether an election will be held and The Evening Standard said it had learned that on Wednesday the dissolution of Parliament will be announced in the House of Commons preparatory to an election. At the same time it was said that the Cabinet had reached no definite decision.

The King will be back in town on Tuesday.

BISHOP OBJECTS TO EDITORIAL

Shares With Others in Synod, Horrors of Beauharnois Scandal

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 25.—(By The Canadian Press)—Denouncing conditions revealed by the Beauharnois investigation as reflecting on the political and business life of Canada, Rev. J. C. Farthing, Bishop of Montreal, at the General Synod of the Church of England today made a vigorous protest against an editorial in a Toronto paper which, he said, charged him with attempting to "pick the lie in connection."

In electing Rev. Archdeacon Scott, of Quebec, Bishop 50 years ago when the latter wished to discuss the Beauharnois matter in the Synod, Bishop Farthing said he was merely trying to bring Canon Scott back to the subject under discussion at the time—the social service report.

Since then, Bishop Farthing said he had received some thousands of communications of a very unpleasant nature and every newspaper accused him editorially he felt he should make a statement on the matter.

"I think I can share with the other members of the Synod the horror of the deeds done in connection with the scandal," said Bishop Farthing, "I would be last man to put the lid on any scandal."

London, Sept. 25 (C P Cable)—While the British West Indies are desirous of greatly increasing their trade with Canada, none of the principal units are desirous of being "governed" by Canada nor does Canada desire to "govern" them, the Lord Olivier declared in the House today in the suggestion of Sir Harry Armstrong, Governor and Commander-General at New York. The British West Indies would usefully be placed under the jurisdiction of Canada, Sir Harry's suggestion was prompted by rumors of the possible sale of the West Indies to the United States in the settlement of Britain's debts to the U. S.

Windsor, Ont., Sept. 25 (CP)—A peculiar accident took the life of a Mersea Township child yesterday. While playing near her home, Alice Voegtl, 17 months, got her head jammed in a pail of water. JAP FORCES WITHDRAWING IN MANCHURIA

Acceptance in Large Measure of League's Recommendation

CHINA PLEASED

U. S. Note Received With Gratification By Nanking

Geneva, Sept. 25. — Japanese forces in Manchuria are being withdrawn to the Liao-Hsien general settled by the requirements of the safety of Japanese residents and their property, the League of Nations Council was informed today in an official note from the Japanese Government.

The withdrawal of part of Japanese troops in Manchuria already have been withdrawn to railway zone the note said, and now are concentrated there.

Thus the Japanese Government has acceded in large measure recommendations of the League Council for withdrawal of troops it is believed, however, that Japan will resist any suggestion for the establishment of a neutral military commission to make an inquiry in Manchuria, although the note reported Japan's desire to cooperate as "profoundly desirous" of ensuring that the withdrawal should be as quickly as possible "by negotiations between the two countries."

China Pleased

Nanking, Sept. 25.—The United States' Government's note to China and Japan, suggesting restriction of further movements in Manchuria to the requirements of international law, was received by the Chinese Government with satisfaction and the resolution on the Manchurian dispute was supported by the Chinese press and Government circles with gratification today.

Nevertheless, the note from Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson at Washington as the most important development in the Sino-Japanese crisis, interpreting it as a stern rebuke to Japan.

Pressed Interests of Japan

Tokyo, Sept. 25.—(Japan Advertising Renge News Agency dispatch from Shepingkai, Manchuria)—Additional detachments of Japanese troops had proceeded today from Changchun, Manchuria, to protect Japanese interests.

The dispatch said the troops were sent to Changchun last night that to speak from Japanese residents. Chinese troops and bandits at Taonan were reported to have looted the Japanese and to have fled prior to the arrival of Japanese soldiers.

A Mukden dispatch to Renge said a report from Changchun that Japanese women and children had been killed by Chinese soldiers 100 miles west of Changchun was incorrect. Changchun police were quoted as saying the basis of the report was an attack by bandits upon a party of Japanese refugees, who escaped.

Further development of air lines in Africa is being considered by the French Government.

Dominion-Wide Strike Considered Possible

Estevan, Sask., Sept. 25.—James Sloan, Dominion President of the Miners' Union, was back on the Estevan strike field today. In a statement to the press he prophesied that unless the miner operators came to terms with the strikers there would be a Dominion-wide sympathetic strike. He said that assurances of support had been given from all parts of the country to the miners on strike in the Bienfait and Bbevan coal fields.

R. M. Campbell, chief constable officer of the Dominion in his attempts to bring about a settlement between the warring bodies having failed, left Estevan for Regina last night.

KING AGAINST NEW ELECTION

Labor Party is Said to Be Ready For Contest

London, Sept. 25 (C.P.) — The King is understood to be opposed to the movement for early dissolution of parliament and a general election. He was also on good authority to be averse to terminating the tenure of the National Government at least until it had put its economy programme into effect and restored world confidence in the pound sterling.

The King has played an influential role in politics since the financial crisis was recognized some weeks ago. He rushed back from Scotland and personally took a hand in the formation of the Emergency Co-operative Government to succeed the Labor ministry.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald returned to London today after a very brief rest at an unnamed spot in the north country. It was stressed however, the Prime Ministers return was merely incidental to his passage to Chequers, country home of Prime Ministers, where he will spend the week end.

His Majesty is regarded as having played the leading part in getting political party heads together during the critical week-end in August, which resulted in formation of the National Government to deal with the financial and economic emergency.

The decision for an immediate election started with the "backbenchers" of the Conservative party, who urge dissolution of Parliament early next month, with the National Government appealing to the people on a program of national reconstruction, and the Laborite opposition is definitely opposed, although the Labor party is declared to be ready to fight an election.

Lindbergh Received By Chinese President

Nanking, Sept. 25 (AP)—Chiang Kai-Shek, President of China, received Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh at the National Government offices here today.

INTERPRETER FOUND GUILTY

Convicted of Conspiracy With Unnamed Persons in Japan

Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 25 (C.P.) —Fred Yosky, for the past 13 years Japanese interpreter for the Canadian immigration here, was late yesterday found guilty in easter court of breach of trust and fraud. It was charged against him that he conspired with unnamed persons in Japan to land in Canada by means of Dominion naturalization and birth certificates, Japanese who could not qualify for entry to the Dominion.

Several Japanese witnesses testified how they had been able to land in Canada illegally in ten years ago, with the aid, they alleged, of the accused.

KEEP GOING LODGER TOLD

Has Been in Station For Rest Three Times in Short While

Fifteen transients sought shelter from the chilly air at the police station Thursday night and all were on their way early Friday morning with the exception of one young man, who apparently has taken a liking to this district and has on the three occasions, with a short intermission between times, asked and received lodging at the station. Transients are not supposed to make the police station their abode for more than one night—they are expected to keep going. This young man was detained this morning for similar reasons and later after being cautioned, was ordered to resume his journey to which the destination he may have in mind.

Cut Down on Middlemen Solution Seen by Gen. Smuts

Imperial Preference is Favored at Meeting of Scientists

RATIONING

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, Sept. 25—"It might not be a bad thing if agriculture had a scientific holiday," commented General Jan Smuts, President of the British Association for the advancement of science. During discussion in the agriculture section today. General Smuts referred to the presidential address to the section of the meeting of products of the soil.

General Smuts thought the great need was organization of farming so as to reach the consumer without giving too much to the host of middlemen. He expressed the opinion the Empire was so situated it was necessary to work out a system of mutual exchange and mutual rationing of produce—action for the various markets of the Empire.

Bringing about an exchange on a contract basis was a most fruitful suggestion which no one could carry out better than the Empire Marketing Board, General Smuts added. He thought many of the Empire's problems could be overcome by a system of imperial preference, but certain aspects of Empire trade required establishment of a central body, for which the Empire Marketing Board was particularly suited.

He concluded by expressing the hope the Empire Marketing Board with its representation of the Dominions, would prepare a report for rationing for Empire marketing could be carried out.

Planes Carry Swallows Over Alps to Warm Clime

Vienna, Sept. 25 (AP)—Humanitarianism in the age of aviation has been invoked today, possibly for the first time—to supplant nature in sending birds on their annual flight to warmer climes.

The Austrian Society for the protection of animals and birds has chartered a number of planes in Germany and Austria to transport the thousands of swallows which have come in from the country in the last few days.

They descended in the areas of Vienna and on farms and buildings in this industrial city, to the imminent danger of freezing or starvation. The society came to the conclusion that they would be unable to cross the Alps in their present condition.

Austrian peasants have been asked to collect the migrants and bring them into a central station where they will be placed, into wooden cases and flown to Venice where they will be liberated for the winter.

Unemployment No New Experience For World Scientists Are Informed

Cities Crowded With Idle in Europe in The Middle Ages

WORLD PLANNING

Regional Planning is Not Enough Says Mackinder

(By George Hambleton)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 25.—(Canadian Press Cable)—Scientists and philosophers from the four corners of the world are packing the meetings of the British Association for the advancement of science. Gaining dubbed professors find standing room, only, and even the discussion sections new trains of thought are startling.

Emeritus Professor Zelvin Cannan said the economics section today a stationary or declining population would not necessarily unemployment. "Unemployment," he said, "is not really a modern phenomenon. The crowds of beggars who collected their daily dole in the middle ages from the monasteries, private wayfarers and householders were perhaps as large a proportion of the population as the normal registered unemployed of today.

Redistribute Labor

"The thoughtless outsider is apt to say that both the unemployed and those still employed should accept lower wages and so, by cheapening products, increase the demand for them. As a temporary palliative this may sometimes be reasonable but it is evidently never the best solution of the difficulty.

"What diminution in demand calls for," Professor Cannan declared, "is redistribution of the labor force, fewer persons being alloted to the branch of industry of which the products are less in demand and more persons to other branches."

Sir Halford Mackinder saw in world planning the only alternative to blind conflict. Delivering the presidential address the geography section he said: "If our civilization is not to go down in blind internecine conflict we must have the development of world planning out of regional planning. But as of regional planning has come out of town planning."

Science Cannot Stop Itself

Sir John Russell in the Agricultural section suggested the modern scientific is not to blame for the farmer might be asked to halt for a time, but science could not stop itself. Science brought more bountiful harvests than we know what to do with. He declared, "With this plethora of products of science with their gifts of culture poured upon us, not merely bountifully but more widely than ever, of our farmers are likely to be subsidized by the government, people will be tempted to ask should not the scientific worker halt for" a time."

Sir John saw in the relative British backwardness the difficulty of marketing agricultural produce. 5DS knew little of it. Britain is being glanced at a bewildering display, poorly arranged, with no real interest or gave the least trouble, he said, not because she was idle but because in these days of free trade there is yet domestic help so there had been a great increase in the consumption of tinned and preserved foods.

Sir Hesketh Bell in the engineering section Sir Alfred Ewing, fulfilling a curious trust, bore witness to a prophecy which Bell had enunciated before the death of the steam engine. He declared that by 1931 it would be a matter of curiosity. Sir Alfred said he left a sum for investment from which a honorarium was to be paid in 1931 "to the gentleman selected by the engineer who would prepare a paper with the 1881 prophecy as the text.

Tomato Growers Press Their Claims

Windsor, Ont., Sept. 25 (C.P.) — Tomato growers met here to consider ways of creating a wider market for tomato juice. Differences between growers and canners were aired at the meeting.

Growers were not getting proper consideration, claimed Austin B. Smith, M.L.A., for Essex South. Whole loads of tomatoes were being rejected at the canneries, he said. Dr. Paul Poisson, Minister without Portfolio in the Ontario Government and M.L.A. for Essex North, said the growers were "up in arms" over the treatment they were receiving.

A committee was appointed to try to interest Canadian canning companies in the campaign.

BULLETIN BOARD

BUILDINGS ON PROPERTIES

A typographical error in yesterday's issue stated that "There are no buildings on the property." (The Star of the East) of the Kakadar Gold Mines Limited which have begun dewatering operations. This of course should have read "There are buildings on the property." The Northbrood property is bounded on the East by the Main street of Northbrook Village, and the company owns the largest house in the village. The Star of the East property the shaft of which now is being dewatered is equipped with modern buildings, furnace heat, including superintendent's house, and office. Large boarding house which will accommodate up to fifty men. Several houses, ice house, horse stables, blacksmith shop, shaft house and other buildings.

USING OVERHEAD BRIDGE

Once again motorists are using the old Smithfield bridge, at least for a time until the paving on the approaches to the newly constructed steel-cement bridge is completed. The company in charge of the paving proposition have the northern half of the road on the eastern approach done and have commenced work on the other side of the bridge. Motorists have to skirt this section of the highway by taking the old turn down the gravel road and crossing the old wooden structure to come out upon the highway again at the end of the gravel. A cement sprayer has been brought to the scene of operations which facilitates large stretches of paving being done each day.

PROGRESS BEING SHOWN

Excellent progress is being shown in the first stage of the work at the Barracks on the south side of the highway opposite to No. 1 Hangar at the Air Training Base near Trenton. Mr. R. Wilkinson, superintendent of the work for the Quinte Construction Company who have the contract for the work, informed the newspaperman that there were between fifty and sixty men engaged in the work of digging the foundation. Forms are now being placed in preparation for the pouring of the foundation. When finished this building will be one hundred and ninety-five feet long by seventy feet wide. Fifteen or sixteen men are also employed at A3 Hangar, or what is known to the public as No. 2 Hangar, and this will be funished along to completion long before the snow flies. This work commenced on Tuesday with plumbing and heating apparatus being installed, painting and glazing, stuccoing and plastering being done. A gasoline pump is also being placed in position.

We live me, dear Mr. Reid,

BICYCLE IS RETURNED

The motive of fear of being charged with the consequent publicity, sometimes causes offenders to relent and desire to make restitution. In this instance, it cannot be said how much the offender or person who made a mistake, relented, but, in any event, restoration was made and Aubrey Registon, 172 West Moira Street, is again in possession of his bicycle which was stolen Wednesday night from near the corner of West Bridge Street and Everett Street. The wheel was found in front of his home this Friday morning where it had been left by someone with or without a guilty conscience, during the night.

CAR BADLY DAMAGED

Two cars were badly smashed up in a collision in front of Earl Eggenser's residence on the Bloomfield Road, Tuesday afternoon, when a Chrysler coupe driven by Mr. Rosa of the North American Life Insurance Co. Belleville, crashed into a Chevrolet sedan owned by Mr. Willis Pettigrew of Wellington. Occupants of both cars escaped uninjured. The accident happened as the two cars were about to pass. Parked cars on both sides of the highway at the point made the road very narrow and in the attempt to pass the front fender of the big Chrysler caught the fender of Mr. Pettigrew's car, side-swiping it from end to end and ripping off fenders and running board. Both rear wheels were completely smashed off the lighter Chevrolet and it turned over in the road. The Chrysler was considerably damaged in front, both headlights being broken and fenders smashed. Both cars were towed into McGinnis' garage for repairs.

IMPOSED HEAVY SENTENCE

William Dellne, who has been working around Trenton, Belleville, Stirling and other points, was arraigned before Magistrate T. A. O'Rourke in police court Wednesday morning to answer to a charge of making a false document by altering a genuine document, i.e., a cheque on the Bank of Toronto for $1.50 by adding the figure "0" to make $11.50. Dellne elected to be tried before the magistrate and was sentenced to serve two years less one day in the Reformatory at Guelph. It appears that Dellne appeared on a similar charge a few months ago when he had partly served "Why did you not tell the magistrate, Dellne asked the lady he spoke to, when he made the money." "We all do," replied Crown Attorney Fitzgerald, "but we don't use those methods of obtaining it."

DR. G. H. STOBIE BECOMES MEMBER OF ROYAL COLLEGE

Belleville Doctor Honored By R.C.S. of Canada

HIS CAREER

To George Herbert Stobie, M.D., F.R.C.S., has come one of the highest honours that can be paid a doctor in the Dominion of Canada. He was recently informed that he has been elected to that august body, the Royal College of Surgeons of Canada, and will be able to add the title "F.R.C.S." to his name. "Fellow the Royal College of Surgeons" may mean little to the average man in the street but to a surgeon, it is the epitome of all his desires; it is, in brief, the final stamp of approval of Canada's greatest physicians and surgeons, that is considered to grant the surgery of every nature.

Dr. Stobie, who is one of the most distinguished medical men in this section of Ontario, bears an enviable medical reputation throughout the province. A specialist in surgery, and more particularly abdominal surgery his clientele extends hundreds of miles in every direction.

Dr. Stobie is the first medical man in Belleville, in fact in this district, to gain this honor and none will deny the merit of the award. Dr. Stobie is a son of the late Jas. Stobie and Mrs. Stobie. He was born in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, and is a graduate of the University of Toronto. It was in 1916, that George Herbert Stobie was graduated and he left immediately thereafter for France, where he served his country in two capacities. He was first attached as Surgeon to the No. 3 McGill General Hospital, France, and also saw active service with the 2nd Brigade Heavy Artillery. He was not immediately demobilized after the war but was one of the army of occupation of Germany.

Ten years ago this month Dr. Stobie opened his office in Belleville and since then has endeared himself as physician and friend to the people of the community.

With him he brought a splendid reputation, for he had been associated with the famed Mayo clinic, in Rochester, Minnesota, previous at that highest seat of medical learning in America, for two years 1919 and 1920. He is a member of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce and has the interests of the city at heart. He intends, despite the honor that has been conferred upon him, to continue practice here and Belleville will not generally known, turned down some time ago a most attractive offer to associate himself with McGill University.

The Ontario Intelligencer joins with Dr. Stobie's many friends and medical associates in congratulating him upon the honour that he has earned.

Two new islands have appeared in the Southern Atlantic Ocean, near Brazil.

Letters to the Editor

ONE MAN ONLY JOB

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

I was present as the band concert given by St. Stiles A.M. on Wednesday evening, and enjoyed it immensely.

I have a grievance though, and observed one man doing two men's work.

The man that played the tragedy, if I think that's what they call it, maybe it was a kettle drum (was something to do with making an anvil chorus) and also played the cymbols (cymbals) as well. (Is that the way to spell it Mr. Editor) Anyway it's those things like two cymbals together.

Suffering steam shovels! Why doesn't our City Council get after the band and insist on One Man One Job?

Then there were those who forgot to play. Surely they had rifle-shot several weeks ago and came in nearly an hour late disturbing those who were enjoying the music. Why not get it done by wonderful evening wasn't it?

Yours truly,
Interested.

DOG IS TIED UNDER BRUSH

Whines of Animal Finally Reveal Its Whereabouts

The distressed crying and mournful barking of a dog for several days puzzled residents on Queen Street. Judging from the volume of the sound sent forth it was, without a doubt, a puppy that was in trouble, but where the dog was could not be found. Finally, hidden under a pile of brush on a vacant lot, the dog was located. It proved to be a fox terrier about five months old and was securely tied by a stout piece of about six inches long.

Thomas Thorn, the city officer in charge of neglected and stray dogs, was informed and he succeeded after making many inquiries in learning that the dog belonged to Mrs. Alex Dalrymple, Hamilton Road, and the puppy was today returned to its anxious owner. The dog has been missing for three days. The affair is being investigated in an endeavor to find the person guilty of inflicting such cruelty upon an innocent puppy.

MAN WITH 16 CENTS BIDS $25,000 FOR TWO BULLOCKS

Farmers Rout Animals Which Flee Over Marshes

SALE CALLED OFF

London, Sept. 25 (C.P. Cable) — Two more "Uribe" sales have been accompanied by lively scenes. A bucket of mud was thrown at the auctioneer at Ilford near Canterbury today.

Police cordons were broken and there were hand-to-hand fights. The working stock of a small landholder was being sold to meet payments of £100. The purchaser announced he intended to return the goods to the owner.

Near Hastings bidding for two bullocks started at 25 cents, then jumped to £100. The figure finally reached £25,000 and the bidder confessed he had only 16 cents. The farmers then pressed forward with sticks toward the bullocks, which dashed from the ring scattering bidders, auctioneer and police. The bullocks disappeared over the distant marshes pursued by police who failed to recapture them.

The sale was declared off.

Farmers have a deep-rooted aversion to paying the tithes, a relic of the old days. In years gone by the tithes were paid to the church but the remnants are largely in the hands of corporations or investors.

MARRIED WOMEN TEACHER ISSUE

Not Council But Board of Education Has Powers

Complaints have been coming to Mayor Reid over the employment of married women as members of the teaching staff of the city public schools. On receipt of one received today, he made the following statement to the press:

"There are no married women engaged at the city hall or in the employment of the corporation and so far as the mayor and city council are concerned they have nothing to do with the question of the employment of married women teachers. This is a matter entirely in the hands of the Board of Education."

HYDRANTS ON RIVER'S BANK

Official of Underwriters Discusses Matter in Letter

Fire underwriters are interested in the replacement proposal which is under discussion at present. The letter from which the body views the situation is expressed in the following letter from Mayor Reid received today:—

Canada Fire Underwriters Association, Toronto, Sept. 24, 1931.

George A. Reid,
Mayor,
Belleville, Ont.
Dear Sir:

"With reference to our conversation yesterday on the improvements in the Belleville waterworks system proposed by the city, and more particularly to the suggested construction of a roadway along the east side of the Moira River from Bridge Street north towards the upper bridge, and the laying of a water main along the roadway with hydrants connected to it, I might say that in the reports on the city that have been issued to us from time to time you will find recommendations that hydrants be installed in this locality for the better protection of the property of the mercantile buildings on the west side of Front Street.

"If a roadway such as is suggested were constructed it would not only facilitate the installation of these hydrants, but it would accomplish two other objects—the removal of a number of undesirable frame structures, with a general cleaning up of this riverside area and the provision of better facilities for the fire department apparatus to reach the rear of the buildings on Front Street, in the event of fire.

"These advantages are quite apparent and I have no doubt the civic authorities will give their favorable consideration to the proposal.

"Yours truly,
(Sgd.) "R. Arnpold Jones,
"Assistant Secretary."

Obituary

LATE MRS. HANNAH ISABEL WARREN

The funeral of the late Mrs. Hannah Isabel Warren took place from her late residence, 214 Church St., this morning at 10.15 a.m.

Rev. Robert Hall, of John Street Church, conducted the service. The many beautiful floral offerings only went to show the high esteem in which the deceased was held in the community.

The bearers were Arthur McGie, R. Cooper, Robt. Gardner, H. Aylesworth, H. Saunders of Belleville and Thos. McRae of Montreal.

The body was shipped to Montreal on the 11.30 a.m. train for interment in Mount Royal Cemetery in that city.

ANDREW McCREARY

An old and respected citizen passed away last evening at the home of his son, William McCreary, 122 Bridge Street East, in the person of Andrew McCreary. Mr. McCreary was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McCreary and was born in Belleville 73 years ago.

He was for years a valued member of the old Grand Trunk Railway Company in whose employ he served for many years as conductor. Mr. McCreary was conductor on the old local train which for years ran from Belleville to Toronto. After a number of years of faithful service, he was superannuated from his work that he had so well carried out. He has been living in retirement for a number of years and his many friends will feel the loss of a good friend and neighbor.

Mr. McCreary was a member of Eureka Lodge, 382, A.F. and A.M., Mizpah Lodge, I.O.O.F., and also was a staunch Conservative in his political following. His wife preceded his death some six years ago.

Mr. McCreary is survived by one son, Harry, the first boy, last in life at the time, while Wesley died after the war from the result of injuries and disabilities received while on active service. He leaves to mourn his loss two sons, Wm. R. and Dr. S. R. McCreary, both of this city.

Mr. McCreary was a member of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, in which he took an active interest in years past. His many friends will sadly mourn his passing.

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 40. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

The sailors also saw that smoke. The ship came about and headed for land. There was a great scurrying about on deck. A boat was lowered; in it a great chest was placed. Men bent to the oars; silently rapidly to the very point where Tarzan crouched, hidden in a tree.

Beaching the boat, the men lifted out the great chest. They argued angrily—they quarrelled, and a sailor buried his pick in the brain of the rat-faced man. Digging a deep trench they buried the treasure with the corpse, obliterating all signs. Then they pulled rapidly back to the Arrow.

The smoke on the horizon increased, and the sailors lost no time in getting under full sail. Tarzan, an interested spectator, sat speculating on the strange actions. He wondered what the chest contained. Dropping to the ground, he found a spade and began digging until he uncovered the body.

He dragged it from the grave, then unearthed the chest, replacing the body and the earth. Four sailor-ships crowded beneath the burden of that chest. Tarzan of the Apes picked it up easily and carried it into the densest part of the jungle. He traveled for several hours.

His brain told him the chest contained valuables. He desired to open it, but the iron lock and bands baffled even his strength. So he buried it. Darkness settled before he was back in the native vicinity. Astonished, he saw the interior of the cabin appear as bright as day.

"TOO OLD TO BOTHER WITH"

"Too old for people to bother with"! Ingratitude more strong than traitors' arms quite overcame him.

He was a transient in his seventies and he was eating the food of the kind-hearted police officers who had shared their bit with him in Belleville station. He was a type which has got out of step with the rest of the world or the world has just left him by himself.

There is no moment more tragic in life, no emotion more depressing than to feel that nobody cares. But this man did have friends in the police officers, who expect no reward but the man's satisfaction in getting a portion of a square meal.

Here was a human being between earth and heaven in a world crowded with human beings, his own brothers in creation —and yet he felt so lonely in the midst of plenty of men.

Perhaps he may have been in part responsible for men it seems do not feel life forever existing others if they do not get along but it is more likely that ill-fate dogged him either in circumstances of his birth or his surroundings or in his inability to clinch with them and seize the secret of life. Only thing is certain—this man is out of step with the rest of his human brothers, who should think a little more of him.

So often in life it is those who are not obliged to do so, who take the lonely man in and treated him Samaritan-like.

The story is as old as creation or at least as the first organized society, when men did not know all about one another, when there were too many men in the world to take a kindly notice in every one else.

EVERY DEBT HAS ITS PAYMENT

"Ultimately every debt is paid, though sometimes at the expense of individuals far removed from the original loan."

This statement was made by Benjamin Baker, editor of the Annalist, in an address on phases of the present depression at Bolton, N. Y. Somebody pays for the present slump and for every debt that is ever contracted. If the person who creates the debt does not pay it, he leaves to others to meet the obligation.

This should explain why the world is not simply jumping out of its boots in recovery. It cannot quite suddenly for the debt has to be paid.

Mr. Saker says that the United States had for three or four years before 1920 persistently outraged the most elementary principles of economics and sound business practice and that its present difficulties were in large measure the punitive consequences of its own transgressions.

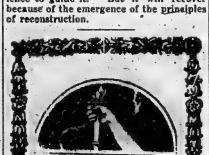
For restoration to proceed steadily and to endure properly, it is necessary, however, that it be built up on sound principles, and by that means be kept as far as possible from planting in itself the seeds of its own destruction, he said. To secure that stability, it was necessary for every one, consumer as well as business man, to keep always in mind certain simple principles which recently had been almost wholly disregarded such as this:

That all that is borrowed must be repaid—if not by the direct borrower then perhaps by the depositors or stockholders of embarrassed or actually insolvent banks in the U. S.

The entire business of the country was an aggregate of individual situations, and if each of them was adequately managed, safety would follow. Complete success could not be attained and some individual would always prefer dangerous risks to less exciting safety, but a moderate proportion of collapses could be absorbed.

Three years ago, though a great proportion of individual situations were unsound, there seemed to be a general belief that the aggregate could survive in spite of the instability of its elements. This was peculiarly gross economic fallacy, and one that should be excluded as far as possible from the management of the next business upturn.

It should be of some aid in gaining an holding a realistic attitude to recognize that most of the established "laws" of economics were not restrictions imposed on mankind as it were from the outside, like the laws of gravitation, but statements of the uniform reactions of human beings in the mass to changing economic conditions.



In this view, economic "laws" were not only natural laws, but the decrees of human nature itself. Such economic laws as need to be understood for the safe shaping of business recovery were not remote, not really difficult to grasp, if approached along the clues of each man's business instincts.

The greatest, and also the simplest, guidance in a sound reconstruction comes from a frank adoption of a comparatively few simple and familiar principles, and resolute adherence to them—stiffly keeping away from the new evident errors of the last boom time and as stiffly rejecting the long discredited patent cures that are now being urged by some who should be wiser.

Finally, in a period of so much depression, the many individuals who had so far escaped distressing reverses, might well consider that devotion to the general safety in which marks so strikingly the response of the English to the present economic crisis in England.

Most people will agree that Mr. Baker is right.

The world is sick and there is no outside physician; it has only human experience to guide it. But it will recover because of the emergence of the principles of reconstruction.

THE RING

By Alice Michaelis

A golden circlet vying
With gold of sun,
A narrow band denying
That love is done.

She wrote: "The dream is over,
Too sweet to last."
His heart, that was a rover,
Love now chains fast.

He sits, past hours reviewing,
And in his hand,
Dear memories renewing,
A slim gold band.

Love swiftly flies, a nimble
And winged elf;
Ah, can it be love's symbol
Outlasts Love's self?

The dream that dies is never
The love that hearts can trust,
For love lives on forever,
Though gold may fall to dust.

As Ted is a baseball expert this will be good news to the fans who have suffered in the past from flamboyant announcers who churned up the air considerable but knew little about the game. BUT I WANTED TO SEE PAVLOVA.

From the day that I cut her out
Of a colorful magazine cover,
(I was naughty and shot in the stile)
I wanted to see Pavlova.

The Queen came from London town
To visit the folk of Dover.
They took me to see the Queen.
But I wanted to see Pavlova.

I was glad to see the Queen,
But I never quite got over
The hunger I felt when I looked
At the thumbed old magazine cover

Although I had only seen
Her portrait I was her lover.
They took me to see the Queen,
And I wanted to see Pavlova.

WHAT IS TO COME.

What abandonment of the gold standard for six months may do in face of this situation remains to be seen. Reasonable thought is sharply divided on the issue of inflation, and it does not seem valid for practical men of affairs to side arbitrarily with either academic faction. What is clear, already, however, is that the rest of the world has faith in Britain's ability to pull through. Re-opened European stock exchanges yesterday were strong in tone; and the situation was so far clarified in London that the stock exchange there has reopened. Panic has been averted; and the problem now is chiefly an administrative one for the National Government. It concerns effective control of measures initiated to correct underlying conditions.

It was reported yesterday that Chancellor of the Exchequer Snowden's proposed world conference on gold was appreciably closer than on Monday. Such a gathering, no matter who the conferees may be, would be in fact a world trade conference, inasmuch as the major purpose of altering the mechanism of gold movement is to alter beneficially the mechanism of goods movements. And this latter is the Alpha and Omega of the world depression.

If any kind of a world conference can send more cargo-laden bottoms on their way across the world's oceans, by all means hasten the parley. For all intermediate steps, including recent developments at Westminster, are mere provisional palliatives administered, pending a proper cure. And the only cure for this depression is ships, and more ships, sunk to their Plimsoll lines with goods, passing each other in Ocean Ave deserted ocean lanes. —Mail and Empire Toronto.

THE WHALE GETS A REPRIEVE

It seems probable that a combination of economic and humanitarian reasons will operate in the near future to preserve the whale from extinction. It was the Norwegian whaling companies that first took the decision not to hunt during the coming season, and it is likely that their example will be followed in other countries.

This respite has been taken as a result of the recent heavy slump in whale oil prices. For the first time in records, there has been a serious overproduction of whale oil, so serious indeed that, even at the beginning of the present season, the surplus accumulation of oil was 1,000,000 barrels. When the season opened, the price that it was estimated whale oil would realize was $130 a ton; the price t has actually fetched has been between $53 and $70 a ton; the price it has actually fetch whale oil was 70,000 barrels, and even in 1925 it attained only 700,000 barrels. In 1930 it amounted to the phenomenal quantity of 4,200,000 barrels.

Short-view economics, therefore, indicate the desirability of calling a temporary halt in the whaling business. Long-view economics give the same counsel. For the whale is in serious danger of extinction. The other day a well-known naturalist said that unless steps are taken to prevent it, the whale will have vanished from the oceans of the world in the space of three or four years.

Both humanitarian and economic reasons unite in demanding a slackening in the pace at which the whale is being hunted.—Christian Science Monitor.

LOVE LAUGHS AT TELEPHONE TOLLS

Hospital days were lonely. Of course, her friends did all they could to keep her cheerful — her room was a bower of roses — but how she looked forward to evening when Jack could sit by her and talk of his day at the office.

Then came the news that he must leave town on business. She wondered how she could stand the wait until he came home. But Jack, wise fellow, knew how to bridge the gap. Promptly each evening at nine he called her over Long Distance and told her all the things she wished to hear.

Extravagant? . . . not a bit . . . for night rates are always inexpensive! What could be worth more for what it cost?

Evening rates (7.00 p.m. to 8.30 p.m. local time) are considerably lower than day rates on "anyone" calls. "Night rates" (8.30 p.m. to 4.30 a.m.) are lower still.

Fashion Flashes

By Alice Alden

A college degree of smartness should not be difficult to attain this season, what with the lovely woollen frocks for day, and satin for evening. Something different for the college dances would be a red satin evening frock cut on slanting bias and worn with a short bolero to match with huge sleeves lined with cream satin.

Go out and wear a black wool suit for chic. A new model features a softly crushed large cowl collar, that buttons at the side of the long jacket, a skirt with a slight flare and a white crepe blouse.

Exceedingly nice and kind to maturity are the new fashions. Ideal for a middleaged woman, yet very new and smart, is a frock of black canton crepe with a cream satin yoke with surplice closing that ties in the back. The sleeves widen at the cuff and are lined with the white satin.

A difficult task is to beat the charm and chic of black velvet, with touches of white. Lovely for afternoon wear is a black velvet frock with deep points of white muscadine de aole at neck and wrists. There is a wide belt of white kid.

Right back of the frock is usually the place at which the interest of the evening is centred. A new model of black taffeta with black satin collar and cuffs is notable for the fulness of the skirt gathered in a ruffle-like effect at the back and emphasized by a large pin of brilliants and the stones. The bodice has the long revers in front.

New yet old are many of the frocks. Reminiscent of othre days is a frock in black canton silk crepe. It has a frill of soft white lace at the neck, puffed sleeves, a shirred bodice and little flat frills terminating up in back and tie in a flat bow.

A stitch in time can make a frock, since stitched detail has become so important on the in-between season frock. A new model of rose beige crepe de chine has stitched seams at the sleeves and the shoulders, while the pleats of the skirt are also stitched. There are navy buckles at the waist and neck.

It need not be feathers to trim the hat. There are other effective mediums. For instance a black felt has a modified trioreme with a crushed brim has a veil of Spanish lace that falls to the shoulder arranged at the lifted side of the model.

Turn the table this season and wear a bright coat over a dark frock. Just the reverse of last season's mode. Thus we find, worn over a dark dress, a bright green broadcloth coat with a knee-length border, long collar and tabs of fur of black astrakan.

A clever disguise is being given many lace frocks. Thus an evening dress of white lace has the lame by the addition of all-over embroidery in heavy metal thread. A shaped sird" ing the illusion.

Still clinging on to the nicest figures is the wearing of soft, softly clinging chiffon. A new frock uses black chiffon and has a band kerchief-like drapery at the neckline, formed of black and gold sequins. There is a gold coin belt and a chiffon bolero.

New tricks for the seal are the order of the day since seal trimming plays such a part in the new mode. A new autumn model is developed in bright red woollen and has bands of seal at the border and cuffs of Alaska seal. The big seal collar buttons on the shoulders.

Dance away the hours in a new dance and party frock of white satin vamp and quarter inlays of silver sequin pouch of white satin. There is a silver kid heel, an open shank and a silver kid strap with rhinestone buckle.

Little White Lies

by Jasper B. Sinclair

He looked at the number on the door, again at the clipped newspaper advertisement in his hand and then knocked.

When the door swung wide, Dave Worth raised his hat respectfully to the slim girl who faced him from within. In that first glance he caught the sheen of her black hair, a pair of quiet, but provocative eyes, and lips that he was sure could produce the loveliest laugh.

"Pardon me, miss, but did you place this ad in the paper?" he asked, holding the clipping out for her inspection.

"Yes, I did," replied the girl. "You didn't find it, did you?" she asked breathlessly.

Dave nodded gravely. "I believe I've," he smiled, "if you can identify" he smiled, "if you can identify."

"Oh!" exclaimed the girl. "Really I've no means of identifying them, beyond the fact that they were two five dollar bills! If you mean, do I know their numbers—"

"No, I guess that's hardly necessary," and Dave Worth laughed again. "None of us can hold onto five dollar bills long enough to get acquainted with their numbers!"

His fingers searched his lower vest pocket, then he held out two crumpled bills to the girl.

"Oh! How can I ever thank you, she exclaimed. "I didn't think there was much chance of recovering them. she confessed. "It could only be by the merest chance that you—found them. Honestly, each person would find them," she intended to continued.

Dave shrugged. "Most people are honest," he said. "I think a dishonest person would have returned them to you."

And the stern young girl standing in the doorway had the grace to blush at the inflection on those last two words. She was not, Dave thought, more than twenty-two or three, possibly less. And she was undeniably pretty.

"I wonder," she began, "if by any chance she would——"

"You don't know me, on earth I can ever thank you for this," she was saying.

"It isn't necessary, at all," Dave said slowly. Then he added impulsively: "Unless sometime you would care to go to a show with me, would you?"

He stammered as he said it, realizing that he was taking an unfair advantage of the girl in return for his good deed.

"I would like to" she admitted frankly, her eyes brightening at the offer. "Sometime soon?"

"The sooner the better." Dave went on recklessly. "You see—"

Then he broke off abruptly. No use telling this girl how lonesome he was. Then he had longed for companionship ever since coming to San Francisco.

"Would tomorrow night do?"

"You bet it would! I'll call for you about eight?"

"That's fine! I'll be ready and waiting," she stepped, her voice trailing to a whisper.

"What is it?" he asked quickly.

"I just remembered," she confessed, "that we don't even know each other's names yet! Isn't it customary to?"

"I think we can forego conventions……under the circumstances" Dave chuckled. "Call me Worth."

"And mine is Perry Ransome," she told him.

Tomorrow night at eight then, Miss Ransome!" he repeated gravely. Dave laughed together, although sharing some inward secret.

That first date was merely the forerunner of many others. Nights when they sat together in movies, or walked out toward the beach. Nights in which they grew to know each other very well.

Peggy's story was much the same as Dave's. Both had been lonesome in the city, both had yearned for friends, regretting the fact that it was not always easy to make friends in a city.

So both had determined long since that they were no longer lonely. Their friendship quickly turned to romance, as it will when youth meets youth.

It was the night Dave had graveled at her ring on Peggy's finger. Thereafter they had sat in silence for a few moments, awed by their sudden happiness following so closely on their former loneliness.

It was Peggy who broke the silence, flushing slightly as she spoke

"There is something I want to confess to you, Dave," she whisper ed shyly. "Something that has been troubling me ever since——ever since——"

She paused, seeming to grope for words to express herself.

Dave laughed gently there is nothing that could trouble you, Peggy! And as for confessions——" He shrugged, seemingly not interested in the revelation of feminine secrets.

"But you must know, Dave," she whispered, "I——I isn't right that I should go on until I do tell you."

Dave straightened a bit at that. He was sitting quite close to her, and she could feel his arm stiffen imperceptibly.

"It's a little fib that I've been living ever since I met you, Dave. A little white lie perhaps, but it simply must tell you!"

"You're not going to tell me you're an heiress working in a department store?" he laughed.

"Hardly that!" Her laugh was shaky. When she saw the gathering frown on his face, she hesitated about continuing. Then:

"You see, Dave, ever since I came to San Francisco I've been awfully lonesome until—until I met you. Every night I used to wish that I might meet someone. Someone I could like real well. Then I struck upon an idea. I put that ad in the paper. But Dave, I didn't really lose any money at all! I simply thought that I might meet someone that way."

She waited fearfully then, wondering what his reaction would be. And as he stared straight ahead for a full minute, her heart dropped within her.

Then suddenly he laughed aloud, and turning to face her, drew her closer to him.

"You don't mind so much, do you, dear?" she whispered. "It was only a little white lie, and I was anxious to meet someone like you."

"Mind!" he echoed. "Hardly, when yours was not the only little white lie. I was just as lonesome as you are, dear. I didn't find any money either!"

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beekman

A Question of Standards

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

Is a girl who had a High School education and two years at another school any higher than a girl who went only to the seventh grade?

Here is the story: A Mother had five children, the oldest sixteen years of age and the youngest eleven months. The father who killed outright under a fall of rock. The boy sought work at once of the collieries, one girl at the silk mill and the other girl as a doctile.

The youngest girl is now fourteen years old and in Junior High School and she is now taking a course.

On the other side—a mother has three children, one a school teacher; one a nurse and one going to school. The father has been very fortunate and has had steady work for years.

Is this family any better, or on a higher standard, than those unfortunate people who have to be able to continue their schooling?

Mrs. H.

Indeed, most emphatically, the answer is—no, of course the family in question is better circumstances. All you need to do is to look girls with their vision and you will see innumerable examples of people who have triumphed over circumstances that seemed unconquerable. And, as you read history and especially biographies, you will see that most of the greatest of the world and many of the great religious and spiritual leaders of history have been poor men men who had many things to overcome, usually including poverty.

I know that it is a difficult fact to swallow always, but true it is, if we will admit it, that the thing that defeats us, to most cases, is the way we think about ourselves and what we wish to do, to accomplish, and to make your last sentence, it is the "higher standard," that counts, and not the outward circumstances. You, yourself, knowing both families evidently, can answer the question as to which has the higher standard.

"Hitch your wagon to a star," this is the motto, to keep one's intastingly steered starward. Don't grieve that it isn't a Rolls Royce. Be kind. Keep your mouth sweet and thoughtful. Keep shining your ideals of your daily work.

Help fate to help you. And this is the pretty good recipe for a "high standard." Don't spend energy discovering other people or deploring your own circumstances — spend that good energy constructively.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Pollett

Dressing the complexion takes time. The basic style of make-up is a back number. Smears of paint, blobs of powder, lips so high by veneered that they dominate the facescape belong to a period that is past, if they ever belonged at all. The trick is to powder lightly, apply rouge deftly and simply, then to powder again, forming a comfortable sandwich, as it were. A touch of rouge on the eyelids and cheekbones, but no cosmetic blush on the chin unless it is too prominent and needs to be shadowed to become girlish. It's purpose is to make the complexion look fresh and velvety.

Dark workers who seldom get enough exercise out of doors and who are liable to be pale on the cheekbone spread should eat sparingly of proteins—meats, cheese, beans, etc. They need plenty of vegetables and green salads to begin the day with a full glass of orange juice is a wise habit; milk with luncheon helps form a balanced diet. Hasty eating at lunch time brings on that four-o'clock fatigue and it isn't any help in the business of preserving the pinkest complexion.

Soap and warm water are necessary if the skin is to be free of blackheads. Soap dries them, and pimples are not likely to develop. There should be a thorough scrubbing at night, the soap rinsed in with the finger tips until the skin surface is thickly covered with rich lather. Casual face washing is not enough. Rinse with warm water, then with cold, dry gently with an old soft towel, and flick on powdered boracic acid.

Once or twice a day the lungs need a thorough ventilation. Breathe them deep when fresh air comes pouring in, chasing stale air out. Brings bloom to cheeks, puts glints and glitters in the soul and—best of all—exercise and restful sleep are requisites of good looks and vitality.

Roll a double chin into one; it is a double pad. Anoint with a heavy cream, pick up the flesh with thumb and finger and squeeze.

Today's Verse

HARD SENSE

She kept a little moon
Under a bell-jar;
Hoarded a little tune
Too sad to utter.

Cherished a windy sky
Secret and holy;
Treasured the way birds fly.
Solemnly, wholly.

Parson at last is glad,
Old wives are grinning;
Word to her neighbour's lad,
Bet her to spinning.

Flax on the busy loom,
Children to cherish,
So the narrow room
Folly will perish.

Here is a silver spoon
Here is a copper kettle,
For hey who thought the moon
Made the clearer metal.

MRS. COLLING WILL TESTIFY

Will Appear at Inquest of Husband Who Was Murdered

Huntington, N.Y., Sept. 25 — The young widow of Benjamin Collings was called across Long Island Sound today from her home in Stamford, Conn., to tell what she knows of her husband's murder.

The town, which has been pointing to today's inquest session for a week, was early astir. A slaying as bewildering as that sixteen days ago aboard the little cruiser Penguin, doesn't happen very often hereabouts.

The fact that Mrs. Collings herself was to testify before Dr. Wm. B. Gibson, the coroner, and face the questioning of District Attorney Dyas, whetted the townsfolks' excitement. The people wanted to see this slender, cultured daughter of New England. They wanted to hear from her lips the story of the two men, who battered her, bumbed over the head, trussed him hand and foot, threw him overboard into the Sound and made her their prisoner, saddled her away in a motor, attached her and then, after a night of piracy of kidnapping and of murder, left her on another boat.

Already Mrs. Collings has told her story half a dozen times to police, to District Attorneys, to her lawyers and finally to Felix Di Martini, private investigator. Truly was he the first first hand reporter for her to submit to public questioning.

Barbara Collings, who was aboard the Penguin when her father was murdered and her mother kidnapped, was not questioned today, but may be put on the stand tomorrow.

KING OPPOSED TO ELECTION

London, Sept. 25 (C.P.)— While some quarters of Great Britain were asking for a general election in October, it was understood yesterday from supposedly reliable sources that the King was opposed to the suggestion.

England has a save-the-country drive.

ATTACK RULES NOW IN FORCE

Member of Commission Hands Out Suggestion For Future

New York, N.Y., Sept. 25 — Charles F. Chapman of New York has called for a new deal in the regulations governing competition for the Harmsworth speedboat trophy.

A member of the Harmsworth International Commission, Chapman attacked the present rules on the grounds that they were antiquated and at the same time suggested four major changes in the regulations.

Chapman would provide for a paced start, the boats to approach the starting line abreast and at least 300 feet apart; lengthen the course from five to ten miles; provide that it be laid open but protected water in favor of straight runs of at least three miles between turning buoys; and limit each competing nation to one boat.

Such rules, he maintained, would have prevented the record fiasco at Detroit, when Gar Wood and Kaye Don crossed the starting line ahead of time and were disqualified. Don't bend later suggested as it attempted to take the first turn.

Chapman's recommendations, which he believes would provide for a truer test of speed and safety, are for the contestants, will be presented formally to the International Commission when it meets in England shortly. Both Wood and Don have been informed of the suggested changes and have approved of all but their major phase, Chapman adds.

Coal Strike May Be General if No Settlement

Sydney, N.S., Sept. 25 — Unless the executive of the United Mine Workers of District 26 have negotiated with the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, and secured a settlement of the Florence strike by 10 o'clock Saturday morning, the Florence local will call on every other local union in the district to support them in a general strike. This was the decision reached by 960 strikers at Florence this morning.

Believe it or not — A new game key in Tennessee permits women to hunt and fish without a license, but they had serve for ministers and crows.

The sporting fans of this community are afforded the opportunity of seeing Stanley Shields, the Pueblo Lion, in action tonight and tomorrow at the Belle Theatre. Shields and Cal Gunnerson engaged in a wrestling bout just previous to Stanley's death and this event was filmed by the Pathe News people. Sonnenberg is known as the "wrestling demon" and it was he who first introduced the so-called "flying tackle" into the wrestling game. Sonnenberg got the idea from his previous experience in football. In the bout between Shields and Sonnenberg no holds were barred so that Shields was no exactly how rough the wrestlers can be.

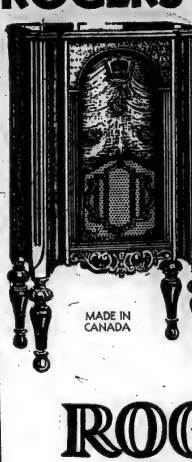
Coach "Lou" Shields had both the junior and the senior football teams of the B.C.I. out to practice at the old Ontario Field at the corner of Bridge Street and Bloomfield Avenue last evening. Both squads went through an hour and a half scrimmage practice and then the kicking half backs had punting practice for a few minutes. Coach Shiels seems satisfied that the boys will be in fair shape for their opening games on Saturday afternoon. The games this year will be played at the old Fair Grounds.

The European countries are feeling the depression to the extent that they have asked the United States to postpone the Olympic games that are scheduled for 1932. Sweden calculate that their athletes expenses will run as high as $200,000.00 and other countries similar amounts according to the number of contestants that attend the games. United States may assist the European countries by bearing part of their expenses. This revenue would be supplied through the gate receipts. However, in any event only the best athletes will be sent to America next year.

Kingston baseball club had their annual meeting this week and found that they finished "in the red" about $400.00. Peterboro are having their annual meeting next week. They also expect is find themselves out money as when the Belleville Maritimers were defeated that all teams will have operated at a loss this season. When the local executive will meet, it is not been definitely but something should be done to the series. The O.B.A.A. ball is to be played in Belleville next year. (?)

The second game of the Belleville and District softball play-offs will be played at Canniffton on Saturday afternoon. Hoosiers won the first battle for the crown of 9 to 3, but the Canniffton lads feel assured that they can take the "number boys" in the second game.

The world's series starts one week from yesterday. The first two games will be played in St. Louis on Wednesday and Friday, the teams will travel on Saturday and as baseball is prohibited on Sunday in the state of Pennsylvania the next two will be played, but, the series will be resumed on Monday and Tuesday at Philadelphia. Neither manager has openly made any predictions as yet but both feel assured that their team is the team to beat in the series.



The Gibbard Athletics left by motor for Rodney early this morning. The boys were in high spirits and feel that they have a very good chance to win the series. After they found out that Durland was not available they feel assured that they can hit the Rodney pitcher. The chances are that Fraser and Durland will again hook up in a pitcher's battle tomorrow and if the Gibbard team give Fraser the support that is due his efforts they stand an even chance to win the battle.

Since 1876, 114 pitchers in the major leagues have hurled no-hit, no-run games. Only six have been classed as really perfect baseball games—games in which no player reached first base on a base on balls, being hit by a pitched ball, or through error.

He will spend a week-end in the heart of the factory district around Lancashire, leaving London today.

Crack Musical Organization Thrills Belleville Music Lovers

If musical event, unsurpassed in the history of the city, the present, was that of a concert programme by famous Sir Hiller's band, which handed a number of music lovers of Belleville an entire district to an appreciative last evening. Long will the memory of this musically every available seat was taken and standing room only in securing seats. To the officials men of the Argyll Light Infantry band who have assisted the visited Belleville, the citizens have a debt of gratitude for the opportunity of hearing the "premier band of the Dominion."

Those who have been following the fortunes of the organization in triumphs of this band as its appearance in concert, and have listened to its many other visits looked forward to its visit to Belleville with keen anticipation. The programme was chosen with and discernment the assembly numbers of modern numbers, the stirring strains of waltzes and songs, and with a number of parts one of the greatest of all orchestral compositions, Wagner's Overture. In all, the superb rendition of Sir Hiller's band was given the compositions the beauty of harmony and of shearing only the pianoforte or lighter arrangements, the and sweetness of tone, the manner in which the tones could be mute muted until a whisper was high in the wind and then burst forth in a magnificent full mixed sound exemplified the remarkable flexibility and perfect ensemble work of the band. Little wonder that the audience was carried away by the spell of the glorious music of Sir Hilda's band.

Ten numbers comprised the programme. Opening with the stirring "Hosannunde" by Schubert, the band's beautiful tone was immediately has lired on long after the last of the whole was written has been discarded and forgotten, though a classic of melodious and has remained after its second number the grand selection from "Faust" Part II (1908) under the direction of James Oliver the band gave the beautiful rendition of the compositions that will long live in the memory of those who had the pleasure of hearing it. In its perfection of tone was such as to show that the sweet music came from one instrument, in which were heard all parts.

Two delightful excerpts from Noel Coward's success "Bitter-sweet" were the lighter numbers in the first part given by the band. The well defined rhythm and melody of these numbers were given their fullest value, rendered by the band.

The soloist at the evening was J. J. Robertson, champion cornetist of New Zealand, and Robert Smith, the renowned saxophonist. The latter's choice for his numbers Bridge's "A Coder" and "Love's Old Sweet Song" on his instrument, heard in solo work, interpreting with wonderful ability and feeling in these compositions.

In the second part of the band's programme, the opening number Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" (First Movement). The appeal of Schubert is felt by all and his charming composition, unfinished, will live as long as that of the composer's favourite airs. As impressive last night it left nothing to be desired. The selections given new significance by Hilda's interpretation. The Cavalry Lyrics, "The Temple Bells," "Indian Love Lyrics," "Pale Hands Dusk" and "Till I Awake," by Woodforde-Finden were given with a moving beauty, the mystery and glamour of India reflected in beautiful manner by the band. Introducing the number "Prelude in Sharp Minor" by Rachmaninoff

LT. GOVERNOR OF N. S. DIES

Hon. Frank Stanfield is Found Dead in Bed

Halifax, N.S., Sept. 26 (C.P.)—Hon. Frank Stanfield, Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, was found dead in bed this morning. He was sworn into office on December 3, 1930, succeeding Dr. J. C. Tory. Yesterday he visited Truro, his old home, and appeared to his friends and former business associates in his usual health. Senator John Stanfield is a brother.

Two former Lieutenant-Governors of Nova Scotia were present. They were Hon. Joseph Howe and Hon. A. G. Jones.

Pending the appointment of a successor by the Federal Government the administration of the province will be at a standstill, as the Chief Justice is only empowered to act during the temporary absence from the province of the Lieutenant Governor.

Brother Also Member

When Frank Stanfield and his brother, ex-Senator Senator Stanfield, entered the factory the annual sales of Stanfield's Limited, totalled $26,000. Today they run into the millions.

For many years the young man, Frank, devoted all his attention to the operation of the business, the attention of his native town. As his industry expanded, Senator Sidney his wise counsel was sought by other industries and at the time of his appointment to the highest post in the gift of his province, he was associated with numerous companies and corporations. He was a director of the Royal Bank of Canada, director of the Mersey Paper Company, Milton Limited, and Trust Company, Nova Scotia Light and Power Company, Canadian Credit Agencies Trust Company, Maritime Life Insurance Company, and many others. For nine years he was a director of the former Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company.

Entered Politics

As his scope of business activities broadened he was drawn into politics. Senator Stanfield was the backbone of the Conservative Party in Colchester for a quarter of a century.

He first entered the Provincial legislature in 1911 and was successful in the general elections of 1918, 1925 and 1928. During his terms in office he was one of the quietest men in the House, but as strong and influential in the party that he became known as the "strong silent man" of the Conservative organization in the province.

He could have been a member of the Rhodes Government in 1925 but refused to accept a portfolio but later refused to go into the cabinet without portfolio.

He was a Protectionist.

Massive Type

An austere and reserved business man, yet a likeable associated. general companionship with his friends, and a worthy foeman of his political opponents, he was one of the most popular men in the political world "down east." He had accomplished much in all lines of endeavour and his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor was generally acclaim. Much was to be written about his brilliant career, but here the newspaperman and feature writers found no difficulty in talking about himself. Only the known business and political activities were recorded because his more intimate fancies and adventures were kept to himself.

Beginning to Live

Only this week a Canadian Press correspondent approached him with a view to securing a complete story of his life.

He replied:

"I am just beginning to live, my lad."

The immediate family of the late Lieutenant-Governor consists of his wife, a sister of Mayor George Thompson of Truro, four sons and one daughter, Katherine, a student at Dalhousie University; Frank T., of Truro; Charles, a student at Dalhousie University, Halifax; Robert and Gordon, at school. Two brothers and three sisters survive; Senator John Stanfield, Walter G. Stanfield of Sydney; Mrs. Frank Smith, Miss Eleanor Stanfield and Miss Anne Stanfield, of Truro.

A flawless emerald is the most high prized gem stone.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

"Men tell me you will some day be the richest woman in all North America."

"Well?"

"Well, I am Ted Radcliffe, the poorest man in all Mexico—north or south—gentleman at large, and with a future all to be made."

She smiled again. "I see." Then after a little she added: "Ted, I told on last night. If you ever fall in love, don't bother your head if it's yours about whether the girl is rich or poor. Only very old and very wise people do that, and they're always wrong."

"What should I say to her, Sphinx?"

"Just say that you love her. Isn't that enough? Why clutter it up with an inventory of one's possessions? After all, life can be made so simple just as simple as it is here, where you are now, with all the ugliness and the difficulties left out."

"I'm wondering what your uncle would say if some nameless youth lifted to reach that doctrine for you."

The girl's laughter seemed to fill the glade.

"If I should fall in love with anyone—except some handsome young Spaniard of an old family, uncle would probably turn the old face of the world To him and my purpose in life should be to marry someone worthy to be master of the hacienda of Paco Morales. He used to send me to heaven for every winter shopping I'd fall in love with some aristocratic youth."

"And Jim?"

"I think Jim has been much happier since I refused both him and the silver."

"And you have refused?"

"Oh, I don't know—at least a hundred times. The last time was about a week ago. I think if I accepted Jim he would be a broken man. He would have nothing to count about, and he would have no reason to strut gloomily back and forth, enjoying a broken heart. And in many ways, is a dear, but there's a lad. Some day I'll pick Jim out a girl and he will spend the rest of his life quite happily, bullying her and being worshiped by her."

Ted rolled over on his back and looked up at the tree tops.

"I'm beginning to find out, Adela. She mumbled extreme terror.

"So, soon? You've led me to believe that you're a remorselessly calculating little person, and you're in it, too. You conceal another much nicer little person who really you. One who is wildly in love with me, who at times is afraid that this life—if she lets it—may do something to her heart."

Turning on her elbow she watched him smilingly. "Wonderful man!" she mocked. "So I'm really wearing a mask?"

He nodded "And you change the mask so quickly I'm never quite sure whether you're sincere. Or irresponsible desert child with never a care under all that copper hair."

"Or what?" she challenged.

"Or a child, which, under love's lonely princess, not very happy, perhaps, but lovely beyond all words, and like all princesses unattainable."

She rose and dusted the crumbs of lunch from her lap. "Well, there's no use sitting here. Even from a great big good-looking boy, I'm tired. At the moment, I think we've got back before dark, we had better start."

But once more she looked about her at the quietly running brook beneath them and the quaint waving iron trees. Then she turned her hands high above her head and breathed in the fragrant air. "Just the same," she murmured, all life could be quiet and simple and full of great beauty like this, couldn't it?"

Mounting slowly as if reluctant to break the spell, they followed the little stream up the slope to where it narrowed and at last lost itself among the firs. Adela stopped. She frowned at her watch

"We've spent an hour than the very devil, unless—" She swerved her horse, acted with a sudden decision. "Instead of following that winding trail, let's cut across.

Let's pick it up north of the foot-hills. That will save us at least an hour."

Ted groaned "If all the boys I've lost following shortcuts were placed end to end—" he began.

"I know. There's room for them in the ark. But after all we can't miss the desert, and we may save time. So don't be so solemn Take that lumbering horse out of my way and I'll show you some plain and fancy guiding."

"God help us all." was Ted's only comment, as he fell in behind.

It was hard going. The way led up the side of a canon, and at its top they followed a dim game trail over a grassy meadow and down again into a thicket of chaparral that tore at their riding breeches and pulled continually at their arms It was a hot and breathless place, unmoved by the foothills. For an hour they rode in silence, then she stopped.

"I don't like the way this trail's leading," she told him.

Ted laughed slightly. "Then you're hard to please. The trail's been leading us many ways that some of them should meet your approval." He pointed to a curled lightning-shattered pine. "We've passed that monarch of the forest three times in the last half-hour."

"You're a shameless, barefaced liar. No! If you don't like my guiding, you try it."

"But, today, I've guide this week and I'll try my hand at it next."

Without answering she turned her mare and, glancing at the western sun, laid a course due north. So a half-hour passed and at last and they stopped on the edge of a deep canon. A narrow trail made by deer or cattle and washed by heavy rains led steeply downward. It was hardly more than a series of irregular steps in the face of the cliff, and dubiously they looked at the trail, then at each other.

Adela shook her head. "Not too good. But they're used to rough going, these horses, and, after all, we've got to get across. We'd better lead them down."

Ted dismounted.. He looked down into the granite, shadowy depths of the canon He frowned at the trail. "I go first," he announced.

From the skirt it was plain that the desert horses had no great liking for what they were to have seemed to them a very crazy proceeding. Ted's horse balked and reared back on his bridle, then stepped gingerly forward, testing at each step, shaking his head in disapproval.

"You better wait until I get clear," Ted called back. "There's no use in both getting stuck at the bottom of the canon together."

She nodded, and he caught a look of relief in her eyes.

Very carefully the mare led on. At the edge of each step she hesitated. He held the reins loosely, letting her feel out each step for herself. Her half-way down now, and the worst seemed already behind him. Perhaps they might safely have made that hazardous descent had not disaster come to grief—a loose rock in the horse's path. Ted heard a sharp scramble and felt a sudden tug on the bride. He turned in time to see his lady's mare's forefeet miss the path and plunge forward. The reins were torn from his hand. He leaped instantly into the horse had crashed among the rocks and cactus below.

Frantically Ted scrambled down the precipitous side. One glance at the legs and the man turned sick. Then he recalled the remedy for the saddle pocket and, pulling out the automatic, shot the horse. As the last echo of the shots rattled and echoed up the narrow canyon, he heard Adela's voice instant in the rocks.

"There was no other way," he called. "I'm all right."

"I know. I could see from above." Very carefully she came over. "It was my fault. Thank God it wasn't you." She put her hp. "Let's get back."

Ted took off the saddle and bitted it to the mare. He then followed the girl to the rim above.

"Can you climb out at once?" Adela asked.

"He's quite dead."

"Poor old fellow."

Then a little way down the path and stood without a word gazing across the canyon. After a few minutes she turned.

"And now about—What are we going to do with our horses?"

"We can't be more than twenty miles from home." Ted estimated. "I can walk as fast as four mare and we can do it in the plains. Then you could gallop ahead and send a relief party for me. If I have to spend a night on the desert, that's no great hardship."

Adela shook her head. "It's not quite so simple. For one thing, I'm not sure we will get out of these foothills before dark and we haven't crossed that canyon yet."

Ted slipped the automatic into his pocket. "All right, we'd better get going. I'll walk ahead and we'll skirt the canyon. There must be some break in it that we can cross."

But crossing the canyon seemed no nearer a possibility when, at the end of an hour, they stopped again on the edge of its vertical rim. Already the shadows were lengthening and a sudden coolness in the air told of evening's coming. Though neither of them spoke, to both came the thought. This a night on the edge of the desert awaited them.

Once luck favored them. Just before dusk the canyon headed abrupt ly into a broad hillside, and in half an hour they had crossed and at a fast walk were descending the long slope to the last outpost of the foothills Above the contour of the hills, puffs of hot, dry air came to them, telling of the nearness of the desert. The trees were sparser and more gnarled, and on the south slope of the knolls cactus was reaching back out of the sand.

Their throats were dry, and once they stopped to drink sparingly from the canteen in Adela's saddle pocket. Then on again, and as the last light faltered in the west, they emerged from the timber and looked down upon the world of sand and cactus, that still unconquered myself of men call the desert

Ted's eyes sought the far horizon, finding only purple mist and darkening sky. No sight of human life.

Adela was looking to the west, "I think I've found my stupid self at last," she said, "but we're miles west of where we should have struck the desert, That promontory over there, that far one looking a little like a bird's head—I think that's Eagle Rock. It's ten miles from there to the ranch.

"And fifteen from here to Eagle Rock," Ted estimated. "Twenty-five miles for a tired horse. Why don't you ride in while it's cool and I can camp here until tomorrow. I hate to see you take the desert alone, you're the mare will guide you home, won't she?"

For a moment the girl sat in thought, then deliberately she swung out of the saddle and slid off the cloth. "It's better for us to spend the night here."

"But your uncle will be wild with anxiety."

"Of course he will. And I'll catch what His major once called 'merry old hell' tomorrow, but I haven't the heart to make the least, few twenty-five miles more. Besides I don't want to leave you here."

"What could happen to me?"

"Lots of terrible things. For one thing, scorpions as dumb as I've heard out to be might not be able to find you in the morning. Besides, I'm tired."

"Tired?"

"Ted, look around and gather some stuff and I'll be on, and stop talking. I've decided to compromise myself." She smiled like a wayward angel. "When uncle will say tomorrow isn't part of today's troubles. Really I think the thing is good for him. It gives him something to think about besides El Coyote."

Municipalities and Work at Home

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 24—(The Canadian Press)—In Southern Ontario centres where unemployed—some not numerous the Ontario government believes they can be taken care of by their ow municipalities, said Hon George S. Henry, Premier of Ontario today. Mr. Henry had been asked regarding a letter from J. E. Hill, secretary of the unemployment relief fund, to M. U. Ferguson, Town Engineer of Port Hope, Ont., to the effect there were already many unemployed in Northern Ontario and it was unlikely many would be required from South Ontario for highway construction work.

FIRE AT LINDSAY

Lindsay, Ont., Sept. 24—Fire that completely destroyed the large barn owned by W. A. Perrault, one mile west of Valentia, together with 250 tons of fodder, some grain, some baby beef and this year's crop. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

Argentina is the second largest foreign market for American bathing suits.

Here's What Happens When A Train Runs Over A Plane!

One of the rarest of accidents was this, in which a train and a plane collided near Charlotte, N.C. After a stalled motor had forced the plane down on the railroad tracks, a locomotive tore through it, practically severing the craft. The pilot, J. E. Lohr, of High Point, N.C., was critically injured. A crowd is shown surveying the wreckage of the plane.

"THE GREAT LOVER" DRAWS CROWDS AT THE CAPITOL

Last night a large audience enjoyed "The Great Lover" at the Capitol Theatre. Adolphe Menjou is indeed the polished character necessary to convincingly portray an irresistible man.

He has a particular charm of personality, a touch of foreign demonstration, and an artfulness which could do no other than win the fair ladies' hearts. Handsome he is, and he proceeds to play with the feminine affections until a girl, equal to him in the art of flirting, deals him out a dose of his own medicine, and his exasperation proves his undoing. The irresistible one is ruined, because of a violent fit of rage at being thwarted by a mere girl, he loses his chief asset, his voice, and the girl's lover comes into what might have been the success of "The Great Lover."

Irene Dunn as the girl, Neil Hamilton as the lover, Baclanova as the fascinating widow, who is so madly in love with Menjou, and Ernest Torrence as the patient manservant, to the Great Lover, each enact their respective roles with ease.

The programme, which is being played for the last time tonight, it made complete by a travelogue dealing with Jerusalem, a clever cartoon and a comedy, starring the famous child-actor, Snookums.

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY" HISTORY MAKING FILM

Just as "An American Tragedy," Theodore Dreiser's great novel, made history in literature; just as its dramatization made history in the stage, so the screen production of this thrilling story, which the Belle Theatre will feature for three days, starting Monday next, makes motion picture history.

"An American Tragedy," the talking picture, is based on Dreiser's novel. It is a story of youth in this land, modern age with ambition vieing with love, one love conflicting with another, and a boy groping his way recklessly out of a situation which he is too weak to face.

Preview audiences claim "An American Tragedy" has moments that have never been equalled for drama, suspense, intensity. Its courtroom scenes are the most graphic, absorbing and tragically real pages from life the screen has ever captured.

Joseph von Sternberg, who directed Marlene Dietrich in her three screen triumphs, "The Blue Angel," "Morocco," "Dishonored," made this stirring picture. Phillips Holmes the blonde hero of Nancy Carroll's "The Devil's Holiday" and "Golden Heaven," has the leading role, with Sylvia Sidney, New York stage star and recently seen with Gary Cooper in "City Streets," and Frances Dee, as important and vibrant personality carrying the two important feminine roles.

"REBOUND" AT THE CAPITOL SATURDAY

"Rebound," Donald Ogden Stewart's well-known play, opens at the Capitol on Saturday for two days.

It is not often that we have the pleasure of seeing a picture which has uniform quality of excellence in every phase. It usually happens that if the dialogue is good, the actors cannot deliver it well,—or if the actors are good the story is poor. Here we have a charming story with excellent dialogue throughout and actors who know how to talk.

Ina Claire, who plays the starring role, gives a performance which is well directed and intelligent.

The story deals with a girl, presumably happily married who discovers that she has got a husband whose love is on the rebound from an affair with another woman. The waking and waning of their marital affections, the trials and triumphs of the lovers, are treated in a light comedy fashion.

The supporting cast includes Robert Williams who played in the original stage play, Robert Ames and Hedda Hopper.

MARK TWAIN'S "HUCKLESBERY FINN" NOW AT BELLE

Stars Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green

Four delightful child actors and a delightful story are the ingredients of enjoyable entertainment to the Belle theatre where Paramount's "Huckleberry Finn," the second of the Mark Twain classics to come to the screen is showing today and Saturday, matinee daily.

Young Jackie Coogan is again cast in the role of Tom Sawyer, in which he made such a hit in the moving picture of that name. And Junior Durkin continues his portrayal of Huck Finn. Mitzi Green and Jackie Searl are just as enjoyable in "Huckleberry Finn". as they were in "Tom Sawyer."

Pat and Jolly Eugene Pallette heads the cast of adults. He portrays one of the pair of desperados who lead Tom and Huck into mischief. Oscar Apfel is the other bad man, Clara Blandick is again seen in the role of the revered Aunt Polly, and Jane Darwell portrays the role of Widow Douglas.

"Huckleberry Finn" carries on the adventures of the real boys Mark Twain wrote about in "Tom Sawyer." Huck runs away from home to escape his father, and, in the search that follows, Tom Sawyer finds him. Together, the boys plan a runaway, fall in with two funny foreigners, have many adventures, from the wicked designs of the badmen, and win more honor and glory.

The direction of this picture is credited to Norman Taurog who made such a success of his first two kid-character pictures, "Skippy" and "Forbidden Adventure." More than two hundred youngsters of all ages add zest to the rollicking romance. The juvenile cast of "Huckleberry Finn" is larger even than that of "Tom Sawyer" or "Skippy," and the picture is one of the most highly entertaining pictures, for youngsters of all ages, ever screened.

There, are laughs, tears, thrills, heart throbs and deep-down emotions galore in the amusing adventures of Mark Twain's immortal young heroes.

Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey are appearing on the same program in a thirty minute laugh festival entitled, "Oh! Oh! Cleopatra." Stanley Blaisk and Gus Sonnenberg give a remarkable exhibition of wrestling in "No Holds Barred," the popular Paramount News will also be contributed.

AUNT ELLA TAKES MAIDENLY PRECAUTIONS

J. BUCHANAN WILL ATTEND SCHOOL FAIR

Director of Agricultural Extension to Visit K. G. School

FIRST FAIR

This afternoon and evening the King George Public School is honoured with the presence of Mr. J. Buchanan, Director of Agricultural Extension, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, who will be present to assist and officiate at the first annual agricultural fair.

Last spring the Home and School Club of the King George District showed its active and practical interest in the affairs of the school by pointing out that the time was ripe for the introduction of the teaching of Agriculture in the school. The grounds of the school were plentiful; the cost would be largely borne by the Department at Toronto; Mr. Brown the vice-principal, was already partially qualified and expressed his willingness to attend the summer school at Guelph if the course were made a part of the school curriculum; and most important these interested parents felt that the work would be of real interest and value to their children.

Steps were immediately taken to arrange for the work to begin in September. The Inspector is a supporter of the teaching of agriculture, and the Board of Education readily gave their consent. Mr. Brown, at considerable expense, attended the summer school, and secured a certificate which qualifies him as an agricultural instructor in the public and high schools of the province.

The Home and School Club set to work to arrange an interesting program and prize list for the School Fair which is to be held at the school building on the afternoon and evening of this Friday, September 25th.

A supply of seeds was secured through the local Agricultural Representative, C. O. Wilson, B.S.A., Stirling, and these were distributed to the children. Generous friends and parents contributed freely in money and prizes to make the first venture a success and to ensure the continued progress of the work in the school. Pupils have been busy for months back preparing exhibits which they will display and which they hope will win a prize.

Of particular interest should be the evening session, the progress of which will be largely devoted to contests in Public Speaking and First Aid for the pupils. Mr. Buchanan will be in the chair in the evening and will address those assembled.

The work is yet in its infancy and it is hoped that a liberal turnout of parents and friends will give an impetus and encouragement which will have a beneficial and lasting effect.

The school building is open from 1 to 5 p.m. and at 8 o'clock in the evening.

What a Few More Seasons Will Do to the Ducks

A GOOD DEED

by Jack Woodford

The first time Nancy saw him was when she was out driving one day in her small roadster. She had stopped at a gasoline station to have her tires tested, oil and water and gasoline supplied. While she waited for the car to be made ready she strolled over toward the little white house which served the small Virginia county. There were almost outbuildings some of them nearly a hundred years old; and, because she was employed by an antique dealer, she was interested in old things; in fact, her time today was for the purpose of looking at some old furniture said to be purchasable in a far corner of the county. Suddenly she saw a barred window. It was open, and at it stood a young man of not more than thirty. He was handsome, slim, well dressed and pleasant faced; but there was a look as of the utmost sadness on his face too. Nancy followed the gaze and saw that he was looking at a patch of wildflowers just beyond the window. Because she was kind and generous, on impulse she went quickly over, picked a bunch of the wild flowers and handed them in to him. There could certainly not be anything wrong, she reflected, in being at all kind to a man who was shut up in jail. His face was wreathed in smiles as she handed the flowers through the bars. She noted with her prettiness, her alluneness and her unselfishness and vivid charm reflected as appreciation in his face, which were large and deeply brown.

"That was awfully kind of you," he said.

"I'm so sorry you're in a muddle and got yourself in it," she told him. "But cheer up, maybe things will work out for you all right after all."

"I hope so," he said fervently, giving her a peculiar look. And then he added, "what do you happen to be doing around here?" She could dimly see into the room behind him. There were others there too. But she talked on while the car was being fixed. Simply, since he was in jail, and she would never see him again, there could be no harm in this. She told him what was going on in town—talked about her work—and of loneliness. He was vitally interested, and asked her a lot of questions.

When she had gone on. Nancy could not get him out of mind. It seemed so strange that such a nice chap should be in jail. She had asked him what he was in for and he had told her for committing a tort—whatever that was—but it didn't sound as though it could be very dreadful. He had said he hadn't the faintest idea when he would get out. Probably she reflected, he was being held at the county seat jail until he should be sentenced and sent to a state penitentiary. It was hideous to think of him in state penitentiary.

That night she stayed at the home of the old lady whose furniture she had come to buy, and next day she drove back the way she had come. She did not intend to see the prisoner again; but something drew her irresistibly toward him. She parked her car at the gasoline station for refueling, and walked over to the window again. He was there. As though he had been waiting for her.

"Do you want any cigarettes, or anything . . ." she asked. "I won't see you again, and you've broke I can stake you to some cigarettes; I've just turned over a nice piece of profitable business for my employer, but I'll get a bit of commission out of it for myself."

"I've got plenty of cigarettes," he told her; "but I would like a cool drink, if you'd have one with me."

He insisted upon passing out ten cents to buy the drinks with. She went over and got two bottles of ginger ale, with straws and drank one of the bottles outside the window, while he drank another one inside. They talked at length, again.

And when she had left him this time she felt terribly depressed that such a nice young man should have gotten himself into such difficulties. In fact, his haunting brown eyes were before her all the time.

And then, a week later, he walked into the antique shop with a man who often did business there. To his amazement the man introduced them formally, and then he was gone. Nancy was dreadfully embarrassed. So much so, in fact, that she found herself consenting to have luncheon with him before she knew what she was saying.

"Well, I got out of it all right," he told her; "and I'm going to reform for now . . . because I've got a reason to earn your good regard if you'll let me try." And then he began. It seemed to her preposterous that she should fall to help a poor young man who was making such an earnest effort to get along.

It was a month later that she found herself, one evening, after a dance, sitting alone in the moonlight in his arms.

"I love you," he whispered vibrantly. "With you at my side I can become anything. I know you love me a little; please say you'll marry me and give me a real chance to make something of myself."

Nancy's heart dictated to her in unmistakable terms. She found herself murmuring, with closed eyes, "Yes!"

"Yes!" A sudden change came over him. He hugged her to him mightily; kissed her again and again with a new fervor.

"Little angel," he whispered; "I did commit a tort when I lied to you; I was never in jail. That was the jury room; I was on a jury in my father owns the largest tobacco plantation in that county, and is rich; I've told him all about you and he's all wired about you as I am, since he knows you love me enough to have married me thinking I had once broken the laws and been on trial. Forgive me for letting you think you were marrying a poor jailbird. when you're really marrying a planter's daughter!"

"I forgive you," she said solemnly, "if you promise never to lie to me again."

Miss Doris Reid gave a splendid reading "If all would Hate—would love us." Mrs. Don Bradshaw gave an interesting talk on "Secrets of Success"—Success in life depends on developing responsibilities. We must teach our children to be thrifty. Save things for themselves, not to kill time, abide in Christ and we will be better men and women. Real success comes from love. The Roll Call—Give a "Time" use different kind of opinion on voting was discussed by the members. Mrs. Clarke invited all to her home for the October meeting.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem, and after, a social time was spent. Mrs. Clarke served a dainty lunch.

Letters to the Editor

ROSES IN BLOOM

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:—

Seeing an item in Friday's paper, regarding roses blooming the third time this season, I beg to say that I have a bush of roses in my garden that is now in full bloom and has been for the last month. This bush is a Crimson Rambler and I have had it for the last seven years. I have never been without lots of blooms since about the first of June. It has been Mrs. Clarke's boast that he could have roses in the hottest hole of his coal at Sunday school every Sunday morning all summer.

A unique fact about them is, that Mrs. Clarke has grown these beauties from small cuttings, which she has taken from other bushes, and has had no failures in the way.

Last fall they had both roses and buds on when the frost came, and I guess that's the end of the season.

A Lover of Roses.

Cut Should Be Only Temporary

Secret Session Held By All Brotherhoods With Respect to Cut

Montreal, Sept. 25—Reluctant to accept a proposition to take a cut in wages, but discussing the advisability of such action in face of prevailing economic conditions, representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, conductors, trainmen, firemen and telegraphers of both the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railway systems met in secret session here yesterday.

While no official statement was given out after the day long meeting, it was understood that the delegates favored a reduction in advance of the cut for a period of a few months only, while a majority, headed by representatives of the telegraphers, demanded a hearing by a Federal Conciliation Board under the industrial disputes investigation act.

From railway officers it was confirmed that notices to the effect always had called on the men to accept the cut, would be given to the large falling off in the revenues of fresh quarters.

"Urged To Do Way With Himself" Stated in Evidence

Montreal, Sept. 25 (C.P.) —Urged by Brother Rosaire, director of the Academy, to "do away with himself," Brother Leo Gabriel testified in the death of Simone Caron, 8-year-old girl, whose partly decomposed body was found in a potato patch in the cellar of Roussin Academy, Antonio Godon, 16, dishwasher at the institution, confessed bodies and attempted to commit suicide, on September 18th, 1931. This testimony was given by Godon himself during the fourth day of the trial of Albert Nogues, also known as Brother Dosithee, a kitchen-hand at the institution, charged with the murder. Godon, who distinguished himself during the first trial as the "fainting witness," was near the breaking point several times yesterday as he gave testimony. The court was obliged to stop proceedings several times to allow the witness to gain control of himself.

Seemingly they prospered for a time, but then the crash came jobless, the United States decided to pay their expenses home rather than keep them as public burdens.

Hamilton, Ont., Sept. 25.—The discount on Canadian money across the Border reacted favorably for the Dominion Lumber Company yesterday when a new contract was placed an order for $5,500 worth of poles.

American League Teams Knock Nationals Off in Games for Jobless

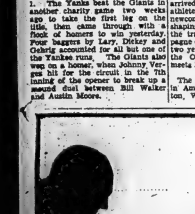
(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr., Associated Press Sports Writer)

Not content with leading the Philadelphia Athletics in their greatest pennant winning season in the American League and becoming the first left-handed pitcher even to win thirty major league games, Robert Moses Grove evidently is out to set a record for the boys to shoot at for a good many years.

Grove already has tied ooh American League record by winning 16 straight games earlier in the season and seems to have clinched a new major league pitching mark as he won his thirty-first game of the year yesterday, so far the southpaw ring has lost only three games against his 31 victories, giving him an average of .912. The record, which stands at least until this season ends, is the .873 average made by Smoky Joe Wood of the Boston Red Sox, who won 34 games and lost five in 1912. It seems likely that Grove will not pitch again before the world's series. Lefty has done a good many other things worthy of note this season. In winning yesterday's game from Boston by a 6 to 4 count, Grove gave only five hits to gain a record for the season of allowing only 241 safeties in 266 innings, and by fanning four men he raised his big strikeout total, which leads the league by a wide margin, up to 198. The Athletics, as a team, piled up seven of their runs from the third to the ninth innings to win their 107th victory of the season, two more than any previous team of Athletics ever has won in a season.

Rookie Wins Second

A pitcher far less seasoned than Grove accomplished a triumph that probably was as important to him in yesterday's other American League games. Oral Hildebrand, who came up to the Cleveland Indians from Tuscaloosa only a short time ago, bested the veteran Earl Whitehill of Detroit, in his second major league victory, 6 to 4. Hildebrand allowed only eight hits.



Yankees Lose

Jim Elliott of the Phillies, turning in an unfamiliar performance as he only game of the National league schedule to be held that day, gave Pirates to five hits to win his 19th victory of the season, 5 to 1.

Exhibition Title

A flock of exhibition games for the benefit of the unemployed kept five other major league teams busy and provided something over $50,000 for the jobless of New York and St. Louis. The results were a mixture of a triumph for the American League representatives and a flop. St. Louis Brown walloped Burleigh Grimes, ace of the Cardinal staff, for six runs in the first inning and down the National League champions, 7 to 5.

At New York, the Yankees took the best Giant to the championship by downing the Brooklyn Robins 9 to 1 in the second half of a charity doubleheader, after the Giants had defeated Brooklyn 3 to 1. The Giants, in search of a name in another charity game two weeks ago to take the first leg on the title, then came through with a flock of homers to win yesterday. Four baggers by Lazy, Dickey and Gehrig accounted for all but one of the Yankee runs. The Giants also won on a homer, when Johnny Vergez hit for the circuit in the 7th inning of the opener to break up a second duel between Bill Walker and Austin Moore.

Walter Knox Takes Charge of Queen's Track Team

Kingston, Sept. 25.—The intercollegiate track meet is scheduled to be held at Toronto this fall, and Queen's are already working hard to put up a good showing. Walter Knox, well-known track coach, has accepted and is already grooming athletes for the events. Several newcomers among the students are shaping up as likely prospects for the track including Ralph Champagne of Belleville, who for the past two years has been a big winner in the Ontario Athletic Commission meets here.

CARNERA WILL TACKLE BOTH

Willing to Meet Loughran And Then Take on Sharkey

New York, N.Y., Sept. 25 — Primo Carnera may make that second New York appearance of his next month but it appeared a bit improbable today that the big Italian's next opponent would be Jack Sharkey, the Boston sailor man, who still can talk a good fight.

Promoter Jimmy Johnston has had Carnera and Sharkey booked for some time to clash in a 15-round bout at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, on October 1st, but yesterday the bout was shoved back to October 13th, on Sharkey's plea that he had injured the little finger of his left hand and would not be able to go through with the battle on the earlier date.

The new date of October 12 was the New York State Athletic commission's idea and not Sharkey's. Jack maintained that he would not be in shape to fight Carnera that soon and when asked pointblank whether he planned to go through with the match then replied with a flat and definite "No."

So the whole matter was up in the air along with Johnston. Jimmy was scurrying around yesterday and discovered that Tommy Loughran, the clever Philadelphian, was perfectly ready and willing to meet Carnera. Loughran may get the shot either on October 1st or October 12th. Carnera's manager, Leon See, protested vehemently against any postponement and said Carnera would be prepared to fight Loughran on the first and Sharkey on the 12th.

Yesterday's Stars

Bob Grove, Athletics—Held Red Sox to five hits to hang up 31st victory.

Willie Kamm, Indians—Cracked out double and three singles against Tigers.

Jim Elliott, Phillies—Stopped Pirates with five hits to win 19th game of season.

SPORTS

BY JimmyThompson

1932 Lacrosse in Canada has gone to the box game, though there is discussion in various parts, notably Ontario, as to the advisability of discarding the old twelve man game, on which the reputation of the game has been built, in favor of a sport which though calling for fewer players, and therefore likely to be more helpful in centres where it is difficult to secure twelve good men, yet still is in the making. The fact is it may, box lacrosse is almost sure to restore the grand old game to its pristine glory. It is interesting to note that the modified sport was given a first real test this year, not as an amateur game, but as a professional one. This reverses the usual order of things. It caught on like wild fire in the eastern loop, comprising teams from Toronto, Montreal and Cornwall and spread throughout the smaller towns, where everybody seemed tickled with it. It has been a big year in sports when you come to think of it, what with lacrosse going box and substitutes in soccer.

PLOWING MATCH INTEREST KEEN

Further Prizes and Donations Are Being Offered Daily

Peterboro, Sept. 25—The local committee of Peterborough athletics and farmers in charge of the details in connection wit hthe forthcoming great International Plowing event is gratified and encouraged by continuous increasing enthusiasm on the part of all citizens throughout this community, rural and urban.

Further, prizes

Further, prizes and donations, unsolicited, are being offered daily. Men and boys who never plowed at a plowing match before are getting ready and anxiously awaiting the days on which the coaching demonstrations will be held in the various townships during the two weeks prior to the match.

Farmers are voluntarily offering their teams and tractors all of which is ample poof that the citizens of Peterborough and Peterborough County are determined that the plowing match held in Peterborough wil let a record that future municipalities will scarcely be able to duplicate.

As time progresses, everyone seems to be gripped of the enthusiasm vlue that will accrue to agricultural interests. Advertisement 19 an already marvelous community spirit in Peterborough and throughout the surrounding counties.

There are so many classes in the Inter-County Match that this will be held the first three days, and the International on the following three days, together wit hthe fact there will be several classes for men who never plowed at a plowing match before, the surprises are in store and trophies will be in the keeping of those who guess that they would establish themselves as prize plowers.

There are encouraging features in the boys' classes, for the reason that all boys who plow are awarded of a prize, in addition, every boy under 14 years of age who plows at the International Match and does not win a prize will be given $5 in gold.

Carload of Movie Firms' Books Taken

Toronto, Sept. 25 (C.P.) — Provincial and city police today continued to seize papers and documents of moving picture companies in the province of Ontario as evidence for the prosecution of the six legal film combine. Three more offices were visited this morning and truckloads of material carried away.

More than a carload of evidence including papers of many kinds were taken in yesterday's raids and one of the problems facing authorities is to find accommodation for the mass of material seized. It will take a large staff of clerks to go through the matter pending the prosecution of the principals in the combine allege by Peter White, K.C., to be in existence.

"THESE HARD TIMES"

"The hard times and scarcity of money makes it more important than ever to economize. One way I save on clothes is by removing the spots of faded or out-of-style dresses, coats, slickers, and underwear. For dyeing, or tinting, I always use Diamond Dyes. They are the most economical used by far because they never fail to produce results that make you proud. Why, things look better than new when redyed with Diamond Dyes. You never spot, streak, or run. They go on smoothly and evenly, even in the hands of even a ten year old child. Another thing, Diamond Dyes never take the life out or cloth or leave it limp as some dyes do. They deserve to be called 'the world's finest dyes'!"

Canadians May Not Compete in Olympics

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 24.—The dismissal of Canadian money in the United States may mean that the Canadian Olympic Committee will not be able to participate in the Olympic Games under the auspices of the United States to be held at Lake Placid, N.Y., next February for winter sports and in Los Angeles, California, next August for the summer games.

WEST PROVINCES REPRESENTED ON BOARD

Saskatchewan, Alberta Get Representation on Directorate of C. N. R.

Announcement Made By Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion of Appointments

HORNER, RAMSAY

Well Known Western Figures Join Board

Ottawa, Sept. 26 (CP). — Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, announced today that the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta had been accorded representation on the directorate of the Canadian National Railways by the appointment, by Order-in-Council of R. Byron Horner, of Blaine Lake Saskatchewan, and James Ramsay, of Edmonton Alberta, as members of the Board.

When the new Board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company was appointed in December last, Dr. Manion announced that the government could not at that time extend the membership to include the two provinces referred to by reason of the statutory limitation of the membership, but that legislation would be sought to permit of the appointment of two additional members to the Board. The Canadian National Railway Act was amended accordingly at the last session of parliament, in consequence of which, it has now been possible to give complete representation to the prairie provinces in the directorate of the Canadian National Railways matters.

Mr. Horner, the Saskatchewan representative is a native of the province of Ontario having been born sixty-fifty years ago, and has resided in the Blaine Lake district in Saskatchewan, where he has carried on large farming operations with about twenty-five years. He is still actively engaged in farming, and has large interests.

James Ramsay, the Alberta representative is a well known business man of Edmonton, head of the James Ramsay real estate department store. He has always been active in municipal affairs, having served as Alderman and as President of the Edmonton Board of Trade. He was elected to the Alberta Legislature in 1917, and has been president of the Northern Alberta Provincial Conservative Association. Mr. Ramsay was born in Michigan in 1861. And received his early education in Oxford County, Ontario, later he conducted a general store at Plattsville from 1877 to 1886. He also had considerable experience in Toronto, Montreal and Guelph prior to moving to Edmonton in 1911.

New York, Sept. 26—James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, today declared in letter of short selling on the New York stock market to be unconstitutional.

Sum of $6212 in Bonds and Mortgages Involved

In police court this Saturday morning, Fred H. Armitage, Bellamy broker, appeared before Magistrate Millet for preliminary hearing A number of witnesses were present for examination. Mr. C. A. Payne, K.C., appeared for Armitage and Mr. H. J. Donnan represented the Crown. Armitage through his counsel did not elect. The charge upon which the crown is proceeding at the preliminary hearing is—that of Andrew Reid, who alleges that Armitage stole from him the sum of $6,212. He was the first witness called and told the court that the money was made up of Dominion bonds and mortgages, the witness giving the serial numbers to the court. Mr. S. The accountant of the Bank of Montreal, G. Tilly, produced the ledgers of the bank containing an itemized statement of the account of Mr. Reid at the bank, which showed the transactions in these mortgages as far as the bank was concerned. It if understood that the case crown if Magistrate Millet commits the accused for trial the other cases may be dealt with Mr. Armitage will not be proceeded with in the preliminary hearing. The case is proceeding.

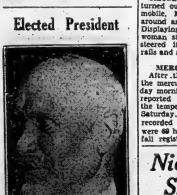
Mayor Tells Deputation of Idle What Plans Are



Several Projects Under Advisement Wait Gov't Decision

Unemployment, the problem which has to be faced by every municipality and by each of every governing body was considered Friday evening by the City Council when a brief heard, a delegation of the unemployed numbering about fifty strong. The delegation was met in the council chamber, every member of the council being present and the meeting was quiet and orderly. There were no inflammatory remarks made and at the conclusion of the spokesman's query, Mayor George A. Reid gave a clear and concise statement of the attitude of the council respecting unemployment and how it will be dealt with this year.

Ernest J. Baldree spoke for the laboring men and only one question was asked: "What is the relief programme for unemployment this winter now being considered by the council?" No mention was made of the steam shovel now operating on North Front Street but the men were concerned in how the council was to provide work for the jobless this winter.

JUDGE HALTS STRIKE PROBE

Word From Ottawa is Awaited In Situation

Estevan, Sask., Sept. 26.— Judge Uyle, of the district court, Estevan, has delayed investigations into the strike situation in this area pending word from Ottawa.

His Honor appointed Tuesday as a commissioner under the enquiries act to investigate all aspects of the 18-day strike which has crippled in the county by coal mines and district districts. The strike sector was quiet all day yesterday.

The rumors grown in persistency that in view of the collapse of negotiations between the miners and the Dominion conciliation officer, a public conference Thursday night the commission may be cancelled. Judge Uyle had planned to start his investigations within two days of his appointment as commissioner.

No further attempt has yet been made by the strikers to prevent work at the Bienfait-Taylor Mine, the only large mine operating in the field.

Woman Driver's Presence of Mind

Windsor, Sept. 26.—Remarkable presence of mind saved Mrs. W. J. Daron, Chandler Street, Detroit, from being killed yesterday when her automobile crashed through a guard rail and plunged 50 feet down an embankment to the railway tracks in the C.P.R. yards at the end of Chandler Street.

Thrown into a skid when she turned out to avoid another automobile, Mrs. Daron's car swung around and went through the rail. Displaying remarkable nerve, the woman stuck to the wheel and steered it between a pile of steel rails and a toolhouse.

Rev. Ben H. Spence Rebuked By Henry

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 26.—(By The Canadian Press)—Rev. Ben H. Spence, former President of the Ontario Prohibition Union, is rebuked in a communication sent him yesterday by George S. Henry, Premier of Ontario, which declares he was guilty of "gross exaggerations" in saying 10,000 liquor permits had been sold in Windsor on the first day of the convention in October, the Premier Spence. Records of the Liquor Control Board showed only 1,400 were sold during the convention, Mr. Henry said.

The Premier's letter was in reply to communications sent by Mr. Spence in protest against the ruling that Windsor liquor stores should remain open an extra hour during the Legion convention.

ELECTIONS ON OCTOBER 28TH ANTICIPATED

Foregone Conclusion That British People Will Go To Polls

CHEQUERS PARLEY

Conservatives Disavow Opportunism in Appeal

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 26 (CP)— Cable)—Political excitement was open at Chequers tomorrow. There at the week-end residence in the Chiltern Hills, after discussions with Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin and Sir Herbert Samuel, the principal members of the Cabinet, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will decide whether to ask for dissolution of Parliament or not.

On Tuesday the King returns to London from Balmoral. If the decision favors dissolution Mr. MacDonald will advise the King to issue writs for a dissolution. It is now suggested elections will take place on October 5 with nominations on October 9 and the election on October 28th.

National Appeal

The plan is for a national appeal by the National Government of the country to the British Prime Minister probably on the following broad lines of policy:

1.—Stabilization of currency.

2.—A balanced budget.

3.—Tariffs.

Adoption of a tariff programme, it is forecast will mean the resignation of Lord Sankey, Lord High Chancellor, and Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer. Labor members of the government. Arthur Henderson, Secretary for Home Affairs, and Sir Donald MacLean, president of the Board of Education, Liberals and Sir Herbert Samuel will probably be replaced by Sir John Simon. Lord Reading, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, it is thought will remain with the government.

Sharp Campaign

Should Mr. MacDonald decide to go to the country the campaign will be sharp and bitter. There have been moves recently to shelve ten legal delays between dissolution and polling but this is not found useful mean special legislation and such legislation would have to fight its way through Parliament.

There is a rumor, continually revived, that further defections from the Labor Party will take place, that if the National Government does not go to the country on the tariffs, Lloyd George, leading the Free Trade Liberals, will be defeated by Labor opponents. It is significant that Mr. Hon. Arthur Henderson, Labor leader, after indicating his willingness to try a revenue tariff as a means of relief for unemployment benefits is now declining to discuss it. He will not help in national construction.

Labor's official voice, The Daily Herald, further declares editorially today that a tariff "would hinder instead of helping the British industry which has now become possible by the reforms of cheapening which have been placed in its way. Always a fully protectionism is the surest and the most costly form of it."

Tories Disavow Opportunism

London, Sept. 26 —(C.P.) —The political scene has changed. On one end the Conservatives are heralding Premier Ramsay MacDonald as definite leader for a national appeal and disavowing party opportunism. On the other end Labor rebels and Laborites as: protesting the future limits which the government cancels the need for tariffs and accusing the Premier of betraying the imminence of a general election.

The train was packed with Chinese refugees, many of them riding on the roofs of the cars, he said, when an airplane dropped low over the train and turned a machine gun on them, killing two and wounding several other Chinese. Thomson said there were no soldiers on the train nor anywhere in the vicinity.

It was understood the British Legation would protest to the Japanese Government.

C.N.R. Employees' Deputation Waits On Council

"SHIP BY RAIL"

More Information Sought By City Council From Lindsay

The City Council resumed regular sessions after the holiday Friday night, when a committee meeting was held in preparation for the council meeting on Monday night. There was little business to transact, as the council has met on two or three special occasions during the summer months and the work has been kept up to date.

A deputation from the Canadian National Railway employees interested in the "Ship By Rail Association" and they are trying to limit the activities of the transport truck within the city limits and the deputation as a whole. A resolution has been passed by the Lindsay City Council, which memorializes the Provincial government to take some action to restrict their activities and in this matter it will be fortified by the action the city council will concur. The city clerk was also instructed to write the city of St. Thomas regarding the by-law now in effect regarding the regulation of transport truck operation in the city, also Hamilton, Kingston and St. Catharines.

Three gas stakes at a value of $51.00 each will be purchased for use in the fire department and the doors at the Bell Block will be fixed.

After hearing from the workers, the Mahatma declared that the mill owners how difficult Lancashire's lot has been, pointed out that India's lot is still harder to bear and that the mill owners' delegation party would remain firm in their stand that India produce her own cotton goods needs.

Since the Delhi Truce negotiated with Premier Ramsay MacDonald as definite leader for a national appeal and disavowing party opportunism. On the other end Labor rebels and Laborites as: protesting the future limits which the government cancels the need for tariffs and accusing the Premier of betraying the imminence of a general election.

Afterward the Mayor of Darwen and his wife entertained Gandhi. It determined to ease the lot of his own people first and that Great Britain must come to the realization that Lancashire never will regain its lost textile trade with India.

EPISCOPALIAN SPLIT IS SEEN

Prohibition Decision Likely Only After Bitter Debate

Denver, Colo., Sept. 26.—Prohibition has joined the list of issues upon which there is registered a difference of opinion among delegates to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Prohibition was both criticized and defended in a report, by the committees of twenty-one a supply to the House of Bishops.

"There is no report recites, "widespread and honest difference of opinion in the church within the church and among members of this convention as to the wisdom and desirability of repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the concomitant legislation in their present form."

"There are those who honestly favor the retention of the law as it now stands, believing it has accomplished good, and may accomplish more and better results. Others, on the contrary, see in the high purpose which prompted the passage of this law, believe that in its present form it ministers to disrespect for law and the growth of a dangerous spirit of anarchy."

The committee hesitates to recommend concerted action on prohibition, but urges individual and "highly controversial and closely related to partisan politics."

Hydro Pays Too High Is Belief of Judge

Ottawa, Sept. 26 (CP)—The Ontario Hydro Commission paid $46,378.40 for 12 properties in Pilarow Township, which, Judge E. L. Daly found a judgment handed down yesterday, was "many times greater than the values" of the properties. He fixed a valuation of $15,000 on the parcels of land, which were purchased in connection with the commission's Chats Falls development.

Pilarow township appealed against a decision of Carleton county council with reference to the assessment for county purposes. The judgment handed down yesterday reduced the assessment of the township by $25,000.

MAYOR TELLS

Patrick Hurst, a resident of Belleville all his life, and a taxpayer, asked if he was to be given work during the winter. "I am behind in my taxes and if the city can give me at the going rate half of wages to help reduces the taxes on my property, it is a opportunity for me to pay if I have no work," said the workman.

No Statement Yet

Mayor Reid stated clearly what the city council could do and what they are not prepared to say at the present moment what will be done. As the Mayor, in his opening remarks, he was at the mercy of the government and they are at the mercy of finance and the government is going to do its best. Every item is situated the same as Belleville, although Belleville is probably a little better off than the majority of cities and towns. The laboring men have trusted us with office and we are trying to find a suitable way out to the best of our ability. There are certain plans under way but nothing definite as the Government has been interviewed. In ten days or two weeks we will know exactly how much money will be forthcoming for Belleville and in the meantime we have nothing to say," concluded His Worship.

Anonymous Letters

"During the past week I have received a number of letters the majority of which have been unsigned and which I have immediately consigned to the waste paper basket, but I would like to say to them that I and the council will look after the unemployment as well as we can and will find a way out for him," continued His Worship. The laboring man must know that the city has no money except what is received from the government, a special grant was given by the city and if the taxes are high don't blame the council. The council met tonight virtually asking for higher taxes and don't blame you. The council told the Government that no money was not needed before October 15th. The Mayor has been waited on this body some time ago and a committee was set up at a meeting of the two bodies in Toronto. Mayor Reid said the Government has used its best judgment and it would not be wise to advertise what the plans are. We have to help the men, until the proper time as the Mayor is not prepared to say from this.

Local Schemes

"There are two or three schemes on foot to give employment and there has been appointed on a schedule to follow so that all applying will be given a chance of employment," said the Mayor. The Mayor stated that the Board of Management likewise the auxiliary pipe line from the pumping plant to the down town section, improvement of Zwick's Island and several small jobs which could be done have been decided upon. Each man will be given three days at which he will work each week and the men will be taken in turn from the list.

Single Men's Case

The question was asked by one of the single men in the audience, "What is to become of the single men?" to which the mayor replied that the married man with children is the first consideration, but the single men upon whom others are not dependent, are also given work without dependents. One man spoke on the unfair proposition that exists this time present in the Public Works Department and Mayor Reid stated that the city would be used there will be no cause for this complaint. He made the declaration left the Mayor thanked all for their attendance and dismissed back to any future council meetings.

It is your business if you have transient trade. Use Worship.

SILVER LINING IN GOLD CLOUD

But World is Still a Gold World and So Will Remain

(By John L. Cooley, Associated Press Financial Writer.)

New York, N.Y., Sept. 26— The old saying about the silver lining to the darkest clouds has had a distinct significance this week.

Active speculation in bar silver, which only a few months ago was considered a liability, has followed suspension of gold payments by Great Britain, Finances have risen more than 3 cents an ounce in a few days.

Although silver was obviously profited by gold's temporary eclipse, there is no serious expectation in Wall Street that England or any other country of financial importance which may find it necessary to back away from gold will adopt the lesser of the two precious metals as the foundation for its money and credit. It's still a gold world, the leading Wall Street authorities say, and it's likely to remain one.

Historians Revived

The quieting of the historians has already been revived in some quarters. Professor Irving Fisher, who has probably had his day and the limelight and once travelled two years ago.

Such a flight from gold does not necessarily mean a silver bulla, it is felt the demand for silver may increase substantially. But it would take this way that some people in the United States, and in this land, seeing the confusion into which the depression has thrown the world, will become even closer to gold than ever.

For almost countless centuries the nations of India and China have treasured the white metal and it scarcely seems probable to these peoples that it will lose its attraction for it will diminish, especially in view of the fact that there is no new appeal. Rather, the reverse may well be true, it is pointed out.

FIERCE GALE LASHES COAST

Damage is Estimated at $100,000 in the Annapolis Basin

Halifax, Sept. 26.—(CP)—A fierce gale lashed the western coast of Nova Scotia and the Annapolis basin yesterday, causing heavy damage to crops and orchards.

H. W. Saxby Blair of the Dominion Experimental Station at Kentville, estimated the loss in the fruit belt at $50,000 and $100,000. Apples which would have ripened in a few days were blown from the ground, and in some sections the crop covered the ground to a depth of fruit. Fortunately less than 10 per cent of the fruit on the trees, as the early varieties having been picked and shipped.

Search revealed that the pair had climbed a ladder, then over the wall and down a rope to freedom. Their absence was not discovered until the turnkey returned to the cells.

BRITAIN MAINTAINS CALM BUSINESS IS LOOKING UP

Although Standard Gone Gilt Edge Securities Are Firm

OUTLOOK BRIGHT

Cotton Trade is On High Road to Prosperity

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 26 — Britain looks calmly ahead. The gold standard is gone for a time. After a hectic battle the pound has flown. But there is no panic; there is even little excitement. The Atlantic fleet, its little flutter over—a flutter much exaggerated abroad—steams to its delayed exercises. There is no inflication; of the dreaded inflation which swept Germany and Austria after the war. The expected slump in British gilt-edged securities has not materialized.

The Royal Park where Charles II loved to linger with his spaniels, glows slightly with floodlights in honor of Faraday's Centenary. The life of London flows steadily on. And business is looking up. Even Lancashire cotton trade is more hopeful now than in ten years. Sales of cotton in Liverpool have leaped from the recent daily average of 8,000 or 9,000 bales to one day's sale of 27,000 bales. In two days one big combine this week sold four million pounds' weight of American yarn. Blackburn, where three-quarters of the textile machines are idle, reports more inquiries for export than in many months past. Four Lancashire cotton mills, two Barrow blast furnaces. A big steel works at Barrow are re-opening in some instances after years of idleness.

The British manufacturers believe the depreciated pound will give them a new grip on South American trade. They see in it a form of protection which benefits them both ways. They get the advantages of the home market because imported foreign goods naturally cost more as the pound sinks abroad. They get the advantage abroad because with depreciated sterling they can undersell competitors who are still on the gold standard.

Nick Slipperiest of Western Convicts

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 26 (C.P.) — Nick Darowick isn't called the "slipperiest" convict by police in Manitoba for nothing.

Just three weeks after police bulletin brought his temporary freedom to an end following his escape from Headingly Jail, wily Nick leaped through a window of his room in the General Hospital last night where he was convalescent, and escaped. His break was made while the guard was being changed and no officer was stationed at the door.

Darowick, who will be deported to Austria when he finishes his term, was shot through the shoulder by the police when they captured him after a seven-day free run following his Headingly escape. He wore only a regulation hospital clothing gown when he ran out last night.

Veterans Want Pensions Paid at Par, $4.86½

Calgary, Sept. 26—The Calgary Branch of the Imperial Veterans' Division of the Canadian Legion British Empire Service League, is making a strong protest to the British Government because of the discount for exchange on Imperial Pensioners' cheques. Many Imperial pensioners will undergo great hardship, it is maintained, if their cheques have to be discounted to meet the present rate of exchange.

By an Act of the Canadian Parliament, the value of the pound sterling is $4.86 2-3 in Canadian currency. It was claimed, however in the present financial crisis the current value of a pound is about $4.35. The veterans contend they should receive the par value as set down in the Act of Parliament.

Widow Will Not Testify Further

Huntington, N.Y., Sept. 26 —On motion of Mrs. Benjamin P. Collings to further testimony added complications today to the inquest into the drowning of her husband by yacht pirates.

Mrs. Collings, nervous, and almost at the point of collapse after three hours of questioning yesterday turned to her father-in-law, H. P. Collings, and her attorney, Wm. A. Kelly, at adjournment and said "I am not going on the stand again today and I don't promise to come back here either."

Mr. Kelly later said: "Mrs. Collings will not go back again at any time under present conditions."

Kelly objected as the publicity given his client at public hearings before Coroner William Gibson in the Huntington town hall.

Mrs. Collings lives in Stamford, Conn., and her presence as a witness was purely voluntary.

GERMANY AND FRANCE MEET

(By Joseph E. Sharkey, Associated Press Staff Correspondent)

Paris, Sept. 26 — Europe awaits with consuming interest not unmingled with anxiety the results of the official visit that Premier Pierre Laval and Foreign Minister Aristide Briand are making to Berlin tonight.

The visit may lead to a "burial of the hatchet" by two great nations which have been, more or less antagonistic and certainly mighty rivals for power since the Franco-Prussia war of 1870 and the Great War.

M. Briand, "apostle of peace," who has been calumniated by many of his own people for seeking a reapproachment with Germany, finds in this visit a crowning of his hopes. Worn and broken from age and hard work, he is confident that there are enough peace loving peoples in both countries nowadays to realize the necessity of genuine, co-operation in every line of activity.

Canada's Future Depends On Transportation

Calgary, Sept. 26—Transportation is one of the three fundamentals things which affect the whole economic life of Canada, and also may best knowledge and belief, no country in the world has ever achieved its destiny without adequate transportation," stated T. E. McDonnell, Toronto, President and General Manager of the Canadian Pacific Express Company, in an address here yesterday at a luncheon of the Calgary Board of Trade. "It is indeed my view", continued Mr. McDonnell, "that the future achievements of Canada, if not its economic life, are distinctly dependent upon efficient transportation as reasonable cost.

Canada's national wealth, estimated at $30,845,000,000 in 1929, is increasing at the rate of approximately one billion dollars a year.

Lancashire and Gandhi Look Upon One Another

Darwa, Lancashire, England, Sept. 26 (AP)—Mahatma Gandhi today was in the heart of the great cotton manufacturing district of England, the section that has suffered the most from the boycott of British goods. He was both cheered and heckled when he came to the nearby village of Springvale last night to spend the week end conferring with operators and workers alike. There were shouts of "good old Gandhi" and others not so complimentary as a great throng of mill families assembled around the station.

All along the way from London the populace turned out to catch a glimpse of the little brown man who has persuaded millions of Indians to make their own cloth and to shun materials of British manufacture. Curiosity seemed to be the dominating sentiment and there were no evidences of hostility.

Two Scotland Yard men rode up with him and uniformed officers boarded the train at Manchester and other stops. A strong force of mounted and foot police cleared the way for the motor car that took him to a private home for the night.

THE LATE PROF. COLEMAN

Professor D. R. Coleman, who died at the great age of ninety-one years on Thursday, was one of the most interesting of men. His was a personality which was anything but frigid. It was warm and vibrant, and made a man meeting him, at once a friend. One who fought in the twenties with the Confederate forces of the United States against the North in the great Civil War which tore that country mercilessly, he preserved the military bearing which he imbibed in those stirring days—he was always a military figure. But his manner was anything but militaristic, it was infectious with his good humor, wit and gaiety.

Old age broke down at last that powerful physique, which led him in his late eighties to tell with pleasure of his constant attention to his physical welfare by walking. He was a strong advocate of the pleasure of walking and he lived the principle he advocated.

Mr. Coleman was one whom many delighted to honor. He filled nó small place in the city's life. He had wíde interests and possessed more than usual fitness and training for the posts he filled. He left the city richer for his presence.

In him Bellevillians caught something of the delightful flavor of the Old South, where personality, individuality, and courtesy reigned supreme.

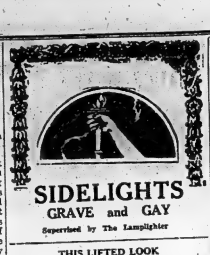
Brilliant, filled with the zest of life and the lives of his fellowmen, he was. It has been something for many here to have known Prof. Coleman.

But there is another obligation which is felt throughout the world—that is the world of the deaf, who received instruction under him. A large measure of the advance which the deaf interests have had is due to the zeal of Mr. Coleman and his associates. Brought here from the United States in 1870 when the Institute of the Deaf and Dumb was opened, he was able to compensate through the training he gave others, the land of his birth for its contribution in him to Canada.

A soldier, a gentleman, a scholar, and a friend has passed, after having made the way clearer and better for his contemporaries and for succeeding generations.

A WARM PHILOSOPHY

General Smuts surprised the world on Thursday when as president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science he gave expression to a philosophic view of the universe which set not only his hearers thinking but millions of men and women in every country of the world.



In these days of gloom when the very foundations seem to be tottering and men "appear" to doubt every sign of stability, his message brings a warmth of satisfaction and consolation in the faith that all that we are comes from a universal heart, from the centre of a kindly and friendly universe. Philosophers, poets, scientists and statesmen have often painted doubt and dispair, many of them—and there is a doubting tendency so evident among thinking men, that the experience of a soldier-statesmen-scholar and poet like Smuts has the veil dimly but surely comes as a warm relief to the chill of doubt. There is a paragraph from his address which gives a whole philosophy in itself—

"Our deepest thoughts and emotions and endeavors are but response to stimuli which come to us, not from an alien but from an essentially friendly and kindred universe. So far from the cosmic status of life and mind being degraded by the newer astronomy and physics, I would suggest an alternative interpretation of facts, more in accord with the trend of evolutionary science. We have seen a macroscopic universe born or revealed to consciousness out of a prior microscopic order of very different character. Are we not in the emergence of life and mind witnessing the birth or revelation of a new world out of the macroscopic physical universe? I suggest that at the present epoch of the cosmic process we are the spectators of what is perhaps the grandest event in the immeasurable history of our universe, and that we must interpret the present phase of the universe as a mother and child universe, still joined together by a placenta which science, in its divorce from philosophy, has hitherto failed to unravel."

GOING HOME

After all there is no place like home, must be the feeling of Britishers who are returning home to their native country after settling in the Dominions and in the United States. Times like these send many back to the home land, for gold is not picked up on any streets even in the New World. Conditions are different here from what they are at home and it must be a pleasure for many to go back to be with their own kith and kin and among time-honored conditions and the old traditions.

The trend back "home" is largely one of the results of the present depressive conditions of the world.

THIS LIFTED LOOK

By Aline Michaelis

There is so much of mystery ahead,
So much of promise in the undawned day,
Our steps are ever eager, and we tread
In haste to gain Golcondas far away.
This is the joy of life, this lifted look
Into the future with its certain power
To remedy the ills we can not brook
And to atone for every unkind hour.

This is the gift beyond all others prized,
Worth more than wealth or fame or even love;
It is a gracious boon by heaven devised,
Which in itself a 'heaven on earth can prove.

Pledge of all happiness for which we grope
This lifted look that tells of deathless hope!

EMPRESS EUGENIE, wife of Napoleon III of France, will likely be made the patron saint of the mad hatters of Danbury, Connecticut. Danbury, where most of the felt hat come from, is a busy little city of about 25,000 inhabitants when times are good, and considerably less when times are bad. Making men's hats has been the main industry for years and when the hatless habit came in vogue times were not so good for the hatters. There is always a busy season twice a year when the new blocks are turned out and in between not much doing. In normal times hatters worked about six months and made from $25 to $35 a week. Then Empress Eugenie came back in a new shape of felt hats for women, familiarly called 'Cockeye' hats and the felt hat makers of Danbury were called upon to furnish the shapes for millions of women who insisted upon Empress Eugenie hats. Danbury factories are producing 10,000 hats daily and hatters are earning from $35 to $185 a week. The women's hats are shipped unfinished to various cities for trimming and shaping in the various designs. Danbury is booming with a payroll last week of $340,000 and a total payroll in the past four weeks of $1,500,000. Right here is an idea—if one little change in fashion can make one community wildly prosperous why not change all the fashions in wearing apparel, eating and drinking, etc., and make everybody prosperous? Work it out for yourself.

TWO KNIGHTS OF THE ROAD appeared at the door of a residence on the East Hill on Monday evening, long after the hour usually set for the evening meal. They were quite blase, knew what they wanted and were not backward in asking for it. "Can you give us some fry meat, Missus?" "No, but I can give you some good roast beef." "Aw, we don't want any roast beef what we want is something we can take back to the jungle to fry a feed." "Sorry, I can't oblige you," said the lady of the house. "Well, give us some money to buy some fry meat with, then." "I certainly will not," said the lady, "if the roast beef doesn't suit you we have nothing else for you." "Awll right, come along pal," and the two fry meat hunters departed on their quest for a jungle feed. Looks like the "Jungle" had its daily bill-of-fare, just like me and you—roast beef Monday, fried steak Tuesday, corned lamb Wednesday, liver and onions Thursday, Friday potluck, Saturday hash, Sunday—chicken perhaps.

BELLEVILLE LADY with a party of friends recently visited New York City en route to Atlantic City. They intended leaving New York by bus but when the tickets were purchased they found that the bus man proposed to deduct twenty per cent from their Canadian money. The Belleville lady said "nothing doing", we'll take our money back and travel by rail and they did. Just seems that whenever the Yanks get a chance they like to disparage Canadian money, even when their own bucks are burning a hole around them and they know that Canadian money is the best in the world. Just low-down Yankee cussedness, that's all.

WOMEN IN THE CHURCH

The General Synod of the Church of England has defeated a motion to give women a place in the councils. The motion was carried by a majority of one, but to change the constitution so as to make this possible requires a two-thirds vote and so the proposal was thrown into the discard. This decision, made by men, of course, seems unfair to the women. The men of the Church of England are quite willing to let the women do the lion's share of the work, to support its missionary societies, provide additional finances, and carry many of the heavier burdens of church activity. That alone, we would imagine, should entitle the women to a voice in the affairs of the church, but the men who have the authority in their hands think otherwise, so they must be content to be workers only. It would be a great shock to the men were the women to issue an ultimatum of "No vote, no work." but they are not likely to do that. Some day, they hope, the men will have their eyes opened, and will be ready to admit that the work which the women do in the church entitles them to some responsibility and representation in the councils of the General Synod.—Oshawa Times.

FIXED INCOME TAX

A fixed rate of thirty-five mills on the assessment proposed by a special committee of the Ontario Municipal Association for municipal purposes in the province has long campaigned against the pressure unjust and unfair, and on the ground that it was not fairly collected, and on different municipalities and not collected at all in some places.

Where there is low assessment and high mill rate the income tax-payer is penalized, and where the assessment is high and the rate low he gets off with a proportionate share of municipal tax—if the impost is a fair one. The report is said in favor of the fixed amount proposed, but conditions are that rate varies all the way from nothing to a high rate of sixty-five mills and some municipalities—such as Windsor—use the "neglect to collect income tax" as inducement to prospective industrial locators. The Star-Phoenix holds the view that the tax should be abolished, made uniform and collected everywhere — Niagara Falls Review.

RAILWAY INQUIRY

It is reported that a royal commission will be appointed within the next few weeks to inquire into the Canadian railway situation. That such a move would be a wise one has been considered long been understood, and the services rendered by commissions of months makes it very desirable that the two systems will be considered are not credited in Ottawa, where it is believed such an investigation the government is merely to bring about economy—co-operation between the nationally-owned lines and the C. P. R. with a view to effecting greater economies and reducing the present unnecessary duplication of service.—Hamilton Spectator.

WORLD FARLEY ON GOLD

There is disposition in some quarters to arrive rather hastily at the conclusion that Britain, by temporary suspension of the gold standard, has automatically abdicated her traditional position as the world's banker, and that some other nation, possibly the United States, or more possibly France, must assume the task. This is simply the old process of reasoning which leads to and apparently justifies this conclusion. One very important factor is disregarded, namely, the strong probability of progress on the parliamentary action by the British Government and the Bank of England. Law is found in the assumption that British statesmen are incapable, having had recourse to drastic action in the presence of an acute financial emergency, would be content to stop there, leaving international exchanges in the present problem to take care of themselves. Such, however, is not British practice, and it becomes apparent presently that British leadership is not confined to the purely domestic sphere of what is, in point of fact, a crisis of international scope.—Montreal Gazette.

PRISON REPEATERS

It is revealed in the annual report of Ontario's prisons and reformatories that, of 29,126 persons convicted in that province during 1930, over two-thirds of the total received sentences of less than two years. Of the total number of persons convicted, 10,000 were repeaters. Of the latter number, 1,000 were sentenced to reformatories, and 9,000 to prison. Of the 9,000 prison repeaters, 4,000 were sentenced to terms of less than two years. Of the 1,000 reformatory repeaters, 600 were sentenced to terms of less than two years. Of the total number of repeaters, 5,000 were sentenced to terms of less than two years. Of the total number of repeaters, 5,000 were sentenced to terms of less than two years. Of the total number of repeaters, 5,000 were sentenced to terms of less than two years.

RIP VAN WINKLE: "Strange! I can't have been asleep after all."—The Passing Show, London.

MONTH'S END

by Dorothy Radcliffe Scoville

"So you won't marry me—" Jerry Davis looked at the slender wisp of a girl in front of him, and scowled.

"You have your boat, your dog and your mandolin, and you need. I heard you boasting of it this morning down at the store," she told him.

"And that's true," he nodded. "But I don't know what it's got to do with my asking you to marry me."

"It's the way you ask it—" The color deepened in her cheeks. He regarded her with a slight frown, "I get everything that I go after, usually" he reminded her. Then, without more words he slammed the kitchen door behind him, and she saw that his fists were clenched as he went.

All through the winter Jerry Davis had been "keepin' company" with Mary Hartsell. Half the girls in the village envied her, yet when Jerry had asked her to marry him she had refused. All winter long she had heard him brag of his boat, and how she was sure he would ask her to marry him, she had made up her mind as to what she would say.

She had tried to reason it out; this refusal of a man she knew she loved. Her mother had encouraged her to come to the house, and even her father had nodded his approval.

"Not many men around here have done so well as Jerry," her mother said with a meaning under her words.

Mary had almost decided to say yes to Jerry Davis when she met Miss Ellen Tatum on the street one afternoon. Miss Ellen was very sweet and very neighborly, taught the Sunday School and peddled gossip on week days.

"Oh, hello, Hartsell," she was all out of breath from hurrying with the news. "Are you really going to marry Jerry Davis before the month is out—? He says you are!"

Mary smiled and carefully hid her fury with a firm effort. "Jerry seems to know more about it than I do," she answered.

"O—that's just his way—" Miss Ellen was openly envious of Mary.

On her way home Mary thought over what Miss Ellen had said. Jerry was evidently including her in his bragging. It was a challenge to Mary. Before she married Jerry Davis he must sing a different tune. Two more days till the month would be gone. Jerry had reminded her of the fact, but she had used it to postpone the date of marriage.

"In two weeks I'll be off fishing again and it will be half the summer before I'm back here."

"It can be all summer—but I'll be sorry you're going," she told him. There had been more of it, until both of them were thoroughly angry, as two people who love each other can be angry. It had ended with Jerry stamping out.

Early next morning Mary had heard the sound of an engine coming from her bedroom window she had watched Jerry's little one lunged around, and headed for the ocean.

"Hadn't planned to go for two weeks, but he took on provisions last night—dug up his crew and this morning—off he goes." Mary's father brought back at dinner time. "Did he tell you he was going, Mary?" he cried sharply.

"No—" Mary shook her head, and said no more. Her mother and father exchanged glances but offered no comment.

Vague reports of Jerry and the "Good Luck" had come back to Little Harbor with the other boats. Once Mary had seen the boat listed in a Boston paper as arriving in his market with fish. Other vessels came back home between trips but there was no sight of the "Good Luck."

On the last day of the month Little Harbor was wrapped in a thick, woolly blanket of wet, dripping fog that drifted like smoke to muffle all voices. The boats were wailing and grunting and groaning but Little Harbor boats were safely under the piers, riding at anchor.

Mary's father through the news of the morning paper. "Last night there was a boat aground on east shore—" he started. "Lot of fuss, but coast guard drive over to the point and then walk over the hill to the beach. They say she's a steel boat."

"What boat is it?" Mary was pushing back her coat.

"Don't know,—some stranger most likely. Jerry knows no one would try to come inside East shore bar with it this thick. Total loss too, they say, shoved off her bottom on the ledge."

Skilfully Mary guided the ancient car over a dirt road that led to the east shore. Other cars were heading that way and at least a dozen were already there; parked in a line clearing that opened onto the moor and rolling dune.

Miss Ellen Tatum glimmed Mary and rushed over to her from the little group on the beach. Through the greyness Mary could make out the shadowy outlines of a little schooner.

"Oh, Mary—isn't it awful! I can just imagine how you feel!

"It's Jerry Davis' boat, by Dad!" exclaimed her father excitedly. "What was the crazy fool doin' way off here? He hasn't signalled—put off for another more information on the subject from some of the fishermen who were there.

The coast guard crew from Little Head station had arrived ashore above a dory load of gear. With them was Jerry.

Mary's heart leaped once too often—and I've lost both you and my boat by it—" He stumbled on over the sand. "I'm sorry and I knew my way through here with a little clearing that opened at Black's head tide—so I'd get in here before—" He closed his mouth and looked away.

"Before the month was gone?" she finished for him softly.

"Yes—"

"You were going to ask me to marry you?"

"Yes—because I love you." He looked accusingly at her. "But you needn't be afraid of that now—I haven't anything to offer until I get another boat."

"You needn't wait for that—if you don't want to."

Mary said it so low that he bent to catch it.

"You mean, you'd marry me—now?" Jerry pulled her close up so she was looking into his eyes.

"Yes—"

In front of Miss Ellen Tatum and the ladies there was a general beach he kissed her and then, before the day was gone they were married. Jerry got another boat, marvel as it, but Mary only smiled.

King George School's Agricultural Fair

History was made in Belleville Friday when the first school Fair has ever been held in Belleville took place at King George School. The weather was satisfactory and the interest shown by the pupils was exceedingly gratifying to those who have laboured so hard to put the exhibits.

The fair was under the auspices of the Ontario Department of Agriculture and the King George School and Home Study, and although the efforts of Principal Kells and Assistant Principal Bryans, the fair was a huge success. Old members of Orier St. School were also present to act as judges and help the fair to the best of their ability. The "old boys" got behind the scheme and headed by Master-of-ceremonies Chas. F. Hamm made things hum in and around the school.

The auditorium where the entries were displayed, presented a beautiful picture in the various gaily decorated for the occasion. The different entries were displayed upon tables and neatly lined-up so that the visitors could pass upon the array. Flowers, vegetables, fruit, home cooking and other domestic articles were all exhibited, making a picture which will long be remembered by those who had the opportunity of being present. BATTLE FOR SECOND PLACE STILL RAGING

Yanks Win From Senators to Make Margin Dividing Slim

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr.)
(Associated Press Sports Writer).

The belated rush of the New York Yankees, which has provided most of the thrills for the American League campaign since the Athletics clinched the pennant, has put the final decision as to whether the Yanks or Washington will finish in second place up to today's closing doubleheader between the teams. And as long as Babe Ruth is there socking the ball, the Yanks are not conceding a thing to their rivals.

Things began to look a bit doubtful for the Yankees a couple of days ago when, after getting into second place with ten straight victories, they dropped back by losing to Cleveland then dropped the second opener to the Senators to fall a game and a half behind. But yesterday Ruth led them back into the thick of the battle with an 8 to 5 triumph.

It was a battle of home runs most of the way with one costly error tossed in to complete Washington's downfall. And the Babe outdid them all by clouting his 45th and 46th homers of the year to regain the Major League lead from Lou Gehrig. First Joe Judge socked one to give the Senators a 2-0 lead. Then Herb Hunter, a green rookie southpaw pitcher, surprised everyone in the stadium, including himself, by driving a homer into the bleachers and Ruth brought the count up to 2-3 with his first of the game.

Babe Tied Count.

The Babe tied the count in the eighth with homer 46 and started a rally that drove Alvin Crowder from the box and brought in five runs to decide the battle. Crowder retired with two on bases and Fred Marberry got the second man out. With safety in sight, Ben Rice muffed Lazzeri's easy fly and let two runs in. Pennock singled to send home another and Earle Combs cleaned things up by hitting the fifth homer of the game.

If either the Yankees or Washington can win both games today, that team will clinch second place but an even break will put this up to Sunday's closing contest, New York against Philadelphia and Washington against Boston.

Ruth's Wild For A's.

Only one other game was played in the Major League yesterday and that revealed that Philadelphia's Athletics have another good pitcher who had not been counted on. Lew Krause, an 18-year-old youngster, who was graduated from Lower Merion (Pa.) High School in 1930, made his debut with the Athletics as starting pitcher by holding the Boston Red Sox to seven hits in winning 7 to 1. A two-base error by Dykes and a passed ball gave the Boston team its one run, while the champions pounded Durham and Lisenbee for eleven hits, including them in two three-run innings.

In order that they may raise some finances for this year's hockey team the Belleville Amateur Athletic Association are selling a new Ford car. The car may be seen on Front Street most any day and it is hoped that the sporting public will get behind the enterprise and back it to the limit. The tickets have been severely cut to cents so that all may be able to "get in the swim" and help promote hockey for Belleville this season. The B.A.A.A. have come to quite an expense in order that good hockey will be seen in Belleville this winter and it is hoped that the sporting fraternity of this district will help the cause as much as possible. Some of the local hockey players are at present selling tickets for the car so step up boys and give them a hand.

The weather is getting pretty cold for softball and the question at present is: "When is the play-off in the City league going to start?" From the soldiers, firemen and Kiwanis are waiting the chance to get at the league leading R. of C. boys in the play-offs.

Coach Les. Shields gave the R.C.I. "riders" a real work-out last evening. He put them through a smart half-hour's physical culture training and finished with some real snappy scrimmages. This afternoon at 1.30 p.m., the R.C.I. juniors battle the C.C.I. Albert College kids, while at 3 p.m. the local seniors take on the Picton Collegiate squad. Coach Shields will no doubt start Reynolds, Philp and Graves in the back-field for his seniors. Reynolds will no doubt do the kicking and his ability to boot the "pig-skin" is above the average seen around Belleville. Coach Shields seems very optimistic over the chances of this year's team in both the junior and senior groups.

Not only is "Flexi" Gibson leaving town, but, now we hear that "Tommy" Pointer has had an offer to leave Belleville. It is about time the executive of the Belleville Intermediate called a public meeting of the baseball fans to see exactly how the baseball situation stands in Belleville. The time to organize a baseball team is in the autumn not just before the baseball season opens.

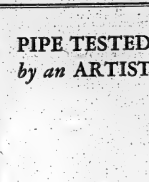
For the information of the local football fans we are publishing the revised schedule of the Intercollegiate and Big Four leagues.

There has been a revision of the senior football schedule for the coming season. The final and correct schedule is as follows:

INTERCOLLEGIATE

October 10—Queen's at Varsity; Sportsmen at McGill.
October 17—Varsity at McGill; Western at Queen's.
October 24—Western at Varsity; McGill at Queen's.
October 31—Queen's at Western; Queen's at McGill.
November 7—Western at Montreal; Ottawa at Hamilton.
November 14—Montreal at Ottawa; Hamilton at Argonauts.

According to figures furnished by a dealer in sporting goods it will cost about $150 per man to equip a large university football team. Here are the approximate figures: Headgear, $15; jersey $7. 50; pants, $10; pads, $15; shoulder pads, $17.



The exhibition of wrestling given by Stanley Stasiak and Cas Sommarstrom at the Bella Theatre last evening gave the fans a thrill that almost drew them out of their seats. Both of these men are real showmen and give the fans plenty of action.

Business Contracts Cancelled With American Firms

St. Thomas, Sept. 26.—The decline of the Canadian dollar on the New York Stock Exchange is resulting in the cancellation of business contracts made by local firms with firms in the United States. One fuel dealer has cancelled an order for several cars of coke, placed with a Detroit firm, and has announced that he will buy his fuel in Canada until the monetary situation improves.

Canada supplies about one-third of the world's annual wheat requirements.

"I smoke a pipe, and in my pipe I smoke Turret, the real pipe tobacco. I like it, and I'll tell you why! It has a flavour and aroma that I like; it is cool smoking, and it burns a long time. These are the qualities I want in a pipe tobacco.

My hand goes to my pocket for my pipe after breakfast; again after lunch; then, in the evening and, in between those very special times,—a few other pipefuls as well. I'm a rather heavy smoker —but with Turret pipe tobacco it really makes no difference because there's no bite, no matter how much I smoke."

NEW GRASSES DEVELOPED IN WALES, HARDIER AND LATER

Five New Varieties To Be Offered English Farmer

THEIR VALUES

London, Sept. 26.—(By The Canadian Press)—The making of two blades of grass to grow where one grew before.

This has been accomplished by Professor Stapledon at the Welsh Plant Breeding Station, Aberystwyth, who has bred leafy pedigree grasses which often give twice as big a yield as the plants grown from foreign seed. Also, they are hardier and have a longer growing period. In a year or two these superior grasses are expected to be on the market for the benefit of British farmers.

The importance of this achievement is emphasized by Dr. O. McConkey, who during two years' leave from the Guelph Agricultural College, Ontario, has studied the subject of grass cultivation at Cambridge, Aberystwyth, Aberdeen and various agricultural centres in this country, and in Continental countries.

In his monograph on his investigations entitled "Recent advances in pasture management," Dr. McConkey points out that since grass is the raw material of milk, butter, cheese, meat, mutton, wool and hides, pasture is the Empire's most important crop. The products of grass from the land of the total exports from New Zealand, 60 per cent. from Australia and over half from the Irish Free State.

About 70 per cent. of the total area of the British Isles consists of grassland, and it is estimated that the British grass crop—that is the home production of grassland products—is worth $625,000,000 a year.

The total annual consumption of grassland products in the United Kingdom reaches the enormous sum of $1,875,000,000, or nearly $50 per capita, while of wheat is only $500,000,000.

"The limiting factor for the production of these products is not the number of cattle and sheep, which can be increased indefinitely, but the raw material which they transform," states Dr. McConkey.

"With a fundamental understanding of the 'pasture animal complex' it is possible to grade up the pastures of the Empire, as has been demonstrated in a practical way in various regions, to an increased carrying capacity from anything between 50 and 100 per cent, a practical possibility of no small economic importance to the British Commonwealth."

Dr. McConkey remarks that one of the first impressions of a Canadian visiting England is the apparent low consumption of fresh milk, and the difficulty of securing fresh cool bottled milk in restaurants and homes, and he considers a practical step in relief of the agricultural depression would be the development of this potential market by marketing a higher grade, standard fresh cool bottled product which appeals to the consumer, or the first time in the history of agricultural research there 'had been a strong co-ordinating influence throughout the Empire. Grassland studies had been 'the task of this co-operative effort. A world search for new grasses is suggested by Dr. McConkey. 'There is no doubt that careful exploration in Scandinavia and Russia would yield strains valuable for Canada," he says. "The best drought resistant grass in Western Canada today was brought over from Hungary."

RAH RAH BOYS BRING COONSKIN COATS OUT IN ANTICIPATION OF SUCCESSFUL FOOTBALL SEASON

McGill, Queens, 'Varsity and Western Squads Will Be Stronger

"SHAG" BACK

Forward Pass Will Increase Interest in Fall Pastime

(By Jack Hambleton,

Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Toronto, Sept. 26.—The boys and girls who—according to story books—wear coonskin coats and all that sort of thing are becoming enthusiastic as usual about the coming rugby season. From McGill, Varsity, Queen's and Western comes the word that all the spectacular features of Intercollegiate football are linked again this year—and then some. For this year, of course, the forward pass will add a little more color, a little more pep, and a little more excitement to the already over-excited college boys.

Forward Pass Threat

This year with the forward pass looming as a possible threat and adding to the tricky plays in which the wiliness gridders promise to add still further to the delights of college rugby. For it is a threat, and a powerful one. Even more than in the pre-suicide-clause days the lone will soar overhead, and the triple-threat man who kicks, runs and throws with equal facility may now enter the headlines just as much as the man who kicks alone. To the linemen too, will go much of the glory, for without protection the thrower will be just as helpless as the kicker, who once the bulwarks betose him melt away from the opposition onslaught.

U. of T. Strong

Just in case anyone might think interest lagged in Hart House, it may be pointed out that eighty players appeared at the initial practice when training first began, and University of Toronto expects to be well up at the end of the season. A great deal of their hope is based on Jack Sinclair, outstanding lineman, who in three games last year scored every point. Sinclair has not yet turned out but there seems to be no fear that he will not be as flashy as his intentions. "He will be here in Hart House" and while Toronto has lost some valuable men through graduation, they still have Galloway, Keith, Bennett, Dewar, Fitzpatrick, Henderson, Wood, Jim Sinclair, Ferguson, Pocock and Twaites, with a strong probability of Knox, Scott, Wilson and Art Snider will be out later. But besides the veterans there are dozens of others who are trying to make that Varsity team.

Old McGill to Fore

The battle cry of "What's the matter with Old McGill" is as likely to be heard at the end of the season as it ever was, despite earlier pessimistic reports from Montreal. The knowing ones watching the eastern squad, "Shag" Shaughnessy is coach again and Shag knows his football as well as anyone ever did. Captain Don Young, D'Arcy Doherty and Sammy Grauer arrived in Montreal a little late last week, but they are here in force. If anything, Shag needs a kicker and he may have just that in Lyall Lashley of Ottawa, and then a chap named Cakero, who hails from Southern California, looks like a useful man for McGill.

Tri-Color Is Ready

So far as the Tri-color is concerned, last season's champions are waiting no time. And Kingston may again be the home of the Intercollegiate championship, altho' there is plenty of opposition in sight. Howard Cartag, premier kicking halfback, has been attending practice regularly and is already in tip-top shape. He still retains his kicking ability, but in addition has developed into a useful thrower, that should make him more valuable.

Ralph and Glass, outside wings, are also back and are fighting for the positions left vacant by Goupley and Declans. In addition to Carter, Gilmore, Davis, Day and McWilliams, missed on the half line. Caldwell may not play this year. He is waiting to hear the result of the supplementary examinations and several others are hanging back from the same cause.

Western Ranks High

Western, which last year boasted of the strongest line in Intercollegiate rugby, may rank considerably higher than they did last year. Coach Joe Breen has a lot of good material and he himself is an expert at shipping players into shape. McLachlin, who exploited last year's squad, with Kewpie Kennedy, have been going great guns in practice. And then of course, there are Wall, Quigley, Small and Patterson all available. But in addition to this imposing list, Breen has Brown, Quigley, Bryant, Tweedsmuir and others. Johnny Dunton, former Windsor star, has already turned out. And among the new material Jack Schatz is a lively quarterback. The Mustangs have improved steadily since they first entered the big league, and with any kind of break this year should be well up among the leaders.

Friends:
Once there was a young man who wanted a chance to work up, and he got his wish. right away. He hired out as a paperhanger, who gave him a job hanging a ceiling. He hung so many ceilings that he got so he had to put his shoes on over his head. The most prominent feature of his face was his Adam's Apple. From then his head sloped back like the roof of a woodshed. This gave him a very peculiar appearance, especially after a barber carelessly removed both of his eyebrows while shaving the back of his neck.

And yet he led a rather happy life. Things with that young man was always looking up, because he was a dwarf. He was built that way, look. Short skirts meant nothing to him. I speak about the young man, however, for a noble purpose. When you see a man going around with his chin where his forehead ought to be, and his forehead where his cadronche ought to be, do not think he is proud. He may be a paperhanger. He may have had a job on a wallpaper on a ceiling with one hand, and cause it will be closer, look. Short skirts meant nothing to him. I speak about the young man, and make it stick on upside down. That is how he got that way.

So don't judge people by appearances. The man with a bald head and that you see gazing to right and left and front and back and side-ways has been a victim of a case of escaped criminal. No such luck. He may be a man who is out of man with the gray beard and the liver-spots and the shaky hands that you see sitting in front of the office building. He may be a lawyer. He may be a salesman who was told to wait, that the boss was in a conference.

"MASTER SOMETHING EVERY DAY," SCHOLARS ADVISED

J. Buchanan Gives Whole some Advice at King George School

KEEN CONTESTS

Encouragement in the quest of self-improvement is, indeed, most enthusiastically and painstakingly given to the pupils of King George Public School. North Front Street, by the Principal, teachers and the Home and School Association, which is composed of the pupils' parents. The annual Field Day, which was held in the spacious auditorium of the school, Friday, undoubtedly served to stimulate a happy interest in many activities both in and outside the classroom, the results of which are the creating of self-confidence and the spirit of emulation.

The evening session was very interesting and enjoyable. Parents and pupils filled the auditorium to capacity. The main events were the boys' public speaking contest; the girls' public speaking contest; the first aid competition (open to boys and girls); the drawing of the lucky number for the door prize and quilt, and the awarding of prizes.

Mr. S. A. Sills, the Principal of the school, opened the programme with a few happy remarks, in which he welcomed Mr. J. Buchanan, Director of Agricultural Extension in connection with the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, and he delegated to Mr. Buchanan the duties of chairman for the evening.

Mr. Buchanan's position as director of extension covers all the work done by the institution outside the institution, such as lectures, demonstration work, the publication of bulletins dealing with investigations made by the college. Last year over 76,000 letters were written to farmers in reply to questions regarding their problems. Instructors are supplied for short agricultural courses in all the counties of the province. In Hastings County the course lasts for three months and this year it will commence in the last week of November at Springbrook farm. Buchanan is a member of the first School and Home Association ever formed in Canada in 1905 at the Macdonald Consolidated High School at Guelph, which is situated on the grounds of the Ontario Agricultural College.

Mr. Buchanan's address to the pupils and to the members of the School and Home Association was brief but during the proceedings, in his capacity as chairman he made numerous remarks bearing upon the work of the pupils.

Report Expert

Mr. Buchanan emphasized that it is only right that parents should, at a good time, but he pointed out that the most enjoyment is derived by being expert in the pursuits followed in search of a good time. The proper method is to develop interest by mastering the work or play engaged in. Be a ball player, strive to be a good ball player; if a gardener, strive to be a good gardener—endeavor to become expert in all activities entered into. There is no enjoyment in learning to play the piano, but when it has been mastered and one becomes proficient—then comes enjoyment. Likewise in the class rooms and in all school life—take an interest—strive to master something every day and with the accomplishment of masterly will comes enjoyment—a real spirit of pride in all of yourself that the material will allow and keep me weak.

Chin's Success

Mr. Buchanan complimented the King George School Home and School Association, upon the great success which it has achieved very told of how the associations "have grown under their have become federated with headquarters in Toronto under the supervision of permanent officers. The benefits derived in the interests of the school and pupils by bringing into active association the teachers and parents, has been marvellous—mutual interests and co-operation will accomplish great things.

The public speaking contest was delivered by three boys and three girls, all of whom acquitted themselves well. The girls were: Lorna Howard, Greta Flindall, and Margaret Lane. Only one prize was awarded, it was awarded to Lorna Howard. The boys were: Peter Orpwood, Clifford Bennett and Raymond Colbourne. Peter Orpwood won the boys' prize.

In the First Aid competition four teams entered—two of girls and two of boys. The winners were: Anna Gerrow and Jean Spruit; Myra Bell and Thelma Hoskins.

The boys were: Frank Lancaster and James Gill., Max Bone and Harry Parsons.

Anna Gerow and Jean Spruce were the girl winners and Frank Lancaster and James Gill carried off the boys' prize.

Interesting Contest

The prize for winning the guessing contest, "How many jelly beans in a bottle was won by Mr. Gill. George Gerrow, the correct number was 1084, and Mr. Gill guessed 1081. The prize was a quilt of beautiful pillow cases donated by Mrs. T. Mason.

The draw for the beautiful spread was won by Miss Dorothy Hammett in Grade Five. The prize was donated by Mrs. James Miller.

The draw for a very handsome quilt was won by Mr. Sills. Ref 51 Charles street. The quilt was made by the large members of the Home Circle.

Depreciation Hits U. S. Workers Here

Simcoe, Ont., Sept. 25 (C.P.) - Depreciation of the Canadian dollar constitutes a real boon to workmen for men from the United States who have been helping to harvest the tobacco crop in Norfolk county and district.

They have been paid off by their employers in Canadian money which is being distributed at rates varying from 10 to 30 per cent at points on the international boundary. Some of them are accepting American money at the 10 per cent. discount levied by local banks. Others are depositing their money in local banks in the hope the Canadian currency will shortly return to par.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

Slowly she pulled off her riding boots and gingerly rubbed her little steps, then looked up.

"There's a lot of lunch still in that saddlebag, Don Ted, and some spring water in the canteen."

Ratcliffe sat on the ground what remained of the lunch, then sat beside her. He got out his cigarettes and divided them into two piles.

"When the last one is smoked, we go to sleep."

With his knife he cut dry branches of chaparral and soon had a small fire blazing.

"Not that we need the heat," he commented, "but this is always the thing to do, Besides, I like the way it makes your eyes glisten."

These glistening eyes are going to be closed in sweet slumber before many cigarettes. I must be in sad condition to tire from a thirty-mile ride." She wiped her face before the fire.

Ted went again to the herd, and brought up the saddle-blanket. Adela sighed in contentment. "Not half bad, is it? She yawned while the smoke from their cigarettes drifted toward the crackling flames. "Ever since I can remember I've wanted to get lost in the desert," she added.

"By yourself?"

"Dios, no.—Always with some big, broad-shouldered man who would find me soft blankets over my feet. Thanks. I've spent many nights on the desert out with the cattle hands, but I've never been lost. Sometimes, I remember, I would imagine myself lost, and then this unknown horseman would always come galloping over the sands and snatch me up into the saddle and take me home. And sometimes he would be lost and couldn't get home and would spend the night out here where the coyotes howled and eyes and glare into the fire. That always made me shiver, and I'd close my eyes feeling. Do boys ever have such foolish dreams?"

"Sometimes. What was your dashing rescuer like?"

"Oh, he was always changing. I was very fickle about my escorts. At times he was dark and stout for Spanish and had a mandolin hung over his saddle, and sometimes he was slender and soft-voiced and had blue eyes. Yes, there were all kinds. After all, why limit yourself to one man in your dreams? But then, you see, I've never known men except the gilded youths at Mexico City, where uncle sent me each year. Even when I was in school in the Blanca, my uncle gave strict orders. She looked up with those frank blue eyes. "You know, besides Don Bob, I've never really known any Americans."

"No gringos?" He smiled.

She shook her head. "Certainly no very nice ones—like you."

Ted threw mesquite on the fire until it leaped again and crackled like a thousand roasting chestnuts. On the further side of the fire he spread out the girl's poncho and placed the saddle at its head. The saddle-blanket was already dry and warm from the flames, and this he laid over the poncho. The result he contemplated dubiously.

"I've seen softer-looking beds, but it will be warm enough unless the night turns cool. Try it."

Obediently she rolled up in the blanket and laid her head on the saddle. Looking up she made a face at him.

"This isn't going to be either warm or soft, Don, but it's life in the great Southwest."

She closed her eyes. "Dios, but I'm tired," she murmured.

For an hour Ted sat smoking and at last, replenishing the fire with wood, he lay down beside it. Already the girl's eyes were closed, and her hands were clasped about the saddle-horn. He stooped and pulled the blanket higher about her throat, for a cool current of air was pouring down out of the mountains. For a brief second she opened her eyes.

"Good night, dear," she told him, and went to sleep again.

CHAPTER XVII.

Dawn had already brightened into sunrise when Ted awoke. He rose, cold and stiff from hours on the hard sand, and looked about him. Mist was still rising from the desert, and as yet the sunlight held no warmth. Tethered in a clump of mesquite, the mules raised their heads and whinnied impatiently.

Ted looked up. "Arise," he said half aloud, "you're hungry and thirsty, and you've got nothing on me."

A rustling in the saddle blanket made him turn. Two sleepy eyes were being rubbed, and a mop of hair frantically smoothed into submission.

"If you look at me now I'll take the veil," a sleepy voice warned him. "Just wait—my dressing-rooms have their drawbacks."

So he set about arranging what little they had left of the food, and slowly saddled Adela's mare. At last he came back to the gray embers of the fire, and at her low laugh looked up.

She was pulling on her boots. "When uncle catches up with us all that has ever happened is going to seem dull and tame," she said, and for no reason at all she began to sing a Spanish song.

"When Jim catches up, I'll have a first-class fight on my hands," he prophesied. "I'll perhaps, another with your uncle."

"Oh, no. Uncle would never descend to anything so uncertain. He'll just order his vaqueros to fetch you to pieces." Then, suddenly serious, she added, "It is possible that Jim will be raving when he finds us together. I'm dreading to see his face—and his gun. Even if it's terribly hard for you."

"I promise. But if he comes at me with blood in his eyes, I may have to do a little shadow boxing."

"He must not. I couldn't endure a contest between you two."

Her hand touched his arm and she looked up at him. "Out here in this desert country one hasn't too many friends. Our friendship, it has been a very beautiful beginning. I don't want to lose it. I don't want anything to spoil it."

"Nothing could spoil it," he answered. For a long moment they stood silent, close to each other, scarcely breathing. Their lips made no sound, spoke no word, while a message, tender but infinitely precious, passed between them as they stood there on the desert's edge, then together they moved toward the horse, still waiting in silent disapproval of delay.

As he stooped to hold her stirrup, Adela laid both hands on Ted's shoulders. In her own eyes he caught a shadow of foreboding. He felt her fingers tighten for a moment.

"It has been good, this being alone together back in the hills. I want to tell them in Mexico between us two, whatever comes." Her fingers still clutched down into his arms, then suddenly she released him and swung into the saddle.

"I'm going to ride the first hour and you the second hour," she told him, as they moved toward the dark outline of Eagle Rock. "Even in riding backs I can help with a fine swinging stride that's a joy to see."

But walking was to prove unnecessary. For down among the mesquite they first saw a faint movement that neared and became a shadowy cloud of riders and horses slowly making its way out of the desert up toward the pass. Then these two were descending. For a time they watched the slow, trudging figures, then Adela clapped her hands in delight.

"It's Anton, and his Yaquis, returning to their mountain home. He will let you have something with four legs."

The thoughts flashed back to the encounter between the Yaquis and Morning Star days ago. For a moment he hesitated. Then the memory of Anton's men caught sight of him and broke into a wild cheer. Almost at once three warriors detached themselves and pounded up the slope at a dead run. Anton himself trotted behind, holding the hand of each a moment in his own while he listened silently to the girl's tale. At times his black eyes turned to the young Texan, but always they returned to Adela. At last he stepped forward and put the reins of his own horse in Ted's hand.

"Yours to ride," he announced in curt, unconscious English, and there was a great friendliness in his smile. "My young men follow in morrow and bring horse back." Then he turned to the girl, speaking in Spanish too rapid and low for Ted to understand. At the end he touched the girl's hand, nodded his saddlife, and then silver of them could thank him had jumped up behind the hands of one of his braves.

Ted mounted. "That's what I call service. What did Anton say?"

"He was telling me the way and offering to lend me one of his men to go with us. But we don't need him. According to Anton, two hours' ride will put us in sight of the hacienda. And now let's see what that Indian pony's good for." At a fast canter she led the way and across the brown sand. The sun rose higher. Far out toward the horizon a thousand heat waves shimmered and once in the east the mirage of a lake arose, beckoned, and faded. For a time they rested, then pressed on down the long slope. Near the bottom they reined their horses to a halt, and in the same instant both made out the swaying trees behind the hacienda barely ten miles away.

The girl looked back at the circuitous way they had come. She shook her head, and a look of chagrin came into her eyes.

Ted laughed. "As a pathfinder—" he began.

"Don't. We must have come miles out of our way. I'm thinking of uncle. What a night he must have spent—and what he's going to say."

"But, what can he say? What is there to say? We went riding and got lost for a night in the foothills. He'll probably joke about your woodcraft and drop it."

Adela made no reply. She was looking down toward a dry stream, course where, in a clump of oak brush, a dark object stood. She shaded her eyes against the desert's glare, then nodded.

"It's Jip. He's been hunting us." She waved her hand, but the far-off rider made no sign.

"This will do it," Ted said, and fired twice in the air.

A moment later the distant rider stopped in his track, wheeled and came at full gallop toward them.

"That young man's face," said Adela, "would seem to mean a tremendous welcome. Wait here. I want to deal with him myself. No, wait, please, for me." She spurred her horse ahead as Jito's black, foam-flecked stallion thundered up to them. The Mexican's eyes were blazing. Ted watched quietly.

21st BATTALION HOLDS 13th ANNUAL REUNION

Battle Honours Tell Story of 21st Battalion's Service to the Empire in War's Great Struggle

Over 4000 Men, Served With Famous Unit In France

HEAVY CASUALTIES

29 Officers, 806 N.C.O.'s and Men Lost Their Lives

324 AWARDS

Famous Regiment Always Held Objective Taken

Today the 13th annual re-union of former members of the 21st Battalion is being held in Belleville. The 21st Battalion has been engaged in preparations for the past couple of months for what promises to be one of their most successful gatherings. Twice before, in 1923 and 1926, large numbers of them in service men assembled in Belleville, and it must be apparent to those who were interested in this unit during the years of the Great War and since that the spirit of "esprit de corps" which was such a factor in its accomplishments has survived, in no limitakeable degree his test of time.

At the outset, Belleville's representatives in this Battalion were in "D" Company, which, under Major J. F. Khnitt, secretized Hastings county in those of arms. The present head of the local club, T. F. Jordan, who has attended all of the re-unions since 1919, was formerly R.S.M. T. F. Jordan, M.C., D.C.M., M.-Maj. Hinchey, one of his active supporters in the Belleville Club was Bandmaster of the 21st.

Brief review of the 21st Battalion, Canadian Infantry (Eastern Ontario Regiment), is not only timely, at this unit of the Dominion's contribution to the Great War, but effective during these trying and excessively anxious years of the Great War is found worthy of recalling memory, as are others.

Mobilized in Kingston

Mobilized in Kingston on Nov. 1st, 1914, the personnel being recruited, without the slightest difficulty, from the counties forming Eastern Ontario, the 21st, as a unit of the 6th Canadian Infantry Brigade, sailed from Montreal on May 20th 1915, and, following intensive training, left Salisbury Plain for the Sandling Camp, Kent, England, this Battalion disembarked at Boulogne, France, on Sept 16th, that year. It was in the Ypres sector, opposite Messines, four days later.

Fighting and Trench Tears

In addition to participating in practically every battle in which the Canadians were engaged, and carrying out, with distinction also, a number of other operations, the 21st did, in all, 63 tours in the trenches, from Ypres distant to the Somme, east of Albert. This included the three periods spent south of Arras in the spring of 1918 when the 2nd Division of Sir Arthur Currie's command was attached to Sir Julian Byng's Third Army, necessary reinforcements when the Germans, on March 21st, launced their last desperate attempt to blast their way through to Paris.

The 21st's last experience of the war was on Nov. 9th, when in pursuit of the retreating enemy, it advanced 1,400 yards, it liberated a score of villages and halted at the Belgian frontier, 4½ miles as the south-east of Mons. The Armistice was signed within 24 hours.

Marching into Germany

Marching into Germany with the Army of Occupation, this Battalion crossed the Rhine at Bonn, leading its Division, and was at Siegburg or on the line of control for over a month, then, returning to Bonn, going by train, it waited, at Hannau-Sannbre, orders to return to England, thence to the home land. The 21st, following a splendid public reception, was demobilized in Kingston on May 24th, 1919.

Emblazoned on its colours, in custody of the Princess of Wales Own Regiment, Kingston, which is on the line of control for over a month, then, returning to Bonn, is the following record of its service, which it was entitled: Somme, 1916, 1918; Pierre-Cornerette, Arras, 1917, 1918; Vimy, 1917; Hill 70; Passchendaele; Amiens, 1918; Arras, 1918; Pursuit to Mons; France and Flanders, 1915-1918.

The 21st, in common with other Battalions with records of outstanding achievement during the conflict, was commended on several occasions by Sir Douglas Haig, in the matter of individual acts of bravery, conspicuous leadership and devotion to duty a small proportion were recognized by awards of decorations. Doubtless the Victoria Cross was won several times, but Regimental Headquarters only has 324 awards to its credit, as follows:

Officers—Bar to the Distinguished Service Order, 1; D.S.O., 7;

Bar to the Military Cross, 8; M.C. 39; Bar, Distinction, 2;

First -Class Warrant Officers—M.C., 1;

N.C.Os. and Men—Distinguished Service Medal, 6; Foreign, 8,

Mentioned in Despatches ...including the members of the original Battalion, the 21st's total strength during its four and a half years of existence exceeded 4,000 officers, non-commissional officers and men. The official figure is 4,191, but as hundreds of drafts were returned, a large number of them twice and some as a third time, they were recorded each time as a reinforcement, the Nominal Roll omits and other ranks, who served in the unit in more than one draft.

Most lamentably of this roll 29 officers and 806 N. C. Os. and men were either killed in action or died of wounds. The few, who succumbed to disease are not included in these figures, nor is there a record available of the many who have "passed on" since termination of hostilities of disabilities occasioned by active service.

What an appalling toll in just one battalion. The other casualties are classified: Non-fatal wounds, 83 officers, 3,130 O.Rs.; gas, 10 and 125; injured, 6 and 267.

Casualties were heaviest during the fighting of September and October of 1916, in the attack at Vimy in April, 1917, and in the advances east of Arras and of Arras in August, 1918. In that period 101 were killed and 1,000 of wounds and 477 others were wounded. It is interesting that during 1918 reinforcements totalled 2/3 strength of the entire battalion. Former members of the 21st take favorable pride in the fact that a large number, only 13 became prisoners of war, and most of these were captured while wounded. Though at the beginning the 21st Battalion, its territorial designation, was almost exclusively Eastern Ontario, as the war carried on many of the replacements it received had joined up from other parts of this Province in the Maritimes, and, probably a few came from west of the Great Lakes.

Officers and others from the 39th, 58th, 154th, 155th; the 156th, and 157th Battalions, which had their origin came in drafts, as well as from Militiamen recruited in the more central areas of the Province, but all had originally belonged to the 21st of New Brunswick. Toward the end of the war some newcomers arrived in the Kilts of their Nova Scotian corps, which they finally relinquished for trousers.

Officers Commanding

"Brig.-General W. St. J. Hughes, D.S.O., of Ottawa, Superintendent of Penitentiaries, was the original commander of the 21st, at the commencement of the war he was of the F.W.O.R., Kingston. In July, 1916, when he was promoted to the command of the 10th Infantry Brigade of the newly-formed 4th Canadian Division, he was succeeded by Major Elmer W. Jones, who had been second-in-command of "D" Company, who had arved with the Brockville Rifles.

Lieut.-Colonel Jones was wounded at Vimy Ridge, Major T. F. Khnitt, in pre-war days with the 43rd Regiment of Ottawa, stepped into the command. He subsequently got it rank of Lieut.-Colonel, retired on account of ill health, and returned in the early autumn. His too, was awarded the D.S.O.

Upon the death, at Amiens, of Col. Jones, D.S.O. (and bar), the second senior officer, Major F. S. Pense, D.S.O., M.C., formerly with General Hughes' unit in Kingston, who had risen from Lieutenant of No. 1 Platoon, "D" Company, to command, and as Col. Pense did not relinquish this post until the unit was "disembodied," it always had at its head officers appointed to it from the Militia Force of Canada for the raising of the Second Canadian Contingent.

These are some of the principal officers of the 21st Battalion, which has active clubs in Kingston, Ottawa, Belleville, Peterborough, Toronto and Oshawa.

Comrades of Old 21st Receive Warm Welcome

21st Battalion members hold the keys of the city today. It is their thirteenth annual reunion. Five years ago the members met here and had so pleasant a gathering that they decided to come back this year.

This afternoon a party of the battalion will decorate the graves of former 21st Battalion comrades in the cemetery here.

The battalion members meet at the armouries and parade this evening through the city streets and return to the armouries for their banquet, good fellowship and business meeting.

The unit is welcomed to Belleville after thirteen years since the war's end. It has many close ties with this city and the Belleville comrades and the citizens greet the men of the years 1914-1918.

LIBRARY CORNER

The story of a great navigator, a contemporary of Drake, Raleigh, Frobisher, and Gilbert, is told by Gilbert is told by Philip Gosse in his book "Sir John Hawkins." Hawking, who set sail to the Spanish in a period which boasted so many famous seamen, is shown by this biographer as being ill-deserving of the name "Sea Dog." Gosse thinks the term pictures some loud voiced rough-hearted, uncouth figure, unlikely clad, coarse in body and in mind and completely ignorant of his surroundings. The story is an exciting one, as it is told by Gosse in the Great Armada, the slave traffic, and the pirates and will appeal to all readers who like adventure.

A second publication is the intimate story of a man who, five hundred and fifty years ago tried to make himself master of the world, and who was successful in everything he undertook. The career of this remarkable figure is told by Harold Lamb in "Tamerlane, the Earth Shaker." Born in Central Asia, he rose from being a gentleman of little consequence to the throne as Emperor of Tartary. He overcame armies, tore down cities and rebuilt them in his own way, and gathered together the wealth of nations to spend among those favored by his court. He still today in the motif of domestic architecture in Persia, which he introduced in the Taj Mahal, built by one of his great grandchildren. The author sees Tamerlane through the eyes of the men who rode at his side and "Tamerlane" in the year 1336 A.D.

Many punning and unusual Britishisms and cases are unearthed by Charles Kingston in "Enemies of Society." Mr. Kingston has a relative style, this chronicle of crime recalls all the excitement circumstances of such mysteries. As "The-dare-devil murder and "The London brute murder". The book contains many names of famous members of the bar including the Marquis of Reading, Sir Edward Marshall Hall and Lord Alverstone.

Edward Shann, Professor of History and Economics at the University of Western Australia has made a study of Australian development in "An economic History of Australia." Following the financial history of Australia from the days of its founding in 1788 to the present critical state, Professor Shann concludes that since the war Australia, following the financial policies to eat up the easy gains of a period when plenty and to exceed the effort toward self-sufficiency which she can afford without over-capitalization." He hopes his book will guide those engaged in the task of reconstruction.

Today's Verse

WHAT GOOD'S A GIRL?

What good are girls to me?
I wanted someone who would play at trains,
And splash about in puddles when it rains,
And make mud-pies when Ellen can't bother cooking in the kitchen when she's cooking).
And hide in corners on the stairs at night,
And then jump out to give Aunt Jane a fright.
I only wanted just a boy like me.
And Mummie, when I told her, said she'd see.
I rather resented on her; wouldn't you?
And went and planned a lot of things to do.....
And now they're upside down and in a whirl,
"Cos Mummie's gone and bought a baby girl!"

Brass Band of 21st Battalion In High Place Among War Bands History of Organization at Front

Band Was Novelty in Early Days to 21st Men

FIRST PIPE BAND

Bandmaster Hinchey and 20 Bandsmen Joined From Reserve

WAR SERVICE

Band Closely Associated With Belleville, Nucleus Enlisted Here

Belleville was well represented in the 21st Battalion, Canadian Infantry, and, regardless of the capacities in which they served, men of this city and district shared in creating and maintaining the fine traditions which the ex-members of this unit cherish.

In the list, when hundreds of those who served with the 21st again are making Belleville the point, of a re-union (their thirteenth annual) it is fitting that this Battalion's Brass Band should be mentioned, as its nucleus enlisted here.

Bandmaster A. Hinchey and 20 associates in the band of the 155th Battalion, Ottawa, in Belleville in January, 1916, joined the 21st in Kingston when the 155th, of that unit, replaced some of the casualties sustained in the fighting at Hill 70, near Lens. This group of soldier-musicians had been spoken for by two Western Battalions, but the late Lieut.-Col. Elmer W. Jones, D.S.O., the commanding officer at the time, of the 21st, was instrumental in having them despatched to his unit, from the British Reserve Battalion, which included the 156th.

Band Novelty

With the 21st a Brass Band was a novelty. Only in early days in Kingston in 1914, it had a Pipe Band as well as Buglers and Drummers, and by the time this Battalion was broken up in the late 19th, and 20th as East Sandling Camp, Kent County, no bands in the Canadian forces excelled those of the 21st.

For some many months, however, after arrival on French and Belgian soil, the Buglers, Pipers, Bands and Drummers, back with their companies, were utilized as stretcher and the original personnel of the Pipe Band was broken out by the end of 1916. While acting as first aid men and stretcher bearers, the "Pipes" were always in the line or attack, casualties accounted for.

The Battalion Bandmaster made successful efforts to maintain its Brass Band by absorbing suitable reinforcements.

Original Band

These members of the former 155th Band and others, at the time, soon comprised one of the assets of the unit. The Band, however, originally was: Bandmaster Hinchey, Sergt. C. D. Wilson, Drum-Sergeant, Corpl. J. Wegmark, clarinet; L.-Corpl. Sword, cornet; Bandsman Jack Thompson, trombone; Privats W. O. Wonnacott and Jack Thompson, clarinet; Wm. Ross, Philie; Jesse Brooks and Harry Wallace, saxophones; Bert Hall, Ernest Hall, Burke, E. A. Bland, cornet; Wesley Wegmark and Ernest Wegmark, euphonium; Edwood Maynes, trombone; Edward Bond, euphonium; Wally Parks, Fred Burke and Wm. Mills, bass; "Major" Frost, drums; Jack Herring, drums. Companies, were absorbed as musicians at that time: Private John Bridge, Wm. Bowen, Granger (who as a Lieutenant was recently awarded the Distinguished Ernest Gibson, euphonium; Wm. Thornton, clarinet; Wm. Thornhorn, Ab. Draper, drummer; Ab. Willis, cornet, Jas. Hector Graham, saxophone; Jas. Hector, saxophone; Jas. Hector, saxophone; Jas. Hector

MONCTON HAS HOBO RETREAT

Sing Song, Bridges and Bon-Fires While Away Time

Moncton, N.B., Sept. 26.—If "The Jungle" the visitor will find that rent is an unknown thing, that destitute men live in shacks made of railway ties, and that such things as telephone and light bills are little understood and cause no worry to the inhabitants.

This temporary retreat for the jobless, young and old, ambitious and lazy, is just a fitting way of the many highway between Saint John and Moncton. Gathered at "The Jungle" are many old-timers, but nevertheless the majority are young men. Many of these youths held office and clerical positions before the present era of depression set in, and most of them show the effects from the shock of privation before they have suffered since being discharged.

But while all are much in the same position, the men make the most of their unfortunate lot by having social entertainments to pass away the dull hours and to enliven their spirits. Sing-songs, bon fires and bridge games are engaged in by this group of unemployed workers.

One of the features of the camp is the kitchen, a crudely constructed counter affair. The rations are handed out to one of the members who is assigned the duties of chef. The food is cooked over a fire of coals with a bucket full of holes as the stove.

"REBOUND" AT THE CAPITOL

TO-DAY AN MONDAY

Smart sophisticated comedy-drama, the type as popular with all tastes, and excellent from every angle, describes "Rebound", being featured attraction at the Capitol today and Monday, matinee daily.

The story is especially suited to the star, Ina Claire, and Sara is the kind of character out of which Ina Claire derives the utmost and makes absolutely the most of it.

Sara, a vivacious young lady, falls in love with and marries Bill. But there are complications, because Bill is on the rebound after a love affair with Evie, who has outstanding motion picture of these times.

Acted by a cast of youthful stars, the dramatic episodes of Dreiser's great story live on the screen. Phillipe Holmes, playing the greatest role of his brilliant screen career, as the character of Clyde Griffith, has made a name for himself that the halls of the gripping motion picture. Grant, "An American Tragedy", selected as the opening attraction on the Dollie Theatre Second Anniversary Week. Program commencing Monday where it will be exhibited for three days, matinee daily.

Hailed as the first publication as one of the all-time classics of the American scene, Theodore Dreiser's searching story thrilled millions. The motion picture, directed by the maker of Marlene Dietrich's three recent hits, "The Blue Angel", "Morocco" and "Dishonored", Josef von Sternberg, is likewise the outstanding novels of American life created within the last decade forms pumbed to the wiles of Lennan Pelletan who has eight million dollars to look. Then to add to the mix, Johnny loves Sara.

Unfortunately, Evie does not love her wealthy husband, and still has a Bill under her spell. Then two carry on a brazen flirtation, and Sara miserably realizes that her marriage was a failure. Johnny considers her, but finally persuades Sara to fight Evie on her own ground, with the result that Bill begins to see daylight.

"Rebound" will please all, and Robert Ames as Bill, Robert Williams as Johnny, Myrna Loy as Evie, Hale Hamilton as Lyman Peterson and Hedda Hopper, as Liz, all assist in making this picture a replica of the stage play which enjoyed so much popularity on Broadway.

The Tiffany Chimps, the almost human monkeys, appear in a clever comedy, "Little Covered Wagon," and the Pathe Sound News completes the programme.

Fraser Beattiger at the Capitol

The future of the Capitol is rosy, as evidenced by the bookings scheduled for October. Included in the attractions are "Madonna of the Streets" with Evelyn Brent, (Tuesday and Wednesday) "The Sea Bat", "The Birth of a Nation" "Caught Plastered", (Wheeler and Woolsey, "Too Many Cooks," "Cimarron", (Richard Dix), "Silly Fallsons Deep", (Jack Holt), "The Miracle Woman", (Barbara Stanwyck,) "Five Star Final," (the greatest newspaper drama starring Edward G. Robinson) and many of the season's hits from the 1931-32 output.

TIME TURNS BACK CENTURY IN FILM FROM MARK TWAIN

"School days school days! Oh the golden-rule days!"

Time turned back nearly a hundred years last night at the Belle Theatre when "Huckleberry Finn," Mark Twain's rollicking comedy of youth, opened its two day run, and, young and old alike, seemingly agreed again the "good-old days" with Jackie Coogan as Tom Sawyer, Junior Durkin as Huck Finn, and Mitzi Green as Becky Thatcher.

Again the cast of young featured players who won such a fresh response from movie audiences tired of gangster movies and problem pictures, portray the immortal characters of Mark Twain's story "Huck Finn and Tom" continues the adventures of "Tom Sawyer." More than two hundred lovably old-fashioned youngsters are seen in the picture.

Luckily the proficient adult cast seen in Tom Sawyer has not been tampered with. Clara Blandick again grumbles and groans through the trials of Tom's Aunt Polly, and the jolly Jane Darwell portrays Mrs. Jacks Coogan as Tom Sawyer, Junior Durkin as Huck Finn, and Mitzi Green as Becky Thatcher.

Two notable additions to the adult cast, Eugene Pallette and Oscar Apfel, cast as a pair of desperadoes from whom Tom and Huck rescue two defenseless girls, add a new note of comedy.

Little Jackie Searl again wins hearts with his impudent portrayal of Sid, Tom's annoying little brother.

"Huckleberry Finn" is staged and directed with painstaking care for detail. Norman Taurog, maker of the recent juvenile hit, "Skippy" is credited with the direction. The picture presents one of the few opportunities for unadulterated entertainment the movies give to screen-viewers of all ages.

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 41.

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Within the cabin, lights were burning. Clayton had found an unopened tin of oil and lamps, still usable. Tarzan peered within. He saw his cabin divided into two rooms, partitioned by boughs and sailcloth. The men were reading and talking. He sought the other window. There was the girl.

How beautiful her features—how delicate her snowy skin! She was writing at Tarzan's own table. Upon a pile of grasses lay the negress asleep. For an hour Tarzan feasted his eyes upon the girl as she wrote. How he longed to speak to her! At length she arose, leaving her manuscript.

She went to the bed, loosened her soft mass of golden hair. Below her waist it tumbled, Tarzan was well-bound! Then she extinguished the lamp and all within was darkness. Still Tarzan watched. Creeping close, he waited, listening. At last she was asleep. Cautiously he introduced his arm within the cabin.

Carefully he felt upon the desk. At last he grasped the manuscript. Jane had been writing. Cautiously he withdrew it. Tarzan folded the precious sheets into a small parcel, tucking them into his arrow quiver. Then he melted away into the jungle as softly and as noiselessly as a shadow.

Tarzan awoke early. His first thought was of that writing, hidden in his quiver. How he hoped he could read what the beautiful girl had written. Tarzan suffered a bitter disappointment, baffled by the strange writing. Long he pored over it. Finally he recognized the letters. His heart leaped for joy.

NO ELECTION ANNOUNCEMENT FORTHCOMING

Will Premier Step Aside If General Election is Necessary This Autumn?

Report Says He Will Refuse to Lend Leadership

ASKS FREE HAND

His Mandate is Doctor's Mandate for Diagnosis

London, Sept. 28.—(AP)—Premier Ramsay MacDonald informed the House of Commons today that he hoped to be able to state on Wednesday when the present special session of Parliament would be brought to a close.

His statement put an end to rumors that he would announce today an immediate general election.

London, Sept. 28.—(AP)—Premier Ramsay MacDonald was represented by close friends as having come to the decision that he would step aside in the event that a general election becomes necessary this fall.

He intends to carry on as head of the National Government, it was said, and if the non-partisan project does not draw support from all parties he will refuse to lend his leadership to any one section or party in an appeal to the people. He was said to have demanded a free hand in striving for national unity to tide Great Britain through her financial difficulties or a "doctor's mandate" for maintaining the National Government. He does not propose to be dominated by any one political party, it was said, and again asserts his leadership of the nation.

By a doctor's mandate, a person close to the Prime Minister said Mr. MacDonald meant that he wants to diagnose his country's ills in consultation with the Cabinet and to prescribe necessary remedies, if there is to be a general election. This friend said, Mr. MacDonald does not want to go into the campaign pledged in advance to fight under the Conservative party's tariff banner.

THREE MONTHS FOR VAGRANCY

Man With Many Aliases Convicted in Police Court

James McCallum, alias Mike Cullen, alias William O'Doone, alias Harry Hamilton, with which officials at the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph, for the past three months or for an indefinite period of five years, for vagrancy, having passed on the young man today in police court by Magistrate Mikel. He was charged with vagrancy after a charge of attempting to wound with a revolver, a felony, was lent in the police cells a week ago last September night was withdrawn.

Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan read a lengthy communication from the Mounted Police Department in regard to McCallum, who is the young man's list of convictions, former years and to which McCallum admitted. There were also several convictions registered against this man, ranging from forgery for which he served three years in Dorchester penitentiary, down to vagrancy, to petty thieving in several districts in Ontario. "I never read a rap-like that before," said Mr. Donnan, whereupon the Crown Attorney recommended the three months in the Reformatory, McCallum went into action and he pleaded earnestly to be given a suspended sentence but to no avail.

He stated he was sent to jail when only seventeen years of age and that when a man is down, the police try to keep him down. "I admit I have no work to do, I regards to liquor but I do not take it," he added. Magistrate Mikel declared: Magistrate Mikel believed leniently, stating that likely the accused would talk himself out of the Reformatory, but in view of his experience had he heard a man in his conviction in his defense, but the sentence stood.

Shot Man and Wife In Dispute Over a Grocery Bill

St. Catharines, Ont., Sept. 28.—While a crowd of fifty people looked on, Mek Komb, 48, walked out of his store at Thorold, on Saturday and shot Peter Holoushuk, 46, and his wife, Mary, 36. He was immediately taken into custody by Constable Richard Hughes, who saw the shooting but was powerless to prevent it. Komb appeared in police court on a charge of murder before Magistrate Campbell and was remanded for one week.

A dispute which arose out of Holoushuk's failure to pay a grocery bill was the cause of the double shooting, Komb is said to have told the police. The two men spent a long time early Saturday arguing over the bill. Then Holoushuk left the store, and according to Komb, addressed epithets to him from the street. Komb took a gun walked out of the door and shot him. Then, he went next door to Holoushuk's home, saw his wife in the yard, and shot her too, according to the story he told the police. "Oh, sorry I did not have another bullet for myself," he is alleged to have told the police.

Threatening Letters for Money Precede Barn Fire

GOES TO TORONTO

Van Horne Family in Prince Edward Receive Letters

POLICE PROBE

It appears to be almost a certainty that an anonymous writer letters demanding money, fulfilled his threat that if the information were given to the police he would burn the barn of his selected victim, when the barn, four horses a bull, and the season's crop of Alex Van Horne and his son, Leonard Van Horne, were destroyed by fire about nine-fifteen o'clock, last Friday night. Now that the Van Horne's is located about six miles from Picton and in the North-port in what is known as the Fish Lake district. The father and son received a letter, signed with peculiar letters, demanding, it is understood, that $700 be placed in a certain place and warning that if the police were informed that their barn would be burned. The matter was reported to the Provincial Police and a trap laid for the writer of the letter, but he was on his guard and did not fall into the snare. Following this a second letter was received stating that the writer had watched their operations and that it would be useless to try and catch him as he were clever and left no marks. He also stated that he had at one time entered the house of the Van Horne's and taken a dollars of money, and that only recently he had looked through the window of the house and seen the wife of the younger Van Horne sick in bed and that he would go after her next. The burning of the barn with contents followed. The Provincial Police are working hard on the case and it is also understood that the Provincial Fire Marshall is investigating the fire. It is said that the roars of the bull gave the fire alarm.

Franco-German Parley To Restore Confidence

NEW SWITCH IS AUTOMATIC AND INSULATED

Capacity of New Switch Three Times That Of Old

SUNDAY'S TASK

Two Hours only Required to Make Great Change

While the electric power was off the city for two hours on Sunday morning a modern switch panel was installed in the sub-station of the Hydro on Reid Street. The operations were carried out with expedition despite the immense amount of work to be done. The old board is now torn down.

The new panel eliminates all danger of electrocution to anyone in its vicinity. It is stationed upstairs in the portion of the station which was added last summer. It simplifies and makes it possible that the whole city will not be cut off in the case of any difficulty for one section and by while the other portions are in service. It is automatic and is processed with an alarm system.

Sunday's work consisted of cutting out the old equipment and cutting in on the new board.

The new switch apparatus has a capacity three times the capacity of the old. It is in four sections, one spare, four transformers and a station service section.

If any circuit gets out of order, this does not mean that the whole city had to be shut off built repairs are made. In the event of difficulty on one switch the spare switch is used, and a new switch is run in to take the place of the old.

Ottawa has a similar system, but this is the first of the kind manufactured by the English Electric Company, Ltd., of Toronto and St. Catharines.

A duplicate line of 44,000 volts leading to the plant has been set up so that little short of an earthquake would be required to interrupt the service of the city.

A new type of lightning arresters has been put in position.

The change made on Sunday was the arrangement of the wires. The new installation was supervised by the Ontario Hydro Commission and engineers of the Municipal Electric Bellevile Hydro Commission and will have to pay for this except through power rates which will ultimately pay for it. Bellevile, under the new system would presumably not have been able to ask the Hydro Commission for this installation but the success of municipal ownership has made it possible.

Rev. C. E. Clarke Appointed Rector of Toronto Parish

St. Michael And All Angels is Fine Parish

MR CLARKE'S CAREER

Rural Dean Rev. C. E. Clarke, rector of Christ Church, Belleville, has been appointed to the position of rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Bathurst St. and Lawrence Avenue and Wychwood Street, Toronto, and will take over his new parish on November 1st. He succeeds the late Canon W. J. Main who died very suddenly of heart disease some months ago after having been in charge of the parish since its creation twenty-four years ago.

Story of Parish

The parish of St. Michael and All Angels' began as an independent mission in 1907. The first service was held in a private house. Services were held then in a tent and later in Heron's Hall. In that year the increasing numbers forced the authorities to undertake the construction of a building, the first being erected on the corner of St. Clair Avenue and Bathurst Street.

In 1909 it was moved to the present site and a brick basement con structed affording accommodation for worshippers. In 1914 the new building was finished and developed along dignified architectural lines.

The outbreak of the war held up the building operations but in 1919 the corner stone being laid by the present Bishop of Toronto in November 1915. The following Michaelmas Day the new church was opened. Further additions were added from time to time and in 1924 the remaining portion of the basement was built.

New Building

In 1928 the first building was found to be in a dilapidated condition and as the debt had been wiped out, a new parish house was undertaken. This was completed and is one of the finest parish houses in the city. The story of this parish is one of steady growth and development, and this is just the sort of parish which will call for the fine qualities of Mr. Clarke. His wardens are P. M. Jackson, rector's warden, and Henry Weiland people's warden. The various branches of church work are well organized in this newer part of Toronto.

Mr. Clarke's career: Rev. C. E. Clarke, M.A., is a native of Marlington, Quebec, and received his high school education at Stanstead Wesleyan College. He entered Bishop's University at Lennoxville and graduated with first class honors in classics and won the Prince of Wales medal and scholarship. He followed with a year of teaching in classics and postgraduate study in theology. In 1909 he entered Emmanuel College, Cambridge, England and graduated with high honors, degree in 1906. In the fall of the same year he was ordained deacon and licensed as curate at St. John's Church, Wakefield, England, where he remained for nearly three years. He volunteered for missionary work in Canada, and then for two years he was stationed in Southern Alberta, ministering to the settlers settling along the Borders of the Blood Indian Reserve. In 1913 he was appointed incumbent of Coldwater in Toronto diocese and in 1918 he went to Campbellford as rector. When there he obtained his M.A. degree.

Successful Incumbency

Mr. Clarke has had a most successful incumbency at Christ Church the membership and attend ance of church and school having grown immensely. Every branch of the church has felt the impulse of his zeal and his executive ability. As a preacher Mr. Clarke ranks high, he is a close student of present movements and his sermons are noted for the light they throw on vital activities of the world today. Mr. Clarke's interest in the old faith brings it into vital touch with the people of the present day.

According to his wish the new Church of England the wardens of Christ church will receive petitions in due course from the Bishop of Toronto Diocese, as to the vacancy in the parish. How long it will take to have the parish filled depends on the time taken to make a suitable appointment to meet people and also the time allowed after the appointment before the rector undertakes his new duties.

The departure of Mr. Clarke from Belleville is regretted by his congregation and many other citizens for he has filled no small place in the city's life. Announcement was made at the Wardens and All Angels' on Sunday of appointment of the successor to the late Canon Main.

LAVAL AND BRIAND GREET GERMAN HEADS

Parley of Two Nations to Restore Europe's Confidence

NO POMP TODAY

Suggestion of Mutual Awarding of Contracts

Berlin, Sept. 28—(AP)—Premier Laval of France and his Foreign Minister, Aristide Briand, today shook hands with President Von Hindenburg and went into conference with German Statesmen on measures of cooperation to restore the confidence of Europe.

The conversation between President Von Hindenburg and his guests was purely formal. After the customary exchange of greetings expressed the hope that they would solve the economic problems presented by united efforts in a similar vein.

Their parley with Chancellor Bruening and Foreign Minister Curtius was understood to revolve around the question as to whether Franco-German economic cooperation was possible on a large scale by the financing of Germany's surplus labor with France's surplus Capital.

One suggestion advanced was to finance bridge building and other structural contracts in French Colonies to Germany's benefit. Another suggestion was to provide French credits for specific German concerns strictly on a business basis. The industries mentioned were iron, steel, iron, electrical and chemical.

The French statesmens visit to the President was devoided of military pomp or display. Their black limousine swiftly entered the gate of the executive mansion and drew up to the portico where two steel-helmeted poulins in the Reichswehr uniform snapped to attention.

Ambassador Francois Poncet emerged from the car, followed by M. Laval and M. Briand, and they entered the palace at once. They remained 20 minutes and then left briefly for photographers and motion picture men who had arrived which lifted its hats in greetings.

Not by the date, nor by the policy of endeavoring to hold back the advance of machinery, but by the control and guidance of industrialism is the solution of the present evils to be found, was the opinion expressed by the Rev. C. E. Clarke, speaking on Sunday morning at St. Christ Church at the harvest festival. The long hours of work will go and the time will come when it will be possible to take care of all men with regard to labor. If machinery is a mean anything it is there by a diminution of the hours of labor.

"You say industry cannot bear it," said the speaker, "but let me ask you from the history of industry, time and again people have said industry could not bear it and it did bear it and grow.

"Therefore let us not be runnists hither and thither and wring 'la the end of civilization to come?"

Standard of Living Upward

Mr. Clarke spoke of the need of quiet confidence in God, who has so far brought the human race, and who will continue to guide an abundance. He predicted that the standard of living in the future days would be as far ahead of that man knows today that it will be as the present standard compared with the old standard.

"Take down your Green's 'History of the English People' and see how God has brought us through crisis after crisis in the past," he said.

The rector spoke of the contrast today with overabundance of harvest with the serious attitude and sense of insecurity which men feel when so many millions are out of work. The world must have not the means to buy the food which is so plentiful that it has to lie and rot in the fields. The sun and rain are a freight pass through the local depot and the rain and sunshine on the cars, some of them mere lads in the ceaseless quest for the labor which so few of them find. It is because these are not the whole cup of work in Canada, 2,500,000 in Britain, 3,500,000 in Germany and 5,000,000 in the United States. The heartache must come home to us as we take part in the service. So much has this situation impressed men that I am sure that they they cannot take part in a festival service.

Great Be Grateful

"My friends, let us remember this —that though there is great need we ought not to refuse to come to God in thanksgiving for the blessings of harvest. The unequal balance of things will right itself as we be thankful that our fields are fertile and our harvests plentiful in gifts."

"We in Canada have a land rich in resources, fertile in its fields, which provide abundance, we are free from hurricanes, and strong foundations we have some of the finest land, not like the parched lands of a portion of Saskatchewan. Whether we are rich or poor, God deserves our thanks."

Looking to the world situation Mr. Clarke said that there was apprehension. The invention of machinery has brought man to this impasse we cannot find work for all who want to work. In Belleville we look askance at the new shovel. Machinery is moping on. Some of us are fearful of the future. What is the future for? Let us get out of the present situation?

Not The Rule

Mr. Clarke saw three chief methods of attempting to solve the problem. One is the way of the dole, which has left governments in a servile protection even if men cannot find work. The preacher said the dole was evil, the income of sought in England for men are supported even after work is allotted with all the disintegrating effects—there you have one of the most terrible things is for a part of the population having time on hand and not enough work to do. The dole cannot be the solution.

Machinery To Stay

There is the plan of Gandhi, who recognizes the machinery and who is seeking a solution in India for idleness. Gandhi realizes the human body is itself the most delicate of machinery but what he objects to is the cram for labor-saving machinery. Machinery he claims concentrates machinery in the hands of the few and robs the masses. Modern industrialism is coming to India and days of trial are ahead. His plan is to stop the advance of machinery.

The rector saw another solution. "Surely after seeing what science has done in saving human work, we cannot for one moment think of banishing it. What woman would think of taking an axe and smashing her electric washer or refrigerator or farmer of smashing his reaper? We cannot think of these things. Canada's solution cannot stand."

Mechanism Helps

Where is the solution then. The solution will lay he arrived at through sverguie and dislocation by the control of machinery which will bring shorter hours of work and a new standard of living so far ahead of what we have today that we cannot be dreamed of or imagined.

Rev. C. E. Clarke Says Dole is Not Solution

MACHINE WORLD

Harvest Festival Justified For Bountiful Harvest

On Sunday evening Mr. Clarke said that the city and town folk could not appreciate as the farmer does the harvest-time. Because for the farmer it has meant a season of intensive toil and prayer. Upon the weather has come to an end. Yet the city dweller can be reason of his minor effort in his garden has had the consolation and conception of the importance of harvest. Originally man grew his own food, but the growth of towns and cities come later. Until late years the great mass of the people were in the country.

The farmer has the satisfaction of production. The harvest is typical of the spirit, infers to prayer as well as a reaping. Symbolically it tells the story of the time of sowing and reaping. The parable and in the first three hundred years of the Christian era Christianity is a harvest of power for the church.

"Science is offering us the solution that amazes and overcomes us," said the rector. "Machinery is transforming society." One writer claims that machinery is killing the home and making it impossible to rear children in cities and all in all claims science is a bad messiah.

No Dire Results

"Yet," Mr. Clarke said, "science need not have such results."

Such are the result of human greed. There would be none of these difficulties today if men looked upon all things in the spirit of Christ. "This is, it seems a time of sowing and tears. Science is linking the world and making it impossible for one nation to neglect another and take no interest in another.

"The time is coming when God is going to knit the world under one government by the League of Nations or some other agency. God is leading us to a world united and science and machinery are the means."

The preacher closed with a reference to the individual life, its harvest to be gathered with peace in the Great Harvest.

Thrilling Rescue Of Flyers At Sea

It is becoming a frequent occurrence for the tortoise to lend a helping hand to the hare, these days. Rescues of fliers at sea by the slower and safer water craft have become so common that they are no longer regarded as a matter of thrilling interest. The picture above shows such rescue when survivors of the Italian Dornier-Wal jubilatory plane were hoisted aboard the liner Saturnia after they had crashed in the Mediterranean Sea. The photo was made from the rescuing vessel as shown by the men on the wing of their wrecked plane. The fliers were all high officials of the Spanish Army.

TAKES WHEEL AND TIRE

Mr. Mitchell, well known barber in the New Queen's Hotel barber shop, had his car smashed into a three wheel car some time early on Sunday. Mr. Woods resides in the Kyle House apartments and parked the car in the rear of this building. Sunday afternoon, having occasion to use the car, he was greatly surprised to find, that one rear wheel had been taken along with a new tire. The car was jacked up with a jack, which is not the property of Mr. Woods and he feels that it was quite considerate of the persons taking the tire, to leave him the jack.

Fined For Failing to Put Out Camp Fire

Recently Edward Uens of Deseronto, appeared before Magistrate J. C. Lloyd, at Napanee, and pleaded guilty to a charge of neglecting to extinguish a camp fire which he had placed near the shore on Mississippi Lake in Harris township. A fine of $35.00 and costs or one month in jail was imposed. The fine and costs were paid. This charge was laid by officers of the Ontario Forestry Branch. The forest fire which was caused by this neglected camp fire was extinguished by fire rangers and fortunately only a small area of timberland was destroyed. Ontario Provincial Police assisted in securing evidence for this conviction.

LOCAL COLLEGIATE TEAMS SCORE DOUBLE WINS OVER ALBERT COLLEGE AND PICTON

Seniors Defeat Picton in All Round Play by 40-0

JUNIORS WON

Kids Simply Toy With Green and Gold Squad To Win 31-0

Under ideal football weather the rugby season was ushered in before a fair crowd of spectators on Saturday afternoon. The Belleville Collegiate football teams, under the watchful eye of coach "Lefty" Shiels, won their first two games of the season, when the juniors defeated the Albert College by the score of 31 to 0, and the seniors won their game by the score of 40 to 0 from the Picton Collegiate.

Field Sport

The first game was played under threatening skies but the sun broke out and shone beautifully for the second engagement. Coach Shiels trotted out the best team he could muster against the Albert "gridsters" and when the final whistle had sounded off the B.C.I. ran the ball back. After some play by the mid-field Ostrom fell on a fumbled ball behind the Albert's line for the first touch down of the year. A few minutes later Hilliard went over the Albert line, in a nice line plunger, for B.C.I.'s second touch down. The play hovered around mid-field when quarter time was called. Almost immediately after the second quarter started, Shrider intercepted a kick and fell on the ball for a touch making the score 15 to 0 for the Collegiate. Often known as the "Midget Hercules" or "The Mighty Little Man of Canada," sport has had one of the most adventurous careers. Early in his teens he enlisted for overseas service, and after was war over he crossed the ocean twice as a Canadian representative of the Dominion, first as a high and fancy diver, and later as a wrestler. He includes a trip to the Arctic circle in his history, being marooned on the ice fields for several months with the Dufferin MacAlpine party. He has also pulled sweep oar for Toronto Argonauts. Cliff has always reached the top in everything he attempted, despite the handicap of who looked like in his infancy to be paralysis for life. Now he is going to try coaching at the Oshawa Collegiate. More power to him.

The locals all afternoon.

The play opened fast with the visitors kicking off and after a few minutes of play Reynolds scored a nice point for the B.C.I., when he kicked a field goal from the centre line. Shortly after Graves scored a touch down on a nice extended pass from Dick Philp. The quarter ended with play being confined to the field. Almost at the opening of the second quarter Dick Philp ran around the end of the Picton line for a touch down that was not converted. Shortly after this the B.C.I. attempted the season's first forward pass but it was incomplete. On a kick by Reynolds behind the Picton goal line, Miller downed Huff for a point for the locals. Shortly after this Graves duplicated this feat and at half time the score stood Belleville 15, Picton 0. Coach Shiels then rested the out to the last man that had been playing somewhat long football that period.

Picton Scores

At the start of the third period Picton made a great effort to score but with no avail. With about five minutes of the period gone Dick Philp took the ball on an end run and ran 75 yards for a touch down. This play was the finest exhibition of broken field running that had been seen in Belleville in years. The kid actually made the Picton back look silly. On an attempted kick Bell picked up a ball that had been blocked by Morgan and galloped down the field for another touch making the score 24 to 0 at three quarter time.

After the last quarter started, Shiels carried the ball through the centre of the line for a touch down, in attempting to convert it Reynolds hit the goal post. After the kick-off Graves grabbed the ball and ran it back to mid-field where on the second down he galloped 35 yards for another touch and Reynolds converted it for another point. The Picton boys now were trying for a break a shut-out and McQuade made a couple of nice end runs but in the end they were forced to kick, but, Reynolds would return all boots and the result was that the visitors were losing ground on the aerial attack. It was at this stage of the game, that Belleville completed a forward pass for about twenty yards. This play is very neat, when completed and brought many hearty cheers. Reynolds again kicked over the Picton line and Graves downed the ball earlier just as the final whistle blew making the score 40 to 0 for B.C.I.

Belleville — Miller, flying wing; Reynolds, right half; Philp, centre half; Graves, left half; Scott, quarter; Bell, snap; Hall and Doan, inside; Rigby and Morgan, middles; Bowler and Macaulay, outside; Sweese, Rogers, Scopla, Murphy, Eagler and Hilton.

Picton — Huff, flying wing; Dafoe, Peace and McQuade, halves; Currie, quarter, Sutton, snap; McLean and Slater inside; Reynolds and Palmatier, middles; Walsh and Phillips, outside; subs, Barber, Dunkley Heffer and Vanover.

Referee—Stanyar, Queens. Umpire Jackson, Albert. Head linesman, Cy Williams, Belleville. Timekeeper, K. C. Weir.

SENIOR SWAMP PICTON

The second game was perhaps a little more thrilling than the first. The team broken field running of the second quarter between B.C.I. up a Belleville and Picton Collegiate, by Dick Philp, was a feature that looked all fans travel miles to see. Philp literally had the team into the ground as he broke away time after time to net only three touch downs but to gain yards for his team mates. Hilliard also ripped up the field running and Reynolds and Graves' splendid field generalship was the downfall of the Picton team.

The game had no more than got started, when Pulsow was forced to retire with a twisted ankle. This injury did the morale of the Picton boys no good as they were lost without their clever outside wing and McQuade was the outstanding star for the visitors and did a mile way a thorn in the sides of

RODNEY WINS INTER. TITLE

Defeat Napanee in Second Game by Score of 7-0

St. Thomas, Sept. 28.—Playing errorless ball before a big attendance in excess of two thousand, Rodney won the O.B.A.A. intermediate "B" championship Saturday afternoon by defeating the Napanee team 7-0 in the second game of the finals played on the Cobblehill field of the victory continued until the midnight hour.

The playing of the Rodney team was particularly brilliant in view of the fact that the grounds were very wet and part of the game was played in a light rain. "Toy" Miller, pitching for the winners, held the Napanee team to five scattered hits. The only Napanee player to make more than one hit was Bentley centerfielder, who hit safely twice in four times at bat.

In addition to shutting out Napanee, Miller also led his team in hitting, making three hits in five times at-bat. Although he had eleven strikeouts, Fraser, pitching for Napanee, was hit exceptionally hard, while his support was not the best at times.

Rodney has suffered only one defeat in twenty games played this year, losing the second game in the first of the playoff series with Brigden. They defeated Hensall, Milton and Napanee in two straight games each to win the championship. Last year Rodney lost in the finals against Milton, winning 13 of 15 games played. Much favorable comment was heard in Rodney on the fine sportsmanship displayed by the members of the Napanee team.

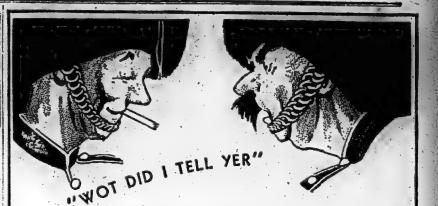
Rodney are now intermediate "B" champions of Ontario. Worthy Oldsmobiles they are too, defeated the Napanee Gibberds again Saturday, to the tune of 7 to 4. Miller was on the mound for the "Redbirders" and he had things his own way most of the day. The Gibberds team are to be congratulated on their wonderful showing this year. They clerked the season a green club and finished in the finals. As a matter of fact this is their first year in the O.B.A.A. Better luck next year Gibberds.

The football season in Belleville officially opened on Saturday when the Belleville Collegiate was two games. Their juniors beat the Albert College kids by the score of 31 to 0 while later the seniors won from the Picton Collegiate by 40 to 0. By actual count there were 72 runs in the old Fair Grounds when the second game started.

Coach Shields has the makings of two smart teams; if the players can manage to keep their heads. Just because they won by a wider margin on Saturday does not mean to say that they are invincible. Today Belleville have their "rallioping spirit," in the person of Dick Philp. This boy actually ran the Picton team into exhaustion and had 75 yards for a touch-down in the third period not worth going miles to see. The boy is real fast and having accidents should score plenty of points for his team this season.

Reynolds, the Collegiate's kick half-back, can sure boot the old "pig skin" with the best of them. He set-booted Graves at Picton, from the start to the finish of the struggle. Jack Graves also turned in a smart game as a matter of fact they all were on their toes. But Coach Shields thinks that he has plenty of material ahead of him yet as he is not satisfied with their loose playing at times. He also thinks that a few more substitutes would do the seniors no harm.

The world's series opens in St. Louis on Thursday. The baseball writers are making many predictions. Some say that the veteran, Connie Mack, will pull another "Ender" on Thursday by starting Hoyt or Walberg. Both of these hurlers are veterans of many battles and it is the "old-timers" who usually come through in the crucial moments. On the other hand Mack may try to win the series with his two aces, Earnshaw and Grove, as they have two days rest between the second and the third games. The big baseball writers are not predicting victory for either team but they merely say that the "A's" have the better team on paper.



No team has ever won the world's series three years in succession. Will Connie Mack pilot the first team in history to tie third world series? Perhaps this is the reason that the writer's won't openly call the Athletics.

The big question now being asked in baseball circles is whether Connie Mack and his wonder team, the Philadelphia Athletics, can repeat over the St. Louis Cardinals in the 1931 world series. On paper the A's are favored, but in these series one can never tell. The stars of the Philadelphia team depend largely on their pitching staff. If Grove and Earnshaw are stand the Cards on their heads as easily as they have the whole American league then it will be too bad for Gabby Street's boys. Critics are saying the A's of today are the greatest ball team to ever cavort about a diamond. If they win, this year it will be their third straight series. And then, taking victory as a supposition, the question to be answered is: Will Connie Mack's wonder team again as he did in 1914?

Sam Breadon is feeling pretty good about his Cards and their prospects for the future. He says: "We give all credit for this year's success to Hornsby. He came north without a sore arm, and he has handled his pitchers admirably. The Cards will score again next year and the year following."

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 42. (Metropolitan Newspap er Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Slowly Tarzan deciphered Jane's letter. It was to a friend in America. In it she narrated their strange experiences. How her father had come into possession of an old Spanish manuscript telling of buried treasure; how they had finally found it; how it had brought misfortune to them, and of Tarzan.

Tarzan sat long in a brown study after reading the letter. He couldn't understand much of the new and wonderful things it told of. He wrote beneath Jane's picture "I am Tarzan of the Apes." Then, musing she found her missing letter in the exact spot from which it had disappeared.

A cold, clammy chill ran up her spine as she saw the printed words. But as days passed without mishap, her fears calmed. Unseen by them, Tarzan left offerings of food at the cabin. He told himself that one day he would venture into the camp and talk with them.

A month passed before Tarzen visited the camp by daylight. He found all gone. His golden-haired divinity had vanished! So he printed a message for her: "I WANT YOU . . . . I AM YOURS . . . . I KNOW THAT . . . . APES LOVES YOU." Suddenly his keen ears heard a familiar sound.

It was the passing of a great ape through the forest. For an instant he listened intently. Then from the jungle came the agonized threat of a woman, and Tarzan of the Apes, dropping his first love plan, upon the ground, shot like a panther into the forest.

21ST'S LOYALTY

The magnificent demonstration of loyalty to comradeship which the men of the Twenty-first Battalion gave at their thirteenth annual reunion held in Belleville on Saturday was one of the finest which the people of Ontario have had. It showed the unity of spirit and the idealism of the men who fought at the front and returned to play a like patriotic role at home.

No finer body of men could have been seen than that which paraded the city streets and haunted at the armouries.

They did not forget the ideals which sent them to the front against the common foe—they did not forget the associations formed in the crucible of the nations, that is, under fire and in the presence of danger and death—the human relations survive despite the rage of engines of destruction.

Any country in the world would be proud to honor such men as these. None finer and few as fine could assemble anywhere.

These men are again part and parcel of the corporate life of the Dominion at home and are playing their part with all the talents at their command. What Canada will be depends in a large measure upon what men of their fine stamp are doing at this present time.

HONEST DANISH MERCHANTS

"Something rotten in the state of Denmark" is a familiar phrase which does not fit every circumstance. The press has just carried a story showing how Copenhagen is one of the prevalent virtues of the Danes and particularly of the merchant class. A party of U.S. people not knowing the language of the Danes, recently visited that country and had just to hold out a handful of money and let the honest Danes help themselves. One woman said "No merchant would take more than his due, we were told and we think it is true."

Perhaps that could be said of few countries, though they are many merchants and others who will not fleece the tourist and foreigner. But not far from Belleville or anywhere else one could have dealings with certain men who trim their prices to fit the gullibility or good nature of the buyer. Many a country could take a lesson from the honest Danish merchants.

What good does a smart trick do one who profits a cent or a nickel by "putting something over" another person. The one who so profits spikes his own honour, and for the rest of his life goes through with a guilty conscience or one so seared that a further trick or a series of tricks does not worry him. Finally he reaches the stage when coscience does not remonstrate and he has absolutely fallen from honesty. Dishonesty in the big or little sphere of life is a sorry one for people know him as tricky and dishonest.

Waste Symphy on Home Bandit

"Fiction and the movies, to say nothing of daily news stories in some publications, have a tendency to glorify the gangster," remarks the Toronto Star, and adds that "it is the duty of the Canadian people and particularly those charge with the administration of justice, to see that they resolutely against gangland and all it stands for. Quick conviction and prompt and ample punishment of bandits will do much to suppress their vicious conduct in Canada."

No one will deny the truth of this comment, for it sums up the attitude of the Canadian people and of the courts.

The remark regarding movie stories of crime and news stories of the same character is apt. What would Canadians know of gangsters if they did not hear or see them in movies and in the papers which glorify crime? Patrons of theatres do not want to be "fed" pictures detailing the doings of bandits and their ilk, for do not them lies the danger of creating sympathy by falsification of the facts of life. Those who sympathize with bandits in films do not know real bandits or they would waste less symphathy in these degraded human beings.

THE COURTS HELP

There is no doubt that the courts do prevent a good many people from breaking the law. The appearance of one person before the court may be quite sufficient to deter many from a similar infraction.

Last week a man was brought up in a western city on a charge of fraud in obtaining relief work on the grounds that he had a bank account of $1,500 at the time he applied for relief. The charge was dismissed as the accused gave evidence that he had not been asked if he had any means or bank account.

But the effect of this will be felt just as if the case had zesulted in a conviction. Thousands have read that story and decided that it is the "better part of valor" to play fair. While the relief agencies are burdened with demands upon them in order to provide the means of livelihood in a more or less stinted fashion, no one not needing relief should get it.

The law undoubtedly makes a good many people fair.

INSTINCT

By Alice Michaelis

Through the ages man has wondered,
Yet has failed to understand
How the little feathered creatures,
Winging high above the land,
Find their way along the trackless
Vistas of the arching sky,
Flying through the sunlit hours
And when storms go roaring by.

What can guide them as they journey,
Never faltering, to their mark?
What can load these tiny beings
Through the day and through the dark?
"Instinct" man has made this power
Which he does not understand;
But the little feathered creatures,
They are flying in God's hand!

MAHATMA GHANDI and Charlie Chaplin met a few days ago in London, England, and strangely enough their talk was all about this age of machinery and the displacement of man labour. Charlie Chaplin was all for it while Ghandi was against it from the standpoint of India and its half-starved millions. Strange enough after reading an account of the meeting of these two strange souls came a message to this desk which might be termed "The Old Printer's Lament," in which he blames the age of machinery for the scrapping of good human material too old to accommodate themselves to the new order of things. Here's what the old typo has to say in Walt Mason style:

"Alone in the attic, far away from the crowd, an old printer sits with hoary head bow'd. For many long years he worked at his trade 'til age and infirmity put him on the down grade. Now he visions the time when he sat on his stool and "set up" the news on his thirteen-em rule—the birth of a babe, a marriage, a war, all kinds of items from near and afar. Letter by letter, and lin upon line, two columns a day was fair at that time. His type and his fingers, his rule and his "stick", that's all there was to it to turn out the trick. Then the Linotype came with its devilish speed which begat the Tramp Printer, the first of the breed. Out of work, out of pocket, but no thought of defeat he took in all towns where they issued a sheet. Always sure of the price to get sped on his way; for typos were regular in that far-away day; when the "tourist" was mostly an all-round man, from runing of cows to rushing the can. Well, his travels are over, he is dead to the world in the abyss where thousands machinery has buried. Now the old time compositor was a man, every inch—there's no machines where he is going so he'll sure have a "cinch."

MICHIGAN CAR in Belleville this week was equipped with a radio. It was a one-seater car and the loud speaker was just behind the driver on a level with his ear but to one side, while the dial was on the dash, conveniently placed. Now that radios are becoming a part of standard equipment of motor cars it should be compulsory to test several times daily the careful driving talks and also report of the day's motor car casualities.

The youngster approached the man with the bag of golf clubs. "Caddie, sir, caddie?" he said.

"But I want a boy who can count. I'm playing today for the cup," said the golfer. "Can you add and subtract?"

The caddie hung his head and said "Yess" doubtfully.

"Well, what's five and six and four?" said the golfer.

"Twelve, sir."

"Here's my bag; you'll do fine," cried the golfer heartily.

"If I were you," he said during a lull in the domestic storm, "I would have more sense."

"Of course you would," she responded agreeably.

NO DISCOUNT, NO PRIZE

British Columbia fishermen have demoralized again that there are few games at which two cannot play. Just now United States fishers are adopting toward the Canadian policy an agressively unpatriotic attitude, and are promptly pocketing the prevailing discount. Travelers from the Dominion are humiliated and annoyed by the tone of contempt with which their money is in many cases refused altogether.

But this doesn't "go" with the western riiser folk. Buyers from the Republic need the product of their nets, but while bargaining for it have haughtily demanded a premium for their money. That aimed to create trouble, and the men with fish to sell, we will not submit to that; and now that you have brought up the subject, we will not accept your money except at 10 per cent discount. Men who take such direct action generally are in earnest, and Yankee bluff was of no avail. What was on the other foot; and now along the west coast of Vancouver the most beautiful printed United States dollar bill will purchase only ninety cents worth of fish.

A little more of this spirit, especially at home, would effectually startle these self-satisfied individuals who store Canadian money.—Toronto Globe

Pioneer Films Are Lost and Sought

London, Sept. 25.—(By The Canadian Press)—Famous pioneer films, based on incidents of H.M.S. Conscent's cruise under the command of the Duke of York, now King George V., in 1898, and shown before Queen Victoria at Osborne, have been lost for some time, and the owner, Alfred West, is anxious to recover them. Mr. West, one of the pioneers of the "movie" men in this country, is 78 years of age, and at present is on a visit to his son in Australia. The films in question were of a noted series, "Our Navy," presented for many seasons at the Polytechnic Institute and elsewhere.

Historically these films, which exist in duplicate, are of great value as a permanent record of the Royal Navy in the early days of the last century. When Mr. West retired from the business some years before the war, he left his show in the hands of a relative, who had been dead for some years. Inquiries have failed to trace the whereabouts of the films, but it is likely that they are in the hands of some private individual who has no idea of their importance. Mr. West's first moving pictures were taken half a century ago. They show yachts racing in the Solent.

FEDERAL BEER INQUIRY IN U.S.

Echoes May Be Heard in Election in Year 1932

(by John F. Chester)

Washington, Sept. 25 (A.P.)—A series of prohibition rumblings precipitated in the Capital by word of a new federal beer inquiry, appeared likely today to echo into 1932.

With the American Legion's vote in favor of a referendum lending fresh impetus, reaction ranged from praise and condemnation, to a proposal that a resubmission plank be placed in the 1932 Democratic platform. Added was a forecast from a dry Senator of a lively beer fight in the coming Congress.

Senator Bulkley, Democratic anti-prohibitionist from Ohio, suggested that Congress resubmit, resubmitting the Eighteenth Amendment to the people rather than argue upon the beer referendum.

Beer and Grains

Senator Walsh, of Montana, forecast agitation for beer legislation in the next Congress known as a constitutional authority, the western Democrat said, a dry law is his opinion that repeal or modification of the Volstead Act would not constitute a nullification of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Meanwhile, there was fresh ferment in the disclosure by Secretary Mellon that the effect upon the farmer of legalizing beer would be assessed.

Reactions to the American Legion's referendum proposal were numerous. The Anti-Saloon League said in a statement the vote did not reflect the sentiments of the country and probably not of the Legion itself. The statement contended that until the Legion produced a satisfactory alternative to prohibition its resolution "will not be taken seriously."

Synod Asks Gov't Give Red Cross Wheat For China

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 25.—(By The Canadian Press)—Suggestion that the Federal Government present the Red Cross, either as a gift or on long term credits, a generous amount of Canadian wheat for relief of flood, famine and other distress in China, was endorsed by the General Synod of the Church of England here today.

It would be a move deeply appreciated by the people of China, the resolution declared, and would gain the support of the Canadian people.

Peace River Outlet Story is Denied

Vancouver, Sept. 25.—Senator Gideon Robertson, Federal Minister of Labor, in charge of relief in addresses before the Board of Trade today, denied reports in the press that he had endorsed the building of a Peace River outlet.

"I wish to say I have not discussed the matter," he said. Senator Robertson added that he had no objection to the development which would benefit the West, but he was aware that either of the great railways which would be concerned in the matter had asked for it.

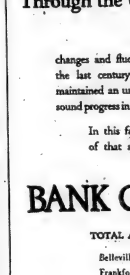
President Of France Laughs At Locksmiths And Eludes Pompous Fuss To Be With Friends

"Prisoner of Elysee" Does Things His Predecessors Looked Upon as Out of Order, Even Slipping Away to Attend Luncheons in Paris Without Escort

BY MINOTT SAUNDERS

NEA Service Writer



Paris, Sept. 25.—The "Prisoner of the Elysee" has broken his bonds and his predecessors have locked up armed guards and crashed through trouble, just to have some measure of liberty.

He is Paul Doumer, 74-year-old president of the republic. He took office only last June, and although he began a series of functions up at the palace with social activities, he has already begun to show up his intention of being confined to official functions, but to have limited to get away at times from all the fuss and fanfare, and enjoy the companionship of his old friends as an ordinary civilian.

This is rather revolutionary. The president of France has always been expected to follow the strict regulations as laid down by the protocol. In traveling he was accompanied by at least two cabinet ministers, a military escort and a few favored journalists and photographers. If he went auywhere in Paris his presence was generally known by the flare of the Republican Guards.

President Doumer, despite his venerable age, goes places and does things that his predecessors looked upon as out of order during the limited seven years' term of office. While he was officially in residence at the Elysee palace in Paris, the presidential summer home, he left on Saturday for a series of investiture visits to friends in various parts of France. He was the guest of Premier Laval, former cabinet minister, at his country home in Auvergne. From there he went to dent went to Clermont-Ferrand, and then on to Roanne, where he dined with a number of friends, and finally to Lyons, where by road to Rambouillet. This only got about in political circles in Paris some days later.

Again he created a stir, when his movements were discovered, by leaving the summer residence without public notice and coming to Paris to lunch with four intimate friends at a restaurant, famous for its fine cuisine, in the Champs Elysee. He arrived on foot, unnoticed in the noonday rush despite his distinctive white beard, and went to a private room upstairs. It was but like old times with his friends, who included a former senator and an army officer. He departed the same way, and there was not an official in sight. Later in the day he motored back to Rambouillet.

There have been other departures from custom, which have created the supposition that President Doumer intends to conduct himself in office more like the president of the United States than like the King of England. He doesn't want to be tied down by traditions in his leisure hours. He does not like to be hedged in by the ceremonial usages associated with the office. He wants to go and come, as long as the affairs of state permit, much like President Hoover is able to do.

When the last president, Doumergue, was strongly urged last May to stand for re-election after his seven years' term, he emphatically refused because he said he wanted to get away from his "imprisonment." The garden of the Elysee Palace was beautiful and spacious, but he said he could never really enjoy the trees and flowers because he always saw the high stone wall. He retired to the south of France and now lives like a country gentleman, as he often longed to do when the band was playing the Marseillaise.

President Doumer confided to friends, when he was elected that he saw no reason why the office should greatly curtail his personal habits. He rises at five o'clock in the morning and likes to go for a brisk walk of some distance before breakfast. Also he likes to be with his friends, old cronies in a sense, during intimate hours.

Judging from comment of President Doumer's conduct in office, the people are amused and with him in spirit. He is probably creating a precedent which will break down the old formal order of things and make the job in the Elysee considerably more comfortable.

Alexandria, Minn., Sept. 28— Thirty one years after his death, funeral services will be held Sunday at Ida, near here, for Otto Dahl, a farmer.

Plans for the funeral were announced yesterday following the discovery of his skeleton in a swamp. The skeleton was identified by his children through dental work. A gun and a jack knife were found nearby.

The skeleton was found by a youth exploring areas of the swamp which have dried up by the recent drought.

Hogs Dropped To Lowest Price In 25 Years

Kitchener, Ont., Sept. 25 — The lowest price paid for hogs in twenty-five years was quoted to farmers at local packing plants today. The packers paid $4.75 per hundred weight, attributing the decline to an overabundance of hogs and falling off in the demand for the finished product.

Speaking to Mr. David Scott, local drover, it was learned that the price paid for hogs this week was $5.00 per hundred weight but that the price would be $4.50 next week. "There is little demand for the finished product and naturally this affects the live stock market considerably," said Mr. Scott.

LOST CULTURE TO BE SOUGHT

Million Dollar Craft With 20 Scientists Seek "Lost"

New York, N.Y., Sept. 26.—A yacht reputed to have cost more than $1,500,000 has nosed its shining white hull into Glen Cove harbor to be made ready for a trip to Easter Island, where twenty scientists will attempt to solve the mystery of a "lost civilization." The island is in the Polynesian group in South Pacific Ocean.

Since the discovery of the island on Easter Sunday, 1822, by the Dutch Admiral Roggeveen there have been various indications of the existence of a past culture.

The expedition of Eldridge R. Johnson of Moorestown, N.J., will try to determine among other things who carved and erected huge stone statues on the island; who made wooden images found in profusion there; and what feats of engineering were required to move the stone images, some of them weighing many tons.

Huge blocks of stone form the walls surrounding some of the cities and the origin of the stone is a mystery, Prof. MacMillan Brown of Christ Church, N.Z., twelve years ago found carved alphabetical characters.

WILFUL DAMAGE PLEADS YOUTH

Removed Spikes From C. P. R. Tracks, Accident Averted

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 25.—(By The Canadian Press)—Pleading guilty to a charge of removing spikes from the C.P.R. for the purpose of doing damage to life and property," Joseph L. J. Young, youthful hand of Yokinhan, Ontario, appeared in Brampton police court today and was remanded until Monday for sentence.

Young's arrest and subsequent confession followed investigation by police of the apparent attempt to wreck the Canadian Pacific Eastbound Vancouver Express last Saturday night at Terra station. Angle bars and spikes had been removed from a tie on the main line. Only the quick action of Engineer Treman of C.P.R. Train No. 28, from Sault Ste. Marie, who felt his train bump over the loose tie an hour before the Vancouver Express was due to pass over, and sent out section men to flag the speeding train, averted an accident.

Young is 27 years of age and a native of North Bay. His confession implicated two other men, whom police are now endeavoring to trace.

After taking two boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (tonic) he felt he was better.

"For about ten years," writes Edwin Cole, R. R. No. 1, New Lowell, Ont., "I was tortured with sciatica. I was beginning to give up hope of ever being well, when I saw where a Grand Trunk employee had been relieved of sciatica by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"I decided to try them. After taking one box I thought I was a little better, and after taking two boxes I knew I was better, and after I had taken seven boxes I felt I had gotten rid of sciatica. I am now a man near my 77th birthday, and I am never bothered with sciatica now."

"Poise ATTRACTS MEN MORE THAN Beauty"

SAYS ELINOR GLYN

ELINOR GLYN
world-famous writer on romance

Men are fascinated by the charming self-confidence that exquisite femininity gives a woman . . .

"GLADYS and HELEN write me that they're 'ugly ducklings.' How can they hope to win love?

"Girls, many of the most fascinating women of history have been plain. But they've had the charming self-confidence that utter femininity gives a woman. And men have been fascinated by it.

"Such POISE is far more potent than beauty. And it's a quality every girl can win.

"Clothes can help you. Clothes affect YOU even more than they affect those who see you. LINGERIE, especially, when it is colourful and exquisite, makes you feel utterly feminine and confident of charm. And self-confidence is contagious! That's why this little recipe is so helpful to poise—

1. Choose the daintiest lingerie you can.
2. Always keep it colour-fresh and lovely.

"Don't think your budget won't include colourful underthings. If you wash them in Lux they will stay NEW so long every girl can afford them.

"Ordinary 'good' soaps often fade and wear out delicate fibres, but Lux is made to keep colours adorable, silks soft and new."

"AT HOME too!—Charming surroundings give you poise! You feel at ease when you know everything about you, from pretty draperies to colourful table linens, is fresh and new—as Lux alone keeps them."

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

Disregarding the girl, Jilo urged his panting horse to where Radcliffe stood. It seemed a mighty effort for him to speak. Then he said:

"What happened?" he demanded. His voice was strangely light.

"We were lost," Adela quietly answered.

"Lost!" He laughed the word back at her, and his eyes went red. "One does not get lost on a desert that one has known always. But it is no use with you to talk. Perhaps you too will tell me you were lost, some time. I can answer you as a man to a man." He leaned threateningly forward, but with the train of a quiet Adela forced her horse between the two men, who lowered above her, silent and ominous.

"Jilo!" Adela's voice had taken on a quality that made ven the maddened Mexican draw back. With her quiet dignity she had entered the desert. "This very moment you will turn your horse and go back to the hacienda. Tell my uncle we are coming. You are going to say no word either to Senor Radcliffe or to me. If you do, I swear by Our Lady that from now on you will be nothing more to me than one of your vaqueros. For me you will not exist. Now go, before I forget we are friends."

Sullenly Jilo looked into her eyes. Once he started to dismount. Once he half turned toward the man who sat his horse so quietly. Again he looked into the girl's face. No mistaking the message there.

"I go," he muttered, and drove the spurs into his horse.

The two had not ridden more a little as again she took up the reins and tried to smile.

"It's just a little comforting to be surrounded by men all one's life and by men's standards." Her voice had gone suddenly weary. "Your sex is not very clever or very subtle. For we have spent a night on the desert you and I. Civilized people would laugh at our dilemma and forget, but Jilo and my uncle, they will never forget. They will never trust. It will either be a plot of yours to seduce me, or a deliberate insult to tradition." In sudden impatience she struck the mare and galloped away.

"I want to get this over with," she called back to him. "I want to be on my way over the desert. Ted urged the Indian pony after her. The pace increased. He wiped the moisture from his forehead. Now that girl could ride! Sitting lightly in the saddle she followed every motion of the mare as it leaped and swerved among the cactus, her long slender legs guiding the animal's sides. Once the mare stumbled, but Adela only laughed and urged her to greater speed. "Who cares for uncles?" she called back. Ted felt something like a tightening leap of hers from sadness to gaiety. Ted smiled grimly.

"If Morales pounces on her too abruptly, he'll probably learn a lot in a short space of time," thought Radcliffe.

At the end of an hour they were cantering between the great iron gates and up the stone drive to the hacienda. Two peons ran out to take the horses, and as Ted dismounted he moved his legs with a little grimace.

"This bedding out among desert sands might become wearisome in time."

As he reached up to lift Adela to the ground, they both caught sight of Don Rodolfo standing arrogantly down from the balcony. For some reason Don Rodolfo seemed pleased. Elaborately ignoring them, he directed his remarks to the horses.

"One difficulty with the younger generation," he told the inattentive horses, "is that I should not be still another difficulty is that they always confuse your worst suspicions."

"The worst suspicions of an old, hardened sinner like, you must be pretty black," Ted considered.

Yet Don Rodolfo's polite expression. All night had hoped this perverted creature would have the sense enough to elope with the wealthiest girl in the country, and now he comes gravely back. I suppose they're still to be was lost."

"We were."

From his perch above, Don Rodolfo nodded sadly. "They always are. One would think that as each generation comes of age it would think of something else. But they don't. It's always 'we were lost.' He sighed. Adela pulled off her riding hat and whipped the dust from about her shoulders.

"I suppose uncle is simmering," she called up.

"Simmering, my dear girl? He is long past that. Toward dusk last night he was simmering. Today he has reached the stage of superheated steam."

Turning to Ted, the girl said sweetly, "Let's go in and get it over with."

But as Radcliffe stepped forward to assure them, Don Rodolfo called back. "Whatever Morales says," he whispered, "don't let him pick a quarrel. I have a particular reason."

Ted nodded and followed the girl into the house.

In the hall to Morales and Jilo and as Adela entered the vaquero rose. The older man watched them for a moment with hazard eyes. Quietly the girl stepped forward and knelt beside his chair. She took his hand and laid it against her cheek.

"I am sorry, my uncle, so very sorry. Did you worry much?"

"Tell me exactly what happened," he answered coldly.

"We loitered, we were late in leaving the spring, and I tried a shorter way down over the limestone cliffs. Then the roan fell and broke his leg, so we killed him. Night came on before we reached the desert. We camped until daylight.

"The rogue would have shown you the way."

"But Ted couldn't walk all night through the desert."

"Couldn't you have ridden double?"

She turned with a vexed laugh and pointed at Radcliffe. "Look at him. Over two hundred pounds of bone and muscle. Do you think my little mare could carry both of us?"

His implacable eyes never left her face.

"Would it have been extremely dangerous for Senor Radcliffe to remain on the desert until we could have sent horses to him?"

"It would have been difficult, perhaps to find him the next day. Remember I had no idea where we were. Besides, why should I leave him alone? I got him into it."

The black eyebrows raised on his pale forehead. "You ask why you should have left him? Are you some peon woman not to consider the place you have as my niece and mistress of this hacienda?"

"I had had that—"

His fist crashed down on the arm of his chair. "You not dare ask that stupid question. Would you make my name a thing to laugh at? In my day a girl would not even ride alone with a man."

The girl was fighting to keep her anger from rising, but now her eyes flashed dangerously.

"I know they wouldn't. And why? They weren't allowed because they couldn't be trusted. You think I am like them. Because of a little thing of the things you dare not say. Lets be frank for once. You think of virtue as something so difficult for us women to keep that you men must protect us, and so you guard us until we are ready to sell that highly valued commodity to the right buyer. And I tell you that I am not for sale to protect me. I alone can do that. Don't you think I can see the insult that lies behind your cautions? It is the same insult that lay in Jilo's eyes. You are both thinking: 'What are they to each other? Is he her lover?'"

"Stop. I forbid you to speak."

"I won't stop. I am sick for all time of these cautions, Julian, my uncle. I have known for many years that I am not as others in the world. I know how babies come, so let us keep to realities and frank ways. If ever I love and wish to give myself in marriage, I am of you will stop me. But I will never be spy. I want to be first with you always. I want you to love me and to be a comrade, just as you have been a parent, but don't you see we never can if you won't trust? I will not be a doll to sit in an open cage that's past, and it is today that we have got to face. I'm not saying anything too irresponsible to be left to myself. I am a girl of this century and you are of past centuries. Even now you sit there with doubt and anger and suspicion written across your face. Can't you even trust me?"

In cold fury he buried at her. "You are the daughter of your mother, and as the daughter of a half-caste you have acted."

She rose, trembling with anger. "Have I? Perhaps because I am a half-caste. Perhaps it is my mother's Mexican blood that makes me ungovernable. You have spent a night with this man out on the desert. Bueno, my uncle. I have told you that you will not. Now I will talk no longer. From now on I will never say one single word of what happened out there last night. And brother I stay another hour in this house of suspicion and vile thinking. I myself shall order the peons to ait and nourish your own thoughts, whatever they are. Yes, and for your further peace of mind, I do this." She will now make the girl as was Ted's side, and now she reached up and, drawing down his face, kissed him lips.

"Remember that, my uncle, when you are thinking of last night."

With a little sob she turned and ran from the room.

NEW CANON IS ADOPTED

Electoral College To Take Place of Present System

Toronto, Oct., Sept. 25 (C.P.) — A revised canon providing for the election of the Primate of the Church of England in Canada, and setting up an electoral college to supply the actual election, instead of the General Synod Assembly, was finally and unanimously adopted by the Church of England Synod at its final session here today.

The plan for the electoral college is endorsed by the Synod's upper house last night and given final approval by the low house this morning. The revised canon, adoption of which completed the final phase of the move to take the primatial election out of the hands of the House of Bishops and turn it over to the general representation of the church as a whole, constitutes the Sydnod's executive council as the electoral college.

Compulsory Family Pedigrees To Come

Dr. C. P. Blacker of the Eugenic Society, who followed, suggested the time had come when it was necessary to have a compulsory "family pedigree."

Synod Vetoed Proposal For New Hymnal

Toronto, Oct., Sept. 25— The House of Bishops of the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada today vetoed the proposed revision of the church hymn book approved by the Lower House. Without denying the merit of a revision, the Bishops felt that issuance of a new hymnal at present would entail an undesirable expense to the church.

The plan will come up again, however, at the next assembly of the Synod.

Holloway Street United Church Holds Annual Festival

With the church decorated with sheaves of stalks of corn, fruit, flowers, vegetables and other products of the soil, Holloway Street United Church celebrated the annual Harvest Thanksgiving Service Sunday evening. The church presented a beautiful picture of the harvest festivities which went to add to the spirit of the occasion. The Holloway Street Church organist, some time ago played the music of the evening service when the choir sang their anthems and then the organ played "Jubilee Master Aide" Gordon, accompanied the chorus. Directly after the service was opened the choir rendered a Harvest anthem: Hear H. E. Neal then led in prayer, giving thanks to God for the harvest and given for His itself.

The choir then sang "Praise the Lord On Joy" and the Rev. E. C. Neal read the lesson from the 103rd Psalm. Miss Mary Hall, one of the Deaconess of the church, was then introduced to the congregation after which the orchestra played a selection during the collection.

Spirit of Thanksgiving

In his remarks to the congregation, Rev. Mr. Neal chose the 15th verse of the 145th Psalm for his text. "The eyes of all wait upon thee; and thou givest them their meat in due season." In his service like this, the Christian harvest festival, good stong and good light" Rev. Mr. Neal said. He went on to point out that the spirit of thanksgiving at the harvest time is recorded from the days of Moses. The Hebrews were the first to introduce that spirit and later the Greeks followed the Hebrew address or harvest.

The spirit of harvest should mean goodness and prosperity, Rev. Neal pointed out, and it was a time for the people in the city did not realize the significance of the harvest as did the rural population. "We should be thankful for all we have," Rev. Neal, "for man depends upon God for the very products of the land. He went on to say that although man today has accomplished miracles in the realm of science today, he is still powerless to make grain grow. "We can plow the land, we may plant and cultivate but God gives the growth." He went on to show that the present wheat was sent to us by God from the centuries by taking the larger seeds each season and planting them in the spring, etc.

"The product or necessity is not it gives sustenance but the product of the earth such as coal, minerals, diamonds, and other products," said Mr. Neal. "And why?, he asked. Because the value of a product of necessity is due scarcity."

Dependent on Self

The presence of God is needed more today than ever before, Rev. Neal thought and his reason was that mankind was not dependent upon himself. This was brought about by the so-called modern age in which man is altogether too proud of his attainments and is in need of the spiritual food today just as much as the spiritual food pointed out the speaker. "With the condition of the world today Mr. Neal was not in favor of the preparation for the situation was the worlds's fault the cause of the Saviour of mankind. Mr. Neal pointed out that during the days of prosperity the world has forgotten God but now that it is in need of the spiritual food today just as much as the spiritual food pointed out the speaker. "With the condition of the world today Mr. Neal was not in favor of the preparation for the situation was the worlds's fault the cause of the Saviour of mankind. Mr. Neal pointed out that during the days of prosperity the world has forgotten God but now that it is ready and waiting to give the "Bread of Life" to the salvation of mankind. "What did Admiral Jellicoe say when asked about the present world crisis? He replied and said the speaker. He replied that Jellicoe had said that the "Almighty world must get back to God before things will be better." He then pointed out that as individuals we must seek the kingdom in order that we can get the fullness of life and the promise "God is willing to give unto those who ask Him for the Holy Spirit. For He said 'I am the Bread of Life, he that cometh to me'

In closing Mr. Neal pointed out that some people were thankful before God, "For then and then only will we be ready to learn the true meaning of Thanksgiving" said the speaker. The service closed with the closing hymn and the benediction.

After the service the students formerly from Albert College were welcomed in the church and after a social meeting the young people refreshments were served.

Depression Hits Police Court Business

Niagara Falls, Ont. Sept. 28.—Depression has struck one part of Niagara Falls, and is causing no complaint. For the first nine months of this year, according to Magistrate Fraser's records, there have been 350 fewer police court cases than for the same period of last year. Victoria, B.C., Sept. 28.—Ethnologists and archeologists in British Columbia are intensely interested in the discovery by a road-gang of a group of skeletons near Courtenay. It is believed they may prove to be the remains of very ancient of the native races that met the first coming of the white men to the interior valleys 120 years ago. Indian legends of the finding of bones of giants who inhabited the country before the coming of the peoples of Mongolian extraction. The particular skeletons found, according to speculation is that of a man. It measures 8 1-2 feet, but the average in life would have measured at least one foot or possibly two inches more. The skull formation is much larger and of different shape than those discovered in other excavations in the district.

The find was made by a gang at work on the Vernon-Kamloops Highway, about four miles from Vernon. Six skeletons were discovered. One was found by a woman, three of boys in their teens, and a fifth by a workman, a Japanese of 19 or 20. Near by was located the frame of the man.

AGE TOLD OF ELEPHANT BY TEETH ENAMEL

Scientists' Meetings in London Crowded to Doors

MAN AND PLANT

Great Progress in Coming Century in Battling New Viruses

(By George Hamilton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 28 (Canadian Press Cable)—Elephant secrets that were sealed outside the halls of the British Association for the Advancement of Science continued its great twentieth meeting today.

Professor Fairfield Osborn in the Anthropology section, described the method of determining an elephant's age by measuring the enamel of the teeth. The enamel is deposited in the ridge plates of an elephant's grinding teeth. By very accurately measured and to each human type found in association with the elephant a definite 'elephant' age to man can be assigned," he said.

Professor C. G. Hill in the Botany section, declared that among the human benefactors of the world was the dependence of many on the plant. The aid he had been told by an expert that world-famous Kew Garden might be expected in about forty years unless cultivation was established on a large scale. That would be a calamity for the closest co-operation between botanist and botanist.

Some afforestation was being done in this country, he said, "but present rate of consumption indicates that our timber supply our needs." Prof. Hill said.

Man must be made for quick growing coniferous plantations, hardwoods also must be sought. Wheat and other crops thousands of tons are wasted annually in Gt Britain through unsatisfactory storage. The speaker continued.

DECIDED EDGE IN OFFENSIVE SAYS CRITICS

World Series Contestants are Measured Before They Clash

CARDS HAVE SPEED

A's May Win Through Power to Suddenly Strike in Pinches

New York, N.Y., Sept. 28. — The world's champion Athletics have a decided edge over the Cardinals in offensive strength, measured by the power of their long-range guns and the ability to strike swiftly in the pinches. The Cards excel in speed on the bases.

There are weak spots in the A's batting order but the dynamite is likely to explode any time when Al Simmons, Mickey Cochrane or Jimmy Foxx connects a full ball. The champions have a habit of blasting opposing pitching all over the premises just when they look to be well under control. The Cubs as well as the Cardinals have had bitter experience with the ability of Connie Mack's crew to emerge suddenly with a cluster of runs.

Pepper Martin and Bill Simmons as the greatest menace, thereby being in complete accord with several American league managers. Gabby Hartnett also recalls Cochrane's slugging a year ago as well as Foxx' home run that broke up the crucial fifth game. The Cubs were outclassed entirely between as Bishop, Haas and Miller, comprise the principal attacking weapons that Grimes, Hallahan, Derringer and other Cardinal sharpshooters must worry about.

The Athletics, in the season's unofficial averages show a club batting mark of .288 to the Cardinals' .286. Dykes, regular second baseman, showed a more conspicuous difference in favor of the A's who collected 198 home runs against only 56 for the Cards.

The last world's series told much the same story as these figures. The club batting was nothing to brag about, only .270 for the Cards and .297 for the A's. The world's champions, however, made 17 of their 35 hits good for extra bases, including six home runs whereas the Cardinals registered only 13 extra-base drives in their total of 38 hits.

Gelbert Batting Hero

Charley Gelbert, sensational young shortstop, was the batting leader of the Cards a year ago in the championship play with .326. Sunny Jim Bottomley, bothered by a hand injury, hit only .240 and was a "bust." Chick Hafey was .298. These two sluggers have been hitting better than ever this year despite the lead and are expected to be right dangerous.

If Bottomley and Hafey can hold their own with Simmons and Cochrane or Foxx in the long-range work, when the pinch drives are needed, it will be anybody's ballgame. The difference is that the Cardinal pair were completely easy for Grove and Earnshaw last October. Pepper Martin, Frankie Frisch and Joe Medwick, manifested their ability to hit Lefty Grove, but Earnshaw they could offer. Simmons hits .364 to .304 against right-handers and Foxx had finished winning his second straight American League batting title.

Frank Frisch his poorly in the last series but his all-around record as a "money player" is superlative. Jimmy Wilson, Cards' catcher has rounded his way well above the .300 mark this season after a slow start. Pepper Martin, George Watkins, Jimmy Wilson and Gelbert all pack a dangerous punch.

Here are the latest unofficial team batting figures:

Athletics—Runs, 851; hits, 1523; Two Base hits, 305; Three Base hits 64; Home Runs, 119; Runs Batted In, 781; Stolen Bases 24—Percentage .287.

Cardinals—Runs, 797; Hits, 1520; Two Base Hits, 316; Three Base Hits, 74; Home Runs, 56; Runs Batted In, 726; Stolen Bases, 130.—Percentage, .285.

A'S AND CARDS FINISH SEASON WITH RECORDS

A's Win 107 Games and Card's 101 in The Season

BOTH READY

World's Series Will Start in St. Louis on Thursday

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr., Associated Press Sports Writer)

Finishing the 1931 major league season with champion A's and 154 games, respectively, over the two New York teams, which went up to second place, the St. Louis Cardinals and Philadelphia Athletics have given promise through their year's performances of an exciting struggle in the world series.

Both American and National league pennants were not only won up with record-breaking margins, but the second pennants last year, but turned in more victories than any other clubs in baseball's teams that ever captured a championship. Although they took a severe beating in 13 to 1 contests when their pitching ace, Grove and Earnshaw and Walberg were walloped freely, the A's wound up with 107 victories and 45 defeats for a .704 average. This gave them a decisive victories than the Great Athletics of 1929 and made them the second American League team to win 100 games in a single season.

The Cardinals finished strongly yesterday, winning from Cincinnati 10 to 2 and 5 to 3 behind the pitching of Paul Derringer and Sylvester Johnson and clinched it with 101 victories and 51 defeats, their best previous Cardinal mark was 95 won and 59 lost in 1928.

"With several places in the standings decided until all the games were over, there was little dullness in the closing days of the programme for the big leagues. The three-cornered battle in the American league for the second division wound up with St. Louis, Boston and Detroit. The Browns, world's champions, however, made it of their 93 hits good for extra bases, including six home runs whereas the Cardinals registered only 13 extra-base drives in their total of 38 hits.

JAPANESE ARE SLAIN BY FRENZIED CROWD

Hong Kong Sends Troops to Mainland to Quell Disturbances

DWELLINGS DOWN

Hong Kong, Sept. 28.—Declaring a state of emergency exists, the Government late Sunday called out troops to quell rioting mobs of Chinese at Kowloon, near by on the mainland. After several days of anti-Japanese demonstrations. Police were armed with gun and sword ordered to shoot without warning if necessary.

A crowd of Chinese centered the home of Shimuzo Yashanita, a Japanese, in the isolated district of Kowloon, and killed him, his wife, mother, two sons, and a nursemaid. Only a 3-year-old baby was spared.

Police and soldiers arrived to find a mob of 1,000 Chinese wrecking the dwelling and a fire in which followed two Chinese were killed by bayonets of the soldiers. Ten were arrested.

Japanese Segregated

Sunday night comparative quiet was the rule. A few minor outbreaks occurred, however, and some Japanese goods were destroyed in street bonfires. During the height of the disturbance many Japanese were attacked in isolated streets and injured sufficiently to require hospital treatment. Practically all Japanese shops have been wrecked, and Japanese nationals are segregated in school buildings for protection.

With no more Japanese to attack, the mobs turned their attention to Chinese shops selling Japanese goods, and wrecked many of these. Chinese householders are throwing their Japan-manufactured household utensils into the streets, some of which present remarkable sights, being littered with unwrapped toys only. Authorities used steam-rollers to crush the bonfires in order to facilitate removal.

Starving Chinese Rush Relief Plane

Nanking, China, Sept. 28.—Charles Lindbergh's experimental flight to take physicians and medicines to flood isolated centres of Northern Kiangsu Province failed Saturday because a starving Chinese throng crying for food rushed the plane and endangered the initial relief expedition.

Declaring the situation "the most heart-rending experience of my career," Col. Lindbergh and his companions sadly returned to Nanking convinced the only way to succor the victims in the flood towns would be to send them with military escorts.

Piles Go Quick

Without Salves or Cutting

Itching, bleeding, protruding piles are caused by bad circulation of the blood in the affected parts. The parts become inflamed, then almost dead. Only an internal remedy can remove the cause. That's why salves, suppositories and cutting fail. Dr. Chamberlain's Internation, HEM-ROID, succeeds because it removes congestion, restores circulation, heals and strengthens the diseased parts. HEM-ROID has such a wonderful record of quickly ending even piles of long standing, that J. D. McKeown's drug store says one bottle of HEM-ROID Tablets must end your pile agony or money back.

FIVE THOUSAND ATTEND HOLY NAME RALLY AT KINGSTON

Forty Parishes Attended The First Rally of Society

FINE ADDRESS

Four Hundred Delegates Present From Belleville

Five thousand men from every part of the diocese gathered at Kingston yesterday afternoon for the first grand rally of the Holy Name Society. It was an inspiring and commanding sight, as the Cathedral filled to capacity, three thousand men standing in the lawn of the Archbishop's Palace, bareheaded in the presence of the Blessed Sacrament reposing on a temporary altar, solemnly repeated the words that pledged them to honor and revere, by every means in their power, the Holy Name of God Almighty. The sermon for the occasion was delivered by Rev. Father Somerville, C.P., Springfield, Mass., and his compelling words on the Kingship of Jesus Christ moved the hearts of hearers.

Belleville Delegation

Belleville's representation, four hundred strong, left St. Michael's Church at 12.30 under escort of motorcycle police who led the way, followed by buses containing the Belleville Community Band, Academy and Separate boys and the cars of delegates.

Order of Parade

At three o'clock the men of the forty parishes in the diocese assembled at the Cricket Field, Kingston, and made their way, in procession, to St. Mary's Cathedral. The streets of Kingston were decorated and welcome signs greeted the visitors.

His Excellency Archbishop O'Brien addressed the gathering, saying that he was overwhelmed by the wonderful turnout from all parts of the diocese in spite of the threatening weather. He urged the members of the Holy Name Society to take practical means to show their loyalty to the promises they have about to make. "Never let your manhood be degraded by the use of impure language," he said. He asked the assembly to pray during Benediction for the return to normal times, and for the relief of the unemployed. He urged every other method has been tried by economists, and has failed, but prayer. After singing the final hymn, the men and women would offer up a prayer, in the words of the National Anthem, for the ruler of the empire in this crisis that is facing England today.

Benediction Solemnized

Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was celebrated in the Cathedral by His Excellency, assisted by Rev. Father Meagher and Very Rev. Dean Hanley, Smith's Falls. The monstrance, containing the Blessed Sacrament for Benediction outside, was carried under a canopy by Rev. Dr. Byrne, to the bandstand and as the monstrance was raised for Benediction, the gathering knelt, in adoration on the lawn.

PRICES OF TEXTBOOKS

Hamilton, Sept. 28—Members of the executive committee of the urban school trustees' association met here Saturday and discussed the price charged for school textbooks. They felt that the prices were exorbitant, it was stated, and decided to make a protest to the Ontario Department of Education.

21ST BATTALION RE-UNION WAS SUCCESSFUL FUNCTION

One of Largest Gatherings in History of Battalion in Attendance

MAKE MERRY

Departed Comrades Were Remembered, and Loyalty to Canada Promised

Time by an ever rolling stream bears all its sons away into eternity and memories of the departed crowd thoughts of these years, but there are memories that will not fade, one being the deeds of the famous 21st Battalion during the Great War. Gathering in Belleville the 13th annual re-union of this battalion was held in the Armouries and it will be long remembered by those privileged to attend. Old familiar faces came again to renew their association, to meet old comrades, to shake hands and make in the fifth and stone of the trenches, or on the field of battle, and to talk over the joys and sorrows of another day. More than anything else however was the thought of the year to Flanders Fields where poppies grow between the crosses that do also sleeping, that long sleep and who in their years of travel up and down the battalion line of battle who had helped to win fame for this famous regiment. They were not forgotten. The battalion is the only battalion that has met each year since 1919 and the re-union of 1931 will be the finest that was ever held. Next year it was unanimously decided to meet in Ottawa, although Cornwall 21st Club asked for the re-union in the eastern section.

Large Number Present.

There were 362 members of the battalion registered but this did not include all present. Over 500 sat down to the splendid banquet in the evening, many of the guests and guests of members and others were invited guests, which included the military, social and civic officials of Belleville. The re-union committee of Belleville must be complimented on the splendid arrangements made. They worked hard for success and while compliments are being passed on, the women of Christ Church must not be overlooked. The repast they set for the boys was considerably better than, when they were eating bully beef and hard tack and the surrounding trees were congenial. The tables were pretty decorated with the colors of the battalion, green and blue, while the food was all that could be desired.

Practically every senior officer of the battalion was present and the re-union was graced by the presence of Hon. Dr. J. D. Monkman, Minister of Railway and Canals and former medical officer of the 21st battalion. This is the first occasion he has attended in some years and was given a prominent place on the toast list in replying to the toast to Canada. Brig. Gen. W. St. Pierre Hughes, first officer commander of the battalion, was given also a place of honor, while Padre Lieut. W. B. Kidd, of Carleton, who served continuously with the battalion was the most popular member present. He was a friend in every sense to every member of the battalion and no toast was great for him.

Gathered Early.

Getting back to the re-union. Early on Saturday the boys began to gather, the furthest distance travelled to the re-union being from East Orange, N.J., the member being E. W. Jones. They came from Windsor on the west to the Quebec boundary on the east and all came for one thing to have a good time and meet their old comrades. It was a memorable outpouring considering the depression now in existence in Canada. Regt. Sergt. Major Tim Jordan was on hand to welcome the comrades and with his energetic committee, the machine worked like clockwork in the armouries. In the afternoon the battalion band, which had marched to the station to greet Brig. Gen. St. Pierre Hughes and Padre Kidd, marched to the Armouries, the general being marched through the main street by the Armouries. Later the members took in the Canadian National Exhibition, the record-breaking crowds of Toronto's Ex. never being noticed on since hostilities ceased.

Reminded Many Street.

Before the comrades sat down to the banquet, a parade was formed and they marched through main street twice. The route was from the Armouries to Front place, front to Victoria Avenue, along this avenue to Dundas street and the same route was taken on the second trip. Many were the cheers and songs, they joked with those, who joined the ranks and they kidded their comrades in the ranks. It was a night of jollity and good comradeship, a night such as only a year. On the return to the Armouries men mingled in and out tables and were seated for the programme and a toast list to eat but many did not want to eat but were intent on talking over the times, that they had not seen and greeting by the boys and but Hill.

Sergeant Major Jordan was chairman for the evening, a post he has held for years, and when seated at the head table were the senior officers of the battalion, the invited guests and few friends. After the benediction pronounced by Padre W. E. Kidd, the toast to the King was drunk. The battalion was welcomed by His Worship Mayor Wallbridge. His Worship did not make a lengthy speech but would have been qui of order enough a night but he did give the members a hearty welcome. "The city is yours and you do not have to take it as you took cities in France," said the mayor. He hoped that next re-union held in Belleville would have a new memorial waiting for them for which the boys gave three lusty cheers.

Departed Comrades in Mind.

The toast to the fallen comrades was proposed by Rev. "Padre" W. E. Kidd and the lights in the Armouries were dimmed, while a bright light shone over a table where the chairs were turned in, the table being empty to sit down to and at every plate was a large poppy. ANALOGY OF GRAIN, SPIRIT

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne Preaches Harvest Festival Sermon

"O praise the Heavenly Sower,
Who gave the fruitful seed,
And watched and watered daily
And ripened for our need."

In beautiful and most devoutly conducted services the parishioners of St. Thomas Church, in large numbers, gave expression of their thankfulness to God for the benefits of the harvest, on Sunday, the Vicar, Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, was celebrant at two celebrations of the Holy Communion; the first being at eight o'clock and the second which was fully choral, being at eleven o'clock. At the early celebration, the Vicar was assisted by Rev. Herbert Becker, as deacon, and at the later service by Rev. A. E. Green, as deacon. The beautiful musical setting by Plummer was sung by the choir, with excellent taste in the Communion office at eleven o'clock and the setting of Kilis to the Nunc Dimittis was sung as the recessional.

The numerous and great leaves to be learned from seed time and harvest were impressively upon the congregations in eloquent sermons by the Vicar, who chose for his text at the morning service the second verse of the 103rd Psalm: "Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all his benefits."

On Rogation Sunday, the Vicar said, the parishioners had asked that God's blessing should rest upon the seed sown in trust—that it would be nurtured and in due season yield its increase and that, now, in recognition of His great and abundant goodness, they were gathered to return thanks. We are conscious of God's gifts to us. When, however, we forget God and think within ourselves that it is our own doing that has brought to us many blessings—then it is that we feel the correcting hand of God. We must realize, at all times, the dependence of the human soul upon God. We must forget not all His benefits," and, it is in the beautiful service commemorating God's love —the celebration of the Holy Eucharist—the great thanksgiving service of the Church, that we render unto God our heartfelt thanks. Often we fail to avail ourselves of God's spiritual gifts and neglect the seeds sown in the spiritual life. In Holy Baptism there is the sowing of the seed of the Holy Spirit. Baptism is not a mere form—it is a living reality by means of which we enter into the body of Christ on earth. Later in the spiritual life there is a further sowing of the seed of the Holy Spirit in confirmation, through which we come to participate in the great service of the church—the Holy Communion. As there is a harvest of the yield produced from the seed sown in the earth, so there will also be a harvest of the fruits of the seed sown in the spiritual life. As we labor on, striving to fulfill the purposes of God, we must be ever mindful of the final harvest in our lives.

PERSIAN BALM

God reveals life to us in the seasons—the orderly development of nature. From seed time to harvest—"First the blade and then the ear, then the full corn shall appear." So it is in the spiritual life—it must of necessity be of gradual development.

There are first the spiritual lessons learned in childhood and then gradually on great truths are learned—the development of the human soul on God is realised and that it is "in Him we live and move and have our being." Let us consider from seed time and harvest and ever strive to draw nearer to God.

In the afternoon the pupils of St. Thomas and St. Paul's Sunday schools attended a children's service in the church, conducted by the Vicar. The children and teachers assembled at the Parish House and proceeded in a body to the church.

Full Choral Evensong was conducted by the Vicar at seven o'clock. The well trained choir under the leadership of Mr. Ross Hunter and with Mrs. Hunter as organist, sang the service beautifully. The Magnificat was sung to Allwood's setting and the Deus Misereatur by that of Barnby. The anthem, "Fair Waves the Golden Corn," was given by the choir in a highly creditable manner.

The Vicar's evening sermon was based on the sixth verse of the ninth chapter of St. Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians: "But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." It was a very earnest, interesting and instructive exposition of the lesson to be derived from this verse of St. Paul's writings.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, vines, fruits, vegetables and grains. Artistic ability and good taste were evidenced in the arrangements and reflected much credit upon those who had performed this service.

Plums, cherries and the hardier varieties of apples have been successfully grown on the Canadian prairies, but the orchards in all cases were protected by a suitable windbreak.

Canada supplied three-tenths of one per cent. of the total imports of Japan and China in 1918, and now supplies about 3 percent of the whole.

AMUSEMENTS

"REBOUND" IS STRIKING; INA CLAIRE OUTSTANDING

Those who raw "Holiday" with Ann Harding, and would take pleasure in seeing a picture of that type, but far greater in story, should visit the Capitol tonight and see "Rebound" with Ina Claire. The same director made both pictures and the experience he gained from producing "Holiday" has been improved on, and the improvement is obvious in "Rebound."

"Rebound" is sparkling from every angle, acting, dialogue, story, dressing and photography.

Acting honours are equally divided, star honours go to Ina Claire, and she is perfect. Her treatment of an unhappy marriage, even in the face of her husband's brazen flirtations with the dark Evie, her mannerisms, and her enunciation are wonderful and one could quite easily watch her for hours tirelessly.

Robert Williams as the jealous Duke, lover of Ina, but not loved, is the bad word in quiet humour, and his successful rival, Robert Ames as Bill Trostadle, is so good, that one feels inclined to kick him for his stupidity in being so blindly infatuated with his old flame, Evie. (Myrna Loy).

Columns could be filled reviewing all the points of this picture, so that if genuine entertainment and sound advice will be accepted, just decide to visit the Capitol tonight, and see "Rebound." It is a treat that should not be missed, and the writer knows who saw it on Saturday will testify.

"MADONNA OF THE STREETS" AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE

Evelyn Brent The Dynamic!

"Madonna of the Streets," the film adapted from the story, "The Ragged Messenger" by W. B. Maxwell, opens in the Capitol Theatre on Tuesday and Wednesday, matinee daily. This drama of the waterfront stars Evelyn Brent, Robert Ames, Ivan Linow and Josephine Dunn.

The story of "Madonna of the Streets" is of an unscrupulous woman who went to every extreme to satisfy her own selfish desires, and the phenomenal change she undergoes in her character when she meets a man whose every action is noble, as are his thoughts and deeds.

Against the varying background of the barbary waterfront, a luxurious San Francisco dwelling, and a modest California cottage, this interesting tale is unfolded.

"Madonna of the Streets" is intensely dramatic and should not be missed.

There will be an abundant assortment of "short" features shown in support of the "big picture" and the performances commence each day at 2.30, 7.15 and 9.15.

YOUNG CAST GETS BIG FILM CHANCE IN DRAMATIC SET

Three youthful screen personalities have engraved their names on Hollywood's tablet of fame because of their contribution to one of the year's great motion picture productions, "The American Tragedy," commencing at the Belle today for three days, matinee daily.

The players, all young, all playing their first really big roles for Paramount, are Phillip Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee.

Holmes plays the role of Clyde Griffiths in Paramount's dramatic production based on Theodore Dreiser's famous novel, "An American Tragedy." Heretofore, Holmes has appeared in support of several outstanding stars, Nancy Carroll in "The Devil's Holiday" and in "Skidding Heaven." Miss Sidney has made only one previous motion picture appearance, with Gary Cooper in "City Streets," although she has a record of successful roles on the stage.

Frances Dee is probably the most remarkable figure of the trio. A few months ago an automobile crash, accidentally slipped into prominence the support of Jessie Chevalier in "Playboy of Paris." She proved capable in a few minor roles and then came her big chance in "An American Tragedy."

Under the direction of the remarkable Josef von Sternberg, "An American Tragedy" is expected to make cinema history, just as the name of the same name is one of the landmarks of American literature. Paramount has spent more than five years, until the perfection of talking picture as a dramatic medium, to film this story.

"An American Tragedy" is the grim drama of "An American Tragedy" is the drama of Clyde Griffiths, young, weak, wishing love, desiring wealth and position. A young factory girl, Roberta Alden, gives him love—and then he discovers he can have love with wealth and position by devoting himself to the glittering Sondra Finchley. To rid himself of Roberta's unwanted attentions, he resorts to a fateful mistake and pulls all the hate and scorn of society down on his head.

LEONARD VANHORN HELD ON ARSON CHARGE

Arrest Sequel to Fire and Threatening Letters Sensation in P.E. County

Leonard Vanhorn of Sophiasburg Faces Court

ARSON IS CHARGED

Provincial Police Arrest Vanhorn After Investigation

Quick action by the police following the big fire on the farm of the Vanhorn's, about two miles from Picton, which occurred last Friday night, destroying barn, four horses, a bull, and the season's crop, has unquestionably been responsible for the Vanhorn's demanding that the money be placed in a specified place and that in the event of failure to do so, the barn would be burned, the evidence unearthed led the police to the scene of the fire and there they arrested Leonard Vanhorn, who is said to be a part owner of the farm with his father, Albert Vanhorn. The arrest was made late Monday afternoon by Ontario Provincial Constable Durnford, of Picton, and County Constable James Lewis of Bloomfield. Vanhorn, Jr., was placed in the jail at Picton, charged with alleged arson. Vanhorn, Jr., is a married man about thirty years old.

District Inspector Hubbard, of the Ontario Provincial Police, Belleville, was in Picton on Monday in connection with the arrest of young Vanhorn.

Six Bombs Exploded in Denver, Children Menaced

Mystery Surround Bombing in Various Parts of City

Denver, Sept. 29—Explosion of a group of bombs, one of which endangered the lives of fifty children in a church school, occupied the attention of the police here today.

Six bombs in all were fired within a few hours of each other Monday night, resulting in the destruction of the home of a justice of the peace in North Denver and two automobiles, but no one was killed in the damage.

Police originally ascribed the first reported explosion in Valverde, to small boys, but abandoned that theory when a terrific blast had rocked the Holy Family Church in North Denver.

Fifty members of the church school had been assembled within the building. The blast stopped the motion picture machine in the residential theatre across the street, and hundreds of theatre patrons rushed for exits.

Mrs. Mary Jackson, who lives near the church, told police she saw a "stout man" leave a car, walk up the church steps, enter the school and run out later, a second before the explosion.

A few minutes later a bomb blast rocked a neighborhood a few blocks distant, shattering windows and knocking goods from store shelves for several blocks around.

The police were investigating these explosions when a fourth blast wrecked and set fire to a house owned by Justice Otto A. Harrison, another suburb. Rand, who lived next door, could not be found last night.

After the bombing of Rand's home, police and firemen learned of two other explosions in the sparsely settled suburb earlier in the evening which made a great noise but did no damage.

Thousands of persons stayed in the streets until daylight today, afraid to return to their homes. Police reserves were held in all stations and firemen on duty were recalled to duty as the city hunted vainly for the bomb throwers.

Astronomers Wage War with Geologists on Man

Mystery of Evolution Is Chief Attraction of the Meetings

CROWDS ATTEND

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

London Sept. 29—The mystery of evolution is drawing never-failing audiences to the British Association for the advancement of science.

The Astronomers are "having mighty battles with the geologists over where the earth is going, and where he is going. "The universe is breaking up and dissolving into one size 1,400 million years, yet it is only at the beginning of its career," said Sir James Jeans, distinguished astronomer. "Evolution is complete," added Dr. Robert Broom, famous South African geologist.

Eugenics are proving most popular with women. Ninety percent of every audience that crowds the eugenic section have been feminine.

So great was the demand for tickets for the meetings where evolution was being discussed today that the meeting moved from South Kensington to the Central Hall, Westminster.

"Whatever happens to the sun and stars, solid earth will endure," said Sir James Jeans. "The physical universe never has any choice—it must inevitably move along a logic road, to a predestined end. Even the most confirmed optimist could not claim that of any possible lines of development the final end is of a particularly exhilarating nature. The most consoling thought I can offer is that when the worst come to the worst we shall only have to die."

Rt. Rev. Ernest Barnes, the modernist Bishop of Birmingham said that periodically—but rarely at intervals of less than five or six centuries—civilization has collision between the sun's various universes. Apparently that kind of cosmic systems been born. "Ours is possibly the youngest of the planetary systems," he said. "On the cooling earth potential forms of life appeared at least a thousand million years ago. Then about a million years ago the sub-man emerged from a group of arboreal apes. Professor R. F. Yowles in the anthropology section said that only during the last 7,000 years had man attempted to harness external power. The earliest illustration of a wheel that, could be approximately dated appeared in the Sumerian Empire of between five and six thousand years B.C. The only authenticated date for a windmill in Britain was 1191.

Teaching in Speech

Professor and Mrs. C. G. Saligman told of the White Nile tribes who killed their Kings if they failed to produce rain.

Sir Leonard Hill

Sir Leonard Hill speaking at Exeter, described how faith healing played a part in the medical treatment. Nowadays, he'said, it was the choice between a room for infra-red treatment although there was no scientific evidence in favor of it. "The electric infra red sound, horror of high tension cost, is nothing but a black surface heated to about 500 degrees fahrenheit," he added. "I have received a very efficient and cheap model, consisting of a gas toaster placed in a black box and fixed in a suitable stand."

CABINET WILL DECIDE TODAY ON ELECTIONS

His Majesty Returns from Balmoral to London

THE GAP NARROWS

Appeal If Made Will Be From National Basis

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 29 (Canadian Press Cable) — The King returned to Buckingham Palace from Balmoral, Scotland, today, and this afternoon he received Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald.

Afterwards there was another meeting of the National Cabinet. Formal announcement of the Prime Minister's visit to Balmoral, and that there is to be dissolution and an early general election, has not expected before tomorrow.

Obviously during his brief holiday and still feeling the effects of the enormous strain of the past few weeks, Mr. MacDonald has been making every effort to preserve unity in the National Government.

In official circles it is denied that the Cabinet divided yesterday six to four in favor of an election. At the same time it is clear that a division exists both on the advisability of an election and the nature of the appeal to be made—if it should be made at all.

Gap Narrows

The gap between the Conservative and the Liberal free trade wings of the cabinet is narrowing, but it is still there. Many Conservatives who let down two years pressing for tariffs as the speedi- test of bringing now appeal to the tariffs would ask for the all and end all of national policy.

The Times, today, while remarking that a national policy based on free imports in all cases and at all costs would belie its name forthwith, added: "On the other hand a national policy rigidly concentrated on tariffs and breathing only the intelligent protection would equally fail to fill the role."

The Liberal Window Cashes

But the Liberal willingness to make concessions on tariffs encounters Conservative objections. The Liberals, said the Observer this Morning Post, "hold out indeed an illusive hope that they will agree to an emergency tariff as a temporary measure to balance the budget; but they make the impracticability of its solution. A temporary tariff would be a constant source of industry of this country would be kept in the state of harassing and disabling uncertainty."

Tariff Is Criticized

Likewise the Conservative Daily Telegraph said: "To exclude tariffs is unfair to the Conservatives. Tariff is the first constructive policy of the Conservatives. It is the only constructive policy that any party has shown any intention of adopting for unemployment—Lloyd George's policy of Development Loans—and there is not a single advocate left. The next general election come on a clear issue between free trade and a tariff election. But that does not mean that the election will be the beginning of the end or the work or scope of National Government. Tariff is not an end in itself but that it is an indispensable factor in the new regime is as clear as noonday.

Today's Decision

It is conceded that the cabinet must today reach a decision on the decision is for an election, it will immediately be followed by appeal to the people by the National Government candidates. Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, in which the Prime Ministership must be prepared for the withdrawal of Liberal and Conservative trade Liberals, including. Sir Herbert Samuel, Home Secretary.

Again the main burden rests on the shoulders of Mr. MacDonald.

Fifty prospective Liberal candidates have been in conference in Belconing to enter into any party agreement or coalition which in- cludes a tariff of any kind in its programme. Against this is the declaration of thirty Liberal members of the House of Commons who are willing to follow Prime Minister MacDonald in any steps he deems necessary. If the Prime Minister decides to reconcile the bulk of these Liberals with the Conservatives, the latter would be willing to join to lead the National Government

Hand-to-Hand Battle 3 Policemen Injured in Struggle with Reds

Over 2,000 in Red Mob Mill About in Peg Riot

SEVEN CHARGES LAID

Winnipeg Was Scene of Trouble As Riot "Rush' Council

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 29 (C.P.)—Rioting charges stood on the police books today against seven men arrested during the height of a hand-to-hand battle last night between police and Communists at the front and back doors of the city hall. Three police officers, injured in the clash, are released from hospital, other charges will be laid.

More than 2,000 Red followers milled and yelled in a mob that jeered and threw missiles at police, in an attempt to get into the city hall and run every down side streets and back lanes when batons and revolvers were the order of her hand. Woods emerged from the back doorway of the building. He jumped on an overturned platform and addressed his followers, claiming he had been "thrown out" of the chamber.

"What're you going to do about it?" he shouted.

He made a second unsuccessful attempt to get a hearing. News of his ejection was announced "to the crowd and with cries of 'Put back our delegation," the workers mob rushed police who guarded the back entrance. Official blackjacks beat them back and another attempt to break through the police warden at the front door also failed.

When one alderman got into his car and started to drive away a staged rock was hurled against the machine. The police rushed into the mob to find the offender and a general melee began.

Scores of men were knocked down in the fracas. Blood was spurted from brulsed heads and Communists retaliated by throwing stones. Mounted police charged the concrete at passing automobiles and Communists dodge in. Arrests were made before the riot was quelled.

Dr. Grant characterized the Nova Scotia Liquor Control Act as a covenant with death and an agreement with hell."

MERCHIMER AVE ANNIVERSARY

The anniversary service held in Merchimer Ave. United Church last Sunday and Monday evenings, proved had decorated the edifice with two tons of golden rod and asters and repainted the floor and stained the pews before the opening of the church and the flowers which were contributed in abundance made the church very beautiful. The services on opening the church the regular excellent congregations and generous offerings, but the most wonderful success of the Sunday services were the persuasive and inspiring messages given by Dr. Baker in the morning and Rev. Mr. Bowles in the evening. Dr. Baker spoke of Christ as the Master Builder of character and knocking to get in, Rev. 3: 20. He pleaded for the open door today. Many were moved to tears and responded fully in their hearts to the Bishop spoke in the evening of the unity of the witness, "Ye are My witnesses," stressing the great need of holy living and letting our lives in the home, in the church, in the community bear witness to Christ. He urged all to help get these blessed gospel message to the world. Many expressed themselves as being helped and resolved to live more useful lives. The services on the whole were an inspiration to the people and long to be remembered. Special music was rendered by the choir which was much appreciated. "We Give Thanks to God."

After an illness of some little time Charles Shackelton, of Barley, passed away at the Belleville General Hospital on Monday morning. The deceased was the son of the late John Shackelton, of Thurlow, and was born in this province 68 years ago. Previous to coming to Ivan-grove Beach, Mr. Shackelton lived in Meaford Ont. He has always followed the call of the land and was a prosperous farmer in Prince Edward County.

He leaves to mourn his loss two daughters, Mrs. Geo. Cooke, of Mapleton, Ont., and Mrs. O. Thackray, of Toronto, one son, Cole Shackelton of Kitchener.

The body was sent to Toronto to be interred in Mount Pleasant cemetery.

WHEN GASTRIC JUICES FAIL TO FLOW

You know how badly an engine runs when it gets clogged up. It's the same with your body when your gastric juices fail to flow through the liver. Your food, instead of being digested, ferments, causing gas, colds and indigestion inside you, producing harmful acid poisons. What you need then is a tonic—Nature's own tonic—Nature's own laxative.

You get all these six salts in Kruschen Salts, and each one of them has an action of its own. Together, they stimulate and tone up the bodily functions from a number of different angles. The first effect of them is to promote the flow of the saliva and so awaken the appetite. The next action occurs in the stomach, when the digestive juices are encouraged to exert and act upon the food. Further in the intestinal tract certain of these salts promote a further flow of those vital juices which deal with partly digested food and prepare it in turn for absorption into the system.

So you see there is no mystery about Kruschen. It works on purely scientific and well-known principles. Prove it for yourself.

Loans are Advocated for Ambitious, Needy Student

Principal P C MacLaurin Presents New Problem

LIFE INVESTMENT

With eight hundred and seventy-three pupils registered and more to come Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School has the largest student school year in its history, numerically speaking and measured by results as well, in the opinion of Principal MacLaurin, of that institution, as expressed in an address before the Belleville Rotary Club. There are 530 pupils in the College proper, besides 68 girls and 167 boys in the technical department. Fifty per cent. of the pupils are taking vocational work which has proved a far greater success than was anticipated. Some hundreds of pupils who have taken the three years' vocational course have come back for a fourth term, and pupils after taking vocational courses have been inspired to take up more delegate courses on the way to matriculation. Problems of education were discussed by the speaker including the problems of parents, teachers' problems, problems of the community and most important of all the problems of the student which are heavier now than at any time in the world's history and demand the utmost sympathy and understanding on the part of the parent.

Belleville has a fine educational equipment and the speaker could well imagine any citizen being willing to permit the high standard established being lowered below actually in all respects in the land. Youth deserves the very best possible educational facilities.

Times have changed since the little red school house days when one teacher taught all. He was usually chosen to receive the benefit of the thorough education and all the rest of the community got forward task end. Education has become easier for the teacher, more easy for the pupil but the time has arrived, in the opinion of the speaker, when no one withing a thorough education should be debarred because of lack of funds. The time has come further provide the means whereby every boy and girl who is ambitious may get a thorough education. Local boards should enquire into the possibility of establishing sinking funds to help those desiring to go through college. Loans at a small rate of interest is possible to the ambitious student. Continuing, Principal MacLaurin at the best investment in Canada today from the standpoint possible to have. Pupils with a thorough education will be expended upon to pay back these loans. He pointed out with this the speaker related several instances where pupils were handicapped in seeking a loan for lack of funds. One scholar, who was held back for the ere of a college course by circumstances, said that he would gladly pay back in the years ahead $250, rather than forego it. He was financed by a group of teachers.

In the past too much attention has been paid to the accumulating of idea that the amassing of wealth is the first and only important thing in life. Students should be taught that there is more to life than just living for self. "What is the great, fundamental idea?" asked the instructor of He who brought to the world the gospel of the Brotherhood of Man, the Fatherhood of God, and the Master answered Himself with the Great Thought "And thy neighbor as thyself." Supplementing this with the words of the Master himself the speaker related the story of the Good Samaritan and the lesson to be learned from that parable. Principal MacLaurin then dealt with the amassing of wealth never in the world's history has it served to bring about a greater ideal than the amassing of wealth today. Between France and Germany, Italy and France, Japan and China, Japan and the United States, and Canada and the United States, rather the money question, and other questions where international love is missing.

Teaching of history should not be in mere memorizing of dates, battles, etc., but a study of the lives of the people, of their habits, of geography, the most interesting of all subjects, and a study and the most neglected.

Introduction of yesterday, today and tomorrow was discussed in an interesting manner by Principal MacLaurin, who stressed the necessity of raising the financial barriers between nations, and of removing men from achieving the education which their talents call for, and also inculcating in the minds of youth a tolerance and charity toward all which went to make real friendlier relations between all nations.

Principal MacLaurin was introduced by a former pupil of his, Dr. Harold Dexter, whose happy quotation was voiced by Rev. C. E. Clarke.

Sterling Stronger on London Mart

London — Further improvement in sterling was the feature of the gilt-edge stocks on the London Stock Exchange today, with financial advances. But the political uncertainty caused industrials to be irregular and quiet.

On the foreign exchange market sterling rose perceptibly. The rate on New York, at the opening was $3.85, touched $3.89 and dropped to $3.89. The rate on Paris started at 79.75 francs, went to 100 francs and fell off to 99 francs. The rate on Amsterdam was steady at 9.75 guilders.

PREMIER FAVORS NATIONAL BLOC

Striving Hard to Retain Unity to Settle Country's Needs

(By George Hamshion Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London — In the House of Common on Wednesday Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will announce his decision.

Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson leader of the Labor Opposition will ask Mr. MacDonald on Wednesday when he expects parliament to prorogue. And to the query the Prime Minister is expected to state whether or not there will be a general election.

Throughout the day there have been meetings of Conservatives, Liberals and the party "shadow cabinet." From hour to hour optimism has wavered over the imminence of dissolution. The Cabinet met for a long time tonight and threshed out the whole situation but until the meeting broke up without a conclusion of the meeting. It was held in the Prime Minister's room and the belief was a decision had been reached and the Prime Minister will have an audience with the King tomorrow.

The prevailing view is that dissolution is at hand. If announcement is made tomorrow it will take effect immediately. The present emergency legislation would be concluded. Parliament would then be prorogued, with dissolution following.

Views and opinions as to what is happening behind the scenes are very conflicting. But apparently Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald is making a strenuous effort to retain unity in the national government. He has made it clear that if there is to be a question of an immediate election, he will not lend himself to the plans of any one party. He is also said to be convinced that national unity is required for the next few years and that the country is impossible for him to secure unity, or stand out.

The Prime Minister in effect seeks a "doctor's mandate" to deal with the national ailments as may be found necessary. He favors a National Bloc Government to unite the nation to concentrate upon industrial problems that may arise. This national policy would call for a tariff. Under it, although tariffs would not necessarily be excluded from the general program they would not constitute the issue.

Between the official liberal and conservative parties the Labor Party Government protection remains the chief issue. The Liberal Free Traders are an essential part of the Conservative Government. Even Sir George Lloberals adhere to free trade but are willing to incide in tariffs necessary to meet economic measures to redress the balance of trade.

"Just as during the war," commented the Liberal Star last night, "when the Liberals who had been fighting for Free Trade and Faith were prepared temporarily to agree for the common weal to restrictions on their principles, so now the free trade limitations as were regarded essential, in order that they now do the same thing. But the nation will not consent to such a form of protection to make a Tory holiday. The truth is that a general election now is a gamble for which there is not the merest shadow of justification."

In any event Wednesday is expected to be a momentous day to settle all the uncertainty that has existed for the past two weeks.

Six U.S. Magazines to Publish in Canada

Announcement that six magazines of the Macfadden Publications Inc. of New York will be printed in Canada was made by E. E. Zoty, sales manager of the company, who is in Toronto attending a convention of the Macfadden Magazine Company of Canada, a newly established subsidiary of the New York publishing.

The covers of the magazines will be lithographed in New York, but the rest will be printed in Canada, one in Toronto, and five in Montreal, Mr. Zoty said. The annual expenditure in Canada due to this action will be in the neighborhood of $600,000 exclusive of advertising and promotion costs. Mr. Zoty stated that he expected to see other Macfadden publications published in Canada in the near future. Although the tariff was one of the reasons for the publishing of the six magazines in Canada, he said that before it came into effect, the New York Company had already commenced publishing in Canada because of the large turnover of their publications here.

Magazines to be printed in Canada are: True Story, Physical Culture, True Romance, True Detective, True Experience, Master Detective and Dream World, in Montreal.

Following the meeting of the company, which wholesale distributors attended, the Canadian Wholesale Newsdealers' Association held a meeting in which the tariff was discussed. Mr. Zoty stated that the officials stated that since publishing companies began printing in the Dominion, members of the association viewed it favourably.

Personality Better Than Education

Toronto.—The nursing profession must not discard for the sake of higher education the old quality degree its essential purpose "to soothe the aching brow, to work with humility and to be an inspiration and joy to all who are unfortunate enough to needs its services," declar ed Dr. Lewis A. Hamilton of Hartford Conn. in his presidential address to the American Hospital Association at the Royal York Hotel.

Dr. Sexton pleaded "for nurses of a type who will be inspirational as mats the long, weary hours of illness and character, which Miss Fred W. Hoxley of Toronto warned against the omission among them and commercialism among medical men."

"We have grown up among us a feeling that unless we train our nurses out of the home we are caring for the sick we are not doing our duty," declared Dr. Lewis.

O.B.C. GRADUATES REPORT PROGRESS

By a coincidence letters were received at Ontario Business College Saturday from three graduates, all bearing unsolicited testimony to the great value of the O.B.C. training.

The first (a young lady in Montreal) stated: "In addition to being my father's attorney, I have established my own commission agency business and must say that my training at O.B.C. has served me well." Two brothers and a sister of this young woman also attended O.B.C.

The third letter was from a young man in Rochester, N.Y., who said: "I recall many of the fundamentals of accounting which were so thoroughly taught by you, I am greatly indebted to the training received at O.B.C. which has aided me in all the advancement I have obtained. I am employed by a firm of public accountants and have prepared for the November Certified Public Accountants examinations of New York State."

'00,000 Gallons of Society "Gas" in Detroit

Detroit—With Detroit just emerging from a highly exhausting gasoline price war, a new element of competition was revealed yesterday with announcement that the Dreanor Products Co. will reach this port today with a shipment of 400,000 gallons of Soviet gasoline direct from the Caspain and Black Sea districts. So far as it known, the shipment is the first ever received in the Detroit area via the Lawrence waterway.

Reds Distribute Leaflets in Court

Windsor.—Distribution of Communist pamphlets among the crowd gathered at the Supreme Court of Ontario session in Sandwich resulted in Mr. Justice Jeffrey asking that the names of those responsible for the distribution be placed before him tomorrow morning.

The pamphlet in question carries a notice of a meeting to be held in a Windsor park on Sept. 30 in protest against leaders of the Communist who have been arrested in Toronto and elsewhere. The pamphlet calls on workers to join the Canadian Defence League.

Mr. Justice Jeffrey referred to the pamphlet as being "of a most inflammatory nature, being circulated within the precincts of the court and apparently it was done only for one purpose—to prejudice this case and to undermine justice in Ontario."

Four alleged Communist leaders faced the court today on charges of obstructing the police. The charges followed disturbances of the Paterson Collegiate auditorium after A. A. Heaps, M.P., had spoken at a meeting staged by the labor organization.

Harry Binder, Albert Hardman, George Armstrong and David Norris, are the defendants.

All Whitlers are Declared Morons

New York.—Persons who whistle are morons, devoid of moral stamina and possessed of an inferiority complex, Professor Charles Gray Shaw, of the philosophy department of New York University, asserted today in a vitriolic dissertation on the whistling population of the world, from which he specifically excluded only Einstein, Edison, Mussolini and President Hoover.

"No great or successful man ever whistles," the Professor said. "Can you think of Einstein, Edison or Mussolini tuning up to 'When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain.' Can you think of President Hoover as whistling?"

Calling whistling "the unmistakable sign of the moron," Professor Shaw added, "we might call it a part of a person's 'defense mechanism.' After he has set up his psychological barricade of silliness he sounds a note of war in his foolish whistling. He resolves not to care, He's right, and the world's wrong."

THE VILLAGE

Interesting figures have been presented to public of late in the populations recorded in the recent census. Those of the villages hereabouts are particularly interested as they throw a flood of light on the movements in these semi-rural and semi-urban centres.

Two large villages show negligible decreases and all the rest can boast of increases of fair measure.

The villages have been occupying a pivotal place in the balance of population between the cities and the countryside and it seems rather remarkable that the villages have held their own so well in the trend from the country to the cities.

This fact proves the vitality of the village idea. The village must be a necessity or it would not hold its own, the total of villages in this county having a good increase to their credit.

One can picture no happier country than one with numerous villages, preserving in their make-up the characteristics of both city and country, and acting as a steadying force or balancing rod along with the agricultural section against the too rapid and revolutionary changes of the cities. The villages cannot fail to be to a large degree the bulwark of the stability and solidarity of the people of the nation.

IN THE YEAR 2001

The New York Times has been set thinking on what the world will be eighty years hence. Why eighty years was chosen is explained by the fact that the Times has just celebrated its first appearance eighty years ago.

As things are moving the world will have changed many times greatly in that period.

The Christian Science Monitor says of the world in 2011:—

Progress in political and social organization as well as in natural science and industry challenges our interest. Eighty years is equivalent to more than half of the history of the American Republic.

No one can forecast all the problems of the next eight decades. Many current problems will carry over into the future. Where should we arrive if we applied our best thought to some of the problems which challenge us, and utilize new knowledge as it emerges from study and experience?

Take world peace for an example. This is an attainable ideal if the nations will weigh the cost and futility of war as a solution of difficulties and will progressively diminish their competitive armaments, and replace fear and enmity with an attitude of mutual trust. This ideal must not wait eighty years for fulfillment if civilization is to endure!

There is growing a realization, too, of the fact that the economic well-being of the world can be built only on this recognition of nations as parts of a unifying economic unity. Economic isolation is impossible in an economically interdependent world.

Industry in a mechanical age, must recognize social obligations. Machines were made for men, not men for machines. New inventions in the near future may, as well as those already here, must be evaluated in terms of social results. Distribution must be geared to production.

More complete achievement of the ideals of democracy, better organization of recreation, wiser use of increasing leisure, better housing, greater respect for law, all present their challenge to the world of the future. The forces at hand, keled opportunity to plan our future. An eighty-year plan animated by foresight, the spirit of brotherhood and fuller utilization of increasing knowledge, would carry mankind to a new security and destiny.

Harvest festival services in the churches this autumn serve a good purpose. Church members who are now receptive have heard lessons drawn from the world depression showing that man, not God, is responsible for conditions which have arisen. These services turn the minds of thoughts to the Giver of all gifts and man needs a steadying power in this age, in contemplation of the essential things in a world of changing values in unessential things.

Belleville will miss the Rev. C. E. Clarke, resident of Christ Church who leaves in a month's time to assume charge of the parish of St. Michael and All Angels, Toronto. During his eight years' incumbency the local parish has grown immensely through the splendid cooperation which has existed between rector and congregation.

Frost is just around the corner. Jack Frost is not like the financial recovery. He comes on schedule whereas recovery from the slump depends on human weakness and strength, not on the immutable laws of nature, rather on the laws of human conduct, so little known.

BEGINNING AGAIN
By Alice Michaelis

This is the joy each morning brings,
The joy the happy linnet sings,
As ringing through his glad refrain
I catch the words, "Begin again!"

Dawn brings lost courage back anew,
Brave dreams once more are coming true,
My breast reiterates the note
Morn wakens in the linnet's throat.

"Begin again and never fear!"...
I hear the valiant voice of cheer,
"Begin again and know but this:
Man's life's a chalice shaped from bliss!"

No failure now can touch my days,
No less cast shadows on my ways,
I have forgotten doubt and pain
In challenge of this brave refrain.

"Begin again, begin anew,
Be sure your dreams are coming true;
Forget the past and know but this:
Man's life a chalice formed for bliss."

A RADIO FOR EVERY BED in the New York city hospitals is the objective of the New York Mirror which on Saturday afternoon celebrated the first installation, a radio receiving set for every bed in Bellevue Hospital that has accommodation for two thousand patients. The radio idea was conceived by George Clark, city editor of the Mirror, while a patient at Bellevue. The Daily Mirror hopes to similarly equip all New York City municipal hospitals, at an estimated cost of $250,000. The special radio pillow has been invented for hospitals and patients who can not sit up get the programmes through the pillows. The first installation was celebrated by a program of speeches and entertainment, several of the brightest stars in radioland giving their services. Canada is right up to date in regard to radio in hospitals for it is understood the new Pavilion of Toronto General Hospital will have among its very modern features such as private bathrooms, a radio installation in every room. Earphones and the new radio pillow will restrict the volume so that other patients will not be disturbed.

AGA KHAN spoke for the 75,000,000 Moslems of Inida in the international radio broadcast Sunday over the Columbia Network (WGR) at 12.30 p.m. in a plea for consideration for his countrymen in the readjustment of government of India which may result from the Round Table Conference now in progress in London. Mahatma Ghandi is the leader of the movement for self-government for India's 353,000,000 population, and Aga Khan's address setting forth the claims of the Moslems was very interesting. It was stated, clearing up as it did various misconceptions of the Moslem religion and mode of living. These Sunday international broadcasts are well worth listening in on.

TAMMANY SPEED is getting his hair pulled these days in the investigations now under way in New York City into the ways and means by which civic officials including members of the police force, high and low, have amassed fortunes. Latest sensation is the revealing of a double murder which occurred seven years ago in a political club affiliated with Tammany. Nothing has ever been done about the murder and some of the official papers in the case have been conveniently lost. Strenuous objection was made by politicians to this means but the elected representatives of both parties demanded that the light be thrown on this dark chapter of political life. Ingidentally it was revealed that two gunmen gambled away the proceeds of a holdup in this same club, some $14,000. Tammany is the big Democratic club which rules New York City, fills all the municipal offices and is really responsible for good civic government, or otherwise, and it is time otherwise in a number of spots. Occasionally things get so bad in the big city that the great mass of thinking citizens take time off to vote and put the skids under Tammany—but the big Tiger always comes back. When the stench and smoke has rolled away, comes back in the role of righteousness with stripes carefully concealed under sombre cloaking.

WHY BLINDING SPEED?

Automotive engineers, striving to meet the demand of the public for speed and more speed, are turning out cars that when the accelerator pedal is depressed to the floor boards fairly sip. Every automobile that comes from the production racks of motor car manufacturing companies today is capable of attaining a speed of at least a mile a minute. Many can be relayed up to 80, 90 or 100 miles an hour. The natural question is prompted: Why this concentration on speed when, in Canada, there are few places where the legal speed limit is in excess of 35 miles an hour? It is true that certain leeway is given motorists on our highways. Average traffic goes on undisturbed in such ways, for instance, more closely approximates 45 miles an hour than 35, and the department does not make a practice of prosecuting in such cases, where the element of risk is slight. There is no highway in this or any other country, however, where it is reasonably safe to extend an automobile to a speed of 80 miles an hour and the driver who runs ahead of the law by that much or such terrific speed will look around in vain for sympathy.—Hamilton Spectator.

EVENTS MOVE QUICKLY

The non-political banquet arranged to be given in honor of Premier MacDonald on his 65th birthday on October 12 by fellow Scotsmen is to be cancelled at the prime minister's request.

The Socialist-Coalition premier is displaying a consideration for his countrymen and his colleagues' guests that may scarcely be realized by them at the present moment when they still hope that the prime minister will remain in office. London, Mr. MacDonald, from his own experience during the war knows how those whom he has served delight to honor may tomorrow be those they scuttle.

Events move quickly these days, and much may happen before October 12. Mr. MacDonald's action leaves the door open for the relief of a possible embarrassing situation although whatever events may bring, there will still remain for honor, friends to honor a great and honest man.—London Advertiser.

ENGLAND IN HOURS OF GLOOM

A valued correspondent sends us privately an extract from what Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote about England in 1856. His words were marked by many characteristics of the eight, and are so opposite to the feeling of England to-day and in the midst of great difficulties, that it is worth while to reprint them:

"I see her not decaying, not weak but well remembering that she has been one day, and now, when she needs a kind of instinct that she sees a little better than she ever did, and that in a storm of battle and calamity she has a new soul, and a new pulse like a cannon. I see her in her old age, not decrepit, but young, and still daring to defy the best power or endurance and expansion. Seeing this, I see that the old politics of nations, mother of heroes, with their still kind, still high and still wise to entertain and swift to execute counsels, which the mass and heart of mankind require at the present hour, has only become hospitable to the foreigner and truly a home to the thoughtful and generous who are born in the soil."—New York Times.

WESTERN PICTURES

The film magnates are now faced with the task of evolving entertainments that will amuse both young people and adults. Hitherto they have not succeeded in doing so. The council's preliminary report that at nearly all the matinees attended the children were bored and even annoyed at the pictures shown. Only cowboy films, with staggering feats of horsemanship and shooting of daring valor aroused them to enthusiasm.

The cowboy film, demanding action rather than acumen, has not been popular with talkie producers in the past. But it has never failed to attract large audiences and now that producers are beginning to subordinate speech to movement it is more than possible that this form of entertainment, appealing to adults as well as giving exceeding pleasure to children and thus consolidating the audience of the present while helping to build the foundations of the audience of the future, will enjoy a return to screen favor.—Christian Science Monitor.

Letters to the Editor

CARING FOR THE IDLE
Belleville, Sept. 28, 1931

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—In reading "The Globe" I was greatly interested in the following article, and as your paper is now so very progressive, wondered if you could not agitate the women of Belleville taking up this same work for our own needy people. All indications are that we will, this winter, need all the food that we can get, and now when fruits and vegetables are plentiful and cheap, is the time to take up this matter. Let the women of our churches take the matter up. We are all busy canning supplies for the needy Western people, but that is no reason why our own should be left to suffer, and we know that this winter many will need help who in ordinary times, would be helping others.

Could you not ask some leader, among our women, who would call a public meeting of the women, and organize along this line. Now is the time to do something, not after all our vegetables are gone. Let us take the idea from the Toronto women, "Buy Another Basket." A whole week, from a lot of women, would bring large results.

Yours truly,
"A TAXPAYER."

LOCAL WOMEN'S RELIEF CANNING GAINS IN SPEED

(Toronto Globe)

The products of Ontario gardens by the barrel, tomatoes in bushel baskets, crates of vegetables and thousands of jars of preserved fruits stored in the central headquarters of the emergency Conservation Committee, Spadina House, promised a wealth of vitamins for the coming months of winter, as well as providing an inviting background for the first big meeting of women representatives of city organizations, held yesterday at headquarters, with Mrs. A. M. Heustis presiding.

Zest was added to the inspiring scene by the presence of a Board of Education van drawn up in the receiving door of the large storeroom. This was being loaded up with baskets and crates of raw produce, to be converted into homemade preserves for Toronto needy folk by the nimble fingers of young girls doing practical work in the city domestic science centres of city schools, under the supervision of skilled teachers during the next few months. In accordance with permission granted by the Board of Education.

Other Places Interested

There will be three or four of those school cars loaded up before the close of the afternoon, they are being made ready for tomorrow's domestic science classes," was the information let slip by a "wood man' who stood near by. "The women's branch is concentrating first in conserving this food for winter use. It is understood in authoritative quarters that places, not only all over Ontario, but throughout the United States, are interested in the scheme of the Toronto women's project and inquiries about it, with a view to adopting the same system. The information has certainly made a wide appeal."

Meantime, in the inner room, the romantic story of "how it is being done" was unfolded by the various reports of committee executives. Mrs. Heustis announced that there were 14 persons more than 4,000 jars of preserved produce on the floors of the centre, ready to be transported to the cold storage warehouse in a week. In two weeks, she estimated, there would be 20,000 jars, representing a value of $10,000 for winter relief work. There has been one donation made by the committee which has thus far yielded no return, reported Mrs. Heustis.

"Some one thought they saw a moose. Such a thing could not be tolerated at the centre, of course. Traps were purchased and stocked with cheese—but so far there has been no return for the investment." No regrets were expressed by the meeting.

CLOSES OWN BANK

Chicago.—T. B. McGrath, Jr., started a run in his own bank Monday and made history thereby. He wrote all of the names of the Mayfair State Savings Bank, owned by him, that the bank was closing and any profits and that he had decided to close it. He added that all depositors had better come and get their money because he was going to shut the bank on Wednesday of this week. State Auditor Oscar Nelson said it was the first time in the history of the United States that a bank was being closed voluntarily, with full payment to depositors before closing.

LITTLE BERNARD
By LEE PAPE

Pops vacation is nearly over, and after supper he was looking at the averrtisements in the paper about the different hotels in the country and diffrent places, saying, By gollies when I look at these ads it makes me realize how much money I've saved by staying home this vacation. For 10 dollars a day I could have passed the golden hours eating indigestible left over food in a mermetically sealed dining room and dodging mosquitoes and smearing awful stuff out of tube on my red hot sunbern, instead of idly loafing in my own back yard in the never failing breeze of my own electric fan. Ha ha thats a good one on the hotel managers, he said.

I think thats wonderful, how much do you think youve saved altogether, in all? ma said.

Well, when my 2 weeks are up, the news that Id saved at least a hundred and 50 dollers would be surprising enough to nock me over with a feather, pop said, and ma said, Why Willyum thats marvelous, I cant imagine any better news, it just solves my whole problem.

How come, whats all this, brake it gently, pop said, and ma said, Well William, if you want to hear the truth boiled down to a nutshell, your so called vacation at home has reduced me to the dimensions of a nervius rech, day by day time shatters over Im sure Ill be completly under. Everywhere Ive turned for the pass 2 weeks Ive seen clothes would come to more than a hunderd dollers, so Ive been hesitating, but your statgement about saving a hunderd and fifty dollers has cleared away all my doubts like mists before the sun, and Im not going to hesitate another moment. I think Ill start erly next week, she said.

Its a womans werld, Im going around the bowling alley, pop said.

Which he did.

Where Eugenie Hats Got Start

Beauty and Elegance Characterized Empress Of France

Who is this Eugenie whose name is tagged in front of the feminine hats in town?

Eugenie was but a pet name for the Spanish Empress of France, for her full name was two breaths long. It was Marie-Eugenie Ignace Augustine de Montijo.

Eugenie was born in 1826 and when she died 1920 she must she have known that her name was one which history could not ignore.

Possibly he got one of her ideas about how to live from her American mother, who was the daughter of William Kirkpatrick. Kirpatrick was born in Scotland, but became a United States citizen and was the republic's consul at Malaga when he fell in love with one of the black-haired daughters of the Count of Teba and married her.

Although born in Madrid, Eugenie was educated in a French convent. It was in 1853 that she married the Emperor Napoleon III.

She was not only a fine dancer, accomplished horsewoman and brilliant conversationalist, but had much more about her than mere ability to look well. She was right eye with a dashing air and with a feather, perhaps, trailing behind her and with a hand, all placed an important part in the course of that period.

By her beauty, elegance and charm she was considered largely to the brilliancy of the imperial regime, and the court decides.

But all of these things, even her hats, were not enough to forestall the revolution which ended her husband's and Empress' reign in France.

After moving to England, first her husband died and then her son was killed in Africa. It was in 1879, the next year she went to Africa to bewail the body of her son, beside the dust of his father.

It is strange to think this Eugenie, the dashing, beautiful and charming maker of feminine fashion should have been a friend of the queen whose name has become synonymous with conventility and unlovely feminine clothing, but Eugenie and Victoria were fine friends.

Eugenie died in her native land Spain, on July 11, 1920, where she did not grow to visit the Spanish town, who was her favorite godchild.

o Sale of Beer By Glass In This Province

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 29.—Reports Hon. Windsor, Ontario, to the fect that the Provincial Government would shortly introduce sale f beer by the glass were emphatically denied yesterday by Stewart McClenaghan, Vice-Chairman of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. No change from present policy will be made, he declared.

Hon. George S. Henry, Premier, branded the report of beer by the glass as "ridiculous and absolutely without foundation whatsoever." The idea had not been considered, he said.

WHEN GASTRIC JUICES FAIL TO FLOW

You know how badly an engine runs when it gets clogged up. It's the same with your body when your gastric and digestive—juices fail to flow. Your food, instead of being assimilated as it should, merely collects and stagnates inside you, producing harmful acids. What you need then is a tonic—Nature's own tonic—Carter's Little Pills.

You get all these six salts in Kruschen Salts, and each of them has an action of its own. Together, they stimulate and tone up the bodily functions from a number of different angles. The first effect of these salts is to promote the flow of the saliva and other juices, awaken the appetite. The next action occurs in the stomach, where the digestive juices are encouraged to pour out and act upon the food. Again in the intestines the tract certain of these salts promote a further flow of these vital juices, which deal with nasty germs and food and prepare it finally for absorption into the system.

So you see there is no mystery about Kruschen. It works on purely scientific and well-known principles. Prove it for yourself.

The Partners

by Allan A. Parfitt

This story is literally true in every detail, except the cafe in-cident at the end.

As the freight rolled and crawled along between the interminable dunes of the Western prairie-ovinces, the hobo and the hitch-hiker, craving for a substantial meal suddenly became intolerable. Unobtrusively, therefore they dropped from behind the blind beggar and lightly rolled into the bush grass by the right-of-way. The conversation behind the popular bluff there could see a little town. Good enough. They could eat there and catch the next through freight. But Canuck decided to go forward to see what he could do. He might see the Legion Post. He was a returned man; a fully paid up member in his home town. Surely, they would give him a hand-out. The other party, being he was desperately hungry was curiously reticent. His name was Carl. The Canuck looked him over covertly with an eye that missed little. Carl's eyes were blue and keen and beneath his sun-glazed skin showed red patches of fresh redness. The Canuck could learn nothing from him. He was so utterly uncommunicative. But—there was something about him that Canuck could not understand." Some vague recollection. What did it matter anyhow? Hadn't this newly found acquaintance shared "the nakkin's" with him when he hadn't a pinch of dust even.

The Canuck shook himself and started along the trail that snaked its way uncertainly amongst clumps of scrub and low trees. Walking alone with his thoughts there came the oft-repeated reverie. Memories, memories— The reverberating boom-boom of the big guns down towards Soucbez. Wending their way in single file across the shell-pitted fields through the utter darkness. The splash of the feet in the mud, an occasional oath as someone missed his footing in the treacherous going. The sudden flash of rifles from in front, the vicious spit of the machine guns, the intermittent rat-tat-tat of the machine gun, the lurching flight of the magnesium flares from the near enemy were—crazy with joy.

The lights die quickly. Hand-and-hand encounters. Bayonetings and a sequence of horrors, that paralyzed the human frame and seared the soul with their stark, naked reality. Forty-eight hours wounded out—in No Man's Land, smothered by thirst and the pangs of hunger. Then the enemies' counter attack — oblivion followed, in an odorous German dugout, a prisoner, being fed and cared for at least by this good samaritan, a kindly German Red Cross orderly. Then Canuck bit the hard highway acquiring him. Carl from the darkness of his loneliness. The town at last. He'd see The Legion.

The Canuck returned from his errand, his face wreathed in smiles. "Atta boy, Carl," he shouted. "Got a good meal for us both, you betcha! Come on, kid. Let's go eat." After a while

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILE

CHAPTER XVIII.

For a long time after Adela had gone, the old man sat with head sunk forward. Then, with something that sounded like a sigh, he looked up at the tall man still standing before him. For a long time he looked. He seemed to be weighing some thought. At last he rose.

"Senor Radcliffe, forget all that you have heard and seen here. Those who have youth can never understand the tragedy of outliving one's time. Perhaps some day will be a language in which one may speak across the generations, but it is not yet. Of your own conduct, I have nothing to reproach you. And now, if you will excuse me—"

To Ted once again the feeling that this courtly speaking, courteous Spaniard was setting a carefully chosen part. Those eyes seemed to tell a cold malevolence that the slim words could not quite conceal. He answered quietly:

"I am the one to go."

The old man nodded and put out his hand. "Perhaps it is best; but not in anger. Let us part saying, as my forefathers said, 'May you go with God.'"

He seemed very old and very lonely as he turned and walked with short, uneven steps across the patio and up the stairs.

In the guest room Don Bob was standing by the window knocking the ash from his pipe He looked up attentively as the boy entered.

"Well? Harsh words?"

Ted shook his head. "None. But there's no doubt the old fellow hates me. I think I'd better go. There was a scene between Adela and Morales that wasn't pretty, and if chance throws Jito and me together today it's likely to end in some broken furniture. Tell me what happened last night when we didn't come."

Don Bob reached for a cigar and laughed. "I felt like a lion tamer in a thunderstorm. My dear Jito had driven Adela's roadster three times down to the end of the road. Morales remained calm, but he got more sullen as the hours passed. By nightfall both of them had forgotten they ever knew English, and we all did what little talking there was in Spanish. It must be easier to say pleasant things in Spanish while, you're thinking murder in your heart. Before dawn I scared Jito saddle up and ride off. An hour ago he came back, looking like a soul let loose from hell. Then I heard some whispered sentences and once Morales raised his voice to say, 'Remember, my violence.' The rest of their talk was behind closed doors. It's all easy enough to understand. You happen to be the first American who has ever taken Adela seriously, and when she began guarded by the rigid convention of this place. Only for you she has let down the bars. And Jito, of course, would sell his soul and all the universe for Adela.

"But what he is ready for me to understand is why Morales has been so civil to you. It would be more like him to order you shooting out the door—there'd be absolutely nothing to prevent. There's something not explained back of that. Whatever it is, remember, Jito's words made two enemies today, and one of them is the most powerful man on the border country. An enemy out here is something to be reckoned with. You know, I'm not so sure but that it might be a great deal better for you to go back East."

Ted had been throwing his clothes into the suitcase. At the last words he raised his head.

"I'll set them damned first. I'm going to make my home out here in spite of every Spaniard and vaquero on the border. Besides, there's a reason—"

Raising his eyes he caught the smile on his friend's face. "You're joking about my running away."

"Perhaps. But I, too, was thinking about that reason." Presently his face grew serious again. "And yet, as to Adela—"

"I know. I've said nothing, Bob."

Bob looked at him with eyes in which amusement and affection were mingled. "With that cherub face of yours, old son, you wouldn't have to write an essay about it, would you?"

Then he too busied himself with the packing.

Only Morales appeared to speed their journey. Adela, he explained, was in her room, and he thought best not to disturb her. The senors would understand! With Ted he shook hands gravely and for a moment he held the hand of Don Bob between both his own.

"We must see more of each other old friend," he said. "We have more in common than boundary fences, no?"

Ten miles down the road Don Bob turned the roadster south from the Verdi highway and followed a sandy, winding trail toward the foothills.

Last night in one of his confidential moments, Morales told me the major was making his headquarters not far from here. I want to run over and learn what the old soldier has found about El Coyote."

"Hmm! would be foolish to tell you, wouldn't he? I have a suspicion you're at cahoots with the bandit."

Bob laughs. "Like Price, I'm a wonderful. Compared to most, senses politicians, that be. I'm a gentleman of high integrity. I deplore his tendency to walk on the other fellow's cattle once in a while. Still, that's necessary Mexican motive alone out here. Occasionally you must have a good fuley beefsteak for yourself and your fellow idealists."

Then, each busy with his own thoughts, they fell silent for an hour, while the car wound its way toward the borken country of the foothills. At last Bob pointed. "There's Blount's camp, hidden away as carefully as the Washington Monument. Tell me, what self-respecting bandit could ever miss that? Let's see what the major knows."

But the major, it turned out, knew surprisingly little. A week's constant patrol of the desert had yielded nothing, and so far the cavalrymen who were stationed at the few waterholes had learned nothing. Two sergeants alone had anything to report, and their report was far from satisfactory to Blount. They had camped at a small waterhole, and in the night a lone rider had ridden up and stolen both their horses from under their very noses. Next day the horses' scrawny tracks found tied to the corral in Blount's camp. The major was very bitter about it all. Soldiers, he seemed to feel, ought not to be treated that way. It wasn't good, orthodox warfare. "Damned impudent bravado," he stormed, looking very fierce and military in his khaki. Then his face brightened.

"But we're combing this God-forsaken country from the U. S. border to the high range. That means we will soon be even, as far as knowledge of the country goes. We're mapping every stream and waterhole—he'll have to step high, wide, and handsome to keep ahead of us. And we're showing the natives that it isn't the great thing to be one of El Coyote's friends. They're still slow in giving information, it's been a case of 'no sabe' ever since we started. They know—of course, they know. But they're loyal, and they're terribly afraid of the death that overtook the last poor devil who gave information on El Coyote.

"But there's one chap I've got my eyes on. I think he could tell a lot if he dared. He is one of Morales's men, but I suspect he is one in part of El Coyote's band. Two nights ago he came to my tent and wanted to know if I would send him with a guard out of the country if he gave us information about the bandit. I told him I'd have the right kind of information we would give him a guard to any place he wanted to go, and I guaranteed protection against revenge. My Spanish isn't too good, as you know, and we didn't get together. He wasn't quite satisfied and he went away, but he's coming back."

The major waved his hand. "Sooner or later that's the way it's going to go. It may not be this fellow, and may not be now. But next day or next month a man will come willing to talk if there's gold and protection for him. Morales will put up the gold and I'll furnish the protection, and then—zip!—the end of El Coyote, and you'll owe me a dinner. In the meantime, it's good practice for the boys, and as Clara says, it reduces my figure to where I can button up last year's vest."

Don Bob looked thoughtful. "It sounds like a drawn-out process. It may take years—unless you learn something in your interview with this fellow."

"If he comes ergh you will be able to help, I'll be sure to have you and Morales. That may be next week. You and Morales with your knowledge of the country, can judge what the information may be worth. Personally, I think the fellow's looking for a raise in the blood money."

"In any case, I should hold out for a great deal. He had better get enough gold to take him out of the country and keep him in a state of pleasant drunkenness for his natural life; otherwise he is risking too much for too little."

Cave Man's Fall

by John Francis DeVine

It really wasn't George Mellows's fault that he became a cave man. The blame rested entirely upon Marie Crain. George never had been other than tender in his meetings toward Marie. He was kind in every action and considerate in every thought. In short, he was in love with her.

When Marie desired anything she had but to name it and George would get it for her. When she wished to go anywhere she had only to say so and George would take her there.

This had been going on for more than a year. Yet whenever George brought up the subject of marriage Marie evaded the issue. "Let's talk about something else," she always said. Marie really needed a bit of cave-mannish treatment.

The change in George occurred after he and Marie had seen a gangster film. The gangster hero's sweetheart, afraid her darling would be killed, protested that he had not go out to do battle with an enemy mob that night. Soon-

St. Louis, Mo.—Except for Pitcher Sam Haines, who probably will not be able to start because of an arm injury, Manager Gabby Street expects the St. Louis Cardinals to be at their full strength for the World Series.

Gabby said today he believes both Joe (Pepper) Martin, centre-fielder, and Chick Hafey, left-fielder, Cardinal, will be ready for action in the first game against the Philadelphia Athletics here Thursday.

Martin, who suffered a wrenched left knee in baseball Sunday, worked out with his teammates yesterday, limbering the injured knee by sawing the injured knee to any inadequate degree. Hafey also sprained an ankle Sept. 26, also Sunday.

Haines, Street said, probably will not start during the series. The big right-hander pulled a muscle three weeks ago, and has not pitched since. That has inhibited his throwing arm regarded as the probable Cardinal starting pitcher in the first game of the series.

The return to three world series has won three games while losing only one.

With Haines out of consideration, it was regarded as probable Gabby Street would send Paul Derringer, Giant right-hander, against the Athletics in the opening game. Derringer, however, said he would not announce his choice of pitchers either until Wednesday. "Will Sill" Hallahan was considered the logical choice for the second game.

Street gave his regular workout for this afternoon, after the players return to Sportsman's Park from a victory parade through the downtown streets. They will be joined by the regulars in Wednesday's drill Wallaby Ferrell, left-hander of the Cardinal pitching staff, recently in service.

The athletics apparently will not hold a workout at Sportsman's Park before the series. They are, of course, familiar with the field, and they play their American League games in Shibe Park, Philadelphia, and, in addition, had World Series experience there last October.

CARDS HAVE INFIELD EDGE OVER THE A'S

Defensive Strength Hovers Must Be Given the Athletics

TWO HITTING ACES

A's Are Stronger Behind Bat and in the Outfield Berths

(By Alan Gould, Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, N.Y.—Measured by the calibre of pitching, by the all-round stick of batting, skill and experience, the World's Championship Athletics possess a decided edge over the Cardinals in defensive strength if the clubs changed leagues this week.

The National League champions have a faster infield, featuring the Dutch-Gabby combination around second base. The A's otherwise have an edge on the mound, with Lefty Grove and Rube Walberg especially if the sensational ballplaying Cochrane is behind the plate.

Lefty Grove and George Earnshaw, the twice aces upon whom the hopes of scorchin' pitch Athletics League victory are based, always have the benefit of a hard hitting support from their teammates. Inspiration works both ways, when either of these 1931 pitchers is on the mound.

It is an old baseball axiom that "you can't hit what you can't see" and at times last October, it appeared some of the Cardinal batsmen were not properly visualizing the smoke of Grove and Earnshaw, set alone connecting with any baseball success. Walberg and Hoyt will form the second line of pitching defense for the Mighty Defense Gamble.

The Cardinal infield defense will be distinctly a gamble, if Gabby Street is forced to rely on Paul Derringer, and Bill Hallahan, instead of Burleigh Grimes and Jess Haines, veterans of the Red Bird first front. Derringer is a comer to series fire. With Hallahan, it's either a shutout or a knockout. He blanked the A's the first time he faced them last year and was routed by five bunches the next time.

The A's infield has never been the club's strongest point. For, the instance, does not compare with Bottomley as a defensive worker, although as Jimmy is steady, Bishop is not so spectacular as Prisch, one of the great defensive second basemen of all time. Haley, an old reliable, cannot cover the ground Max has the throwing arm that Gelbert owns. The Mack substitute, Williams, is more on Gel bert's style. Dykes is about on a par with either Adams or Sligh at third.

On the outer patrol, the A's have two of the finest fly chasers in Al Simmons and Mule Haas. Both cover acres of ground and have great arms. Haley, in left, and either Pepper Martin or Orsatti in centre, for the Cardinals do not quite measure up to the exceptional standard of their rivals Watkins or Roettger, in right field for the National leaguers, lack the experience of the veteran Bing Miller.

Mickey Cochrane has given one or two mechanical faults behind the bat. His arm is good, though not the best in the backstopping business, but the great receiver's all around ability surpasses that of the star Jimmy Wilson. No. 1 catcher for the Cards. Mickey's biggest advantage is his brain. He is one of the greatest "money" players in baseball and has starred in each of the last two world series.

On Thursday the annual World's Series grind starts this way, with the opening game of the championship scheduled. What a grand battle of it there ought to be between Donny Mack and Gabby Street. Both remind me of a couple of old strategy credited to Wilbert Robinson of the Brooklyn baseball Robinson, if I remember correctly was then catching. It was a game in Washington where, due to the number of civil service, the game did not start till 4.30. This day during the last inning of the game it became very dark. Wilbert Robinson, the speed ball king was on the mound. Two were out and Johnson was in the ball hole with men on bases. Uncle Robbie strolled out to Johnson and told him to take the pitcher. Thunder rumbled, Johnson wound up. Uncle Robbie snatched his glove. Right over his head, it passed the ump for the strike. "Out" yelled the Ump and nobody seemed to be any the wiser.

On November 11th there is to be a meeting of the amateur baseball moguls of Western Ontario at London. They are proposing to form an association of their own and break away from the O.A.B.A. It might be a good thing for the Central League past a representative to this meeting to find out exactly what their proposal is. Some years ago the Inter-County League kicked over the traces of the "parent body" but the other senior leagues did not get behind the move. The Inter-County League might be able to operate again, as in the old days, if they could get a readjustment of their by-law 35. The smaller towns cannot stand the loss of the gate receipts when the big games are held in the O.A.B.A. league in the city. The

MAN'S SAVINGS OF $950 GONE

Russian in Toronto is Victim of Smooth Artist

Toronto.—Listening to an enticing conversation with a stranger he met on the corner of Queen and Soho Streets caused Paul Lach, a young Russian living at 32 Draper Street, to part with $950 in the belief he could buy a $2,000 house on Royce Avenue for $1,000 cash.

The stranger told Lach he owned a house on Royce Avenue, which he valued at $2,000, but for $1,000 cash he would sell it. Thinking he saw a chance to make a quick profit in city real estate, Lach expressed his interest and confided that he had $950 in the bank.

An appointment was made for the two to meet on Queen and Soho Streets at 9.30 Monday morning. Thence they went to the Bank of Montreal at Queen and Spadina Streets, where Lach cashed a cheque for $815.

To this amount Lach added $140 he had in his pocket and handed the whole amount to the stranger. The latter put the money in an envelope and suggested they walk back to Soho and Queen. There he handed an envelope to Lach.

Tells Him to Wait

"You wait here," he suggested "until I go to the city hall and the registry office and have the house transferred in you name."

With the envelope in his inner coat pocket the Russian kept his vigil at the corner for nearly two hours. Finally he decided to look inside the envelope. He found only a few sips of white paper.

Hurrying to police headquarters, he told Detectives Sergeant William Block and Harry Glascock about the $2,000 house on Royce Avenue, the Russian about his head. "I believed him," he explained. "He spoke Russian to me."

Asked if the stranger got all his money, Lach said he had taken everything from him—$2.29 which he had in his pocket. "I don't know what I shall do," he exclaimed.

Restore 5 Cent Beer is His Sign

Baltimore—If H. L. Mencken were dictator of the world, he would do just one thing: "Bring back five-cent beer."

Commenting on a radio address in which H. G. Wells outlined world economic and social reorganization as his plan if he were suddenly clothed with the United States Presidency, Mencken said:

"My first and only act if I were dictator of the world would be to bring back five cent beer. I'd have a big glass—at least a quart for a nickel.

"This would be more significant than any other thing in restoring the liberty of the people. If we tried abolishing navies, the generals would believe you; and navies wouldn't believe you. Utopia for sailors, made up of lobsters and they won't be whipped.

"Wells is seeing ghosts again. He has been seeing ghosts since 30 year now.

"Give me a glass of beer . . . but it has to be a big one."

May Buy Properties for Esplanade Without Vote

But Relief From Bylaw Has to go to Provincial Board

Council Meets

City Council had one of the easiest sessions on record on Monday night, it being the first regular meeting of the council since the holidays. The committee meetings preceding the open meeting was short and the council meeting was therefore was shorter. The deliberations of the members was over shortly after eight o'clock, although they are not scheduled to meet until seven-thirty. The meeting of the previous council meetings during the summer months were taken as read this helping to shorten the session.

Advice was received from the Relief Committee of unemployment as to the procedure to be taken respecting the amount of money the city spends. If the council wishes to buy any property or do any sewer or other work debentures may be issued for twenty years but the council cannot pass the by-law authorizing this expenditure until the by-law has been submitted to the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board. If the council favors the esplanade proposition they will be able to buy the property without submitting the question to the ratepayers. The Council brought in no recommendations with respect to relief work on Monday night nor was the subject mentioned in the council meeting.

A committee composed of Alderman Woodley Add. Macmillan and the City Engineer was appointed to confer with Thomas Harris respecting the deed of the lots on East Moira Moira Street. At the committee meeting on Friday night John Hibbard of Hibbard Brothers asked the council to refund to him $600 which was deposited with the city after they had received the contract for wiring the new filtration plant. The question was referred to Gore Naismith and Storrs the consulting engineers along with a letter requesting that the money be returned.

Request for a sidewalk in front of the Capitol theatre was signed by the necessary number of ratepayers and this work will be done at once. A petition for the paving of work under the Local Improvement Act were passed. Some of the work has already been started and other work will be commenced immediately. The pieces of work are very small but will assist the unemployment situation to a certain extent until the larger works are started.

There were no inquiries nor motions brought before the council and the orders of the day were called.

Blind Lawyer-Poet Freed From Asylum

Montreal—Seven years of detention in an insane asylum ended Monday for Bernard Trevers, blind lawyer poet, who was freed by Mr. Justice Wilfrid Bissonnette, Superior Court by a judgment maintaining a writ of habeas corpus.

The judgment was delivered in a crowded room where more than 100 interested friends and acquaintances received the news with open approval.

Gaudet was placed in Longue Pointe Asylum on January 25, 1921, after being arrested by two Montreal constables who, it is alleged, took him to police headquarters on a pretext of offering him shelter. He was later removed to Longue Pointe, where he was detained on the charge of insanity brought by relatives.

Lawyer and Lagarde appeared for Gaudet.

Jails of Present Condemned by Judge

Whitby—Condemning the present type of jails in the province of Ontario, Judge Ardagh urged the grand jury to consider the establishment of a number of jail farms in the province as a more modern method of punishment, Mr. Justice Ardagh in charging the grand jury at the opening of the Spring Assizes here on Monday afternoon, asked the jury to consider the system and condemn it if they saw fit.

The present type of jail, mostly built about 1830, with its stone or steel cells, Justice Ardagh claimed were scarcely fit for human habitation. Men and youths awaiting trial, in some cases innocent, were forced to mingle with older and hardened criminals, and in this he saw more a development of crime than a corrective influence.

The system was entirely wrong, Justice Ardagh said. Criminals of various classes should be separated, while prisoners awaiting trial should be kept entirely separate Prisoners serving sentence should be provided with trades to occupy themselves and help provide for their keeping.

His Lordship averred there was no better time to build jail farms than at present, with many men who will require government relief out of work.

YEAR'S TRUCE UNDER FAVOR

Period Beginning Nov I Suggested by League Committee.

Geneva.—The disarmament committee of the League of Nations today adopted a resolution designed to prepare for a possible one-year truce in armaments beginning November 1.

The resolution, embodying a compromise between the British proposal for an immediate truce—which the majority of the League members and the United States supported—and objections raised by Japan and France, reads as follows:

"The assembly requests the Governments invited to the disarmament conference (to be held in Geneva next February) to prepare for this event by means of an armaments truce and accordingly:

"Requests the council (of the League) to urge the Governments convened to the said conference to give proof of their earnest desire for a successful issue of efforts to insure and organize peace, and without prejudicing the decision of the conference or the programs or proposals submitted to it by each Government, to refrain from any measure involving an increase in their armaments.

"It likewise requests the council to ask the Governments to state before September 30 whether they are prepared for a period of one year, as from that date, to accept this truce in armaments."

MULTIPLY YOUR "SALES TALK"

By

6,500

IF it were possible for you to deliver a five minutes "sales talk" 'personally, to each of 6,500 prospective customers.... it would take more than TEN WEEKS of continuous talking, at the rate of eight hours a day and six days a week You could SELL a whale of a lot of merchandise under those circumstances, couldn't you?

Such a talk fest is, of course, impossible, but you can easily reach the homes of every one of those 6,500 prospective BUYERS with your sales message — Not once in ten weeks but EVERY DAY.....and remember those homes are occupied not by ONE customer but by an average of three and one half, which brings the actual number of prospective buyers of YOUR merchandise to more than 25,000.

The daily circulation of The Daily Ontario Intelligencer for the month of May, 1931, was approximately 6,500 copies. Do you honestly believe you can afford to overlook the sales possibilities of so vast an audience?

First Company of Idle Going North Next Week

Government to Aid 4,000 to 5,000 Men Shortly

Toronto, Sept. 28—Between four and five thousand jobless men will leave old Combine for the North within the next two weeks to work on the Trans-Canada highway, Hon. William Finlayson, minister of Northern Development, announced yesterday. First of the government relief camps will be set up where it is expected that the first batch of 1,000 men will go North about the middle of next week.

Already a number of Northern Ontario men have been established in the work camps, Hon. Mr. Finlayson said. No actual work has been started sending the arrival of the newcomers from Southern Ontario.

Cabinet council and the government relief committee met this morning afternoon and at the conclusion of the two-hour conference Hon. W. H. Price, in the absence of Premier Henry, announced that the government's policy in relation to the entire unemployment problem would be made public today. Quotas of the men from municipalities will be made known. Disposition of the men in the June Jungle has also been on the meeting and an announcement in regard to this matter will also be forthcoming.

To Create a Day

In reply to criticism of the 30 cents per day payment for men at work on the Trans-Canada high way, Hon. Mr. Finlayson pointed out that this payment was not only for food but included bedding, blankets, tools and other supplies.

"The firm of Crawley and McCracken are busily buying supplies in catering to men on construction jobs," said the minister, "and the government is satisfied that the food will be well done. It would have meant an investment of $1,000,000 if the government had decided to undertake the feeding and housing of the men, not to speak of the extra staffing in the camps. It was felt that it would be to better purpose to spend the money in wages.

"It is unfair to suggest that these men are being soaked 30 cents for everything. If that were the case there might be some justification in the criticism that the rate is too high," was his comment.

"The 30 cents, which comes to $1.80 a week, includes many other things the men must have, such as boxing, cooking equipment, heating equipment, all clothing and bedding, and so forth. It costs the contractor more than 30 cents per day for the necessary outfit.

"As regards the clothing, the men will be able to purchase what they require from time to time after they have begun work and have established a credit. It will be up to the municipalities, however, to see that they have proper clothes so they can go right to work. Every man should have a decent suit of work boots, for instance."

Mystery Surrounds Death of Sulecki, Reformatory Inmate

Guelph, Ont., Sept. 29.—Mystery surrounds the death of Thomas Sulecki, 24, Ontario Reformatory inmate, who succumbed to injuries Sunday in the hospital here.

Sulecki was found suffering from unconscious on the basement floor of the Reformatory below a three-storey flight of stairs. Severe head injuries he sustained in falling down to indicate he had dropped some distance before striking the floor. No one saw the accident, however, and officials have no way to know how the man met his death.

He died without regaining consciousness. An inquest will be held today. Sulecki was convicted in Brantford, August 5th for a breach of the Narcotic Act.

Civil Servants Have Nothing to Fear in Wage Cut

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 29.—Hon. George S. Henry, Premier of Ontario, yesterday denied reports that salaries of civil servants in the Province might be cut ten per cent., as an economy measure.

AMUSEMENTS

"MADONNA OF THE STREETS" A DRAMA OF THE WORLD'S MISFITS

"Madonna of the Streets" is the feature at the Capitol Tuesday and Wednesday.

The harbors and waterfronts of all port cities the world over have been the place of refuge for life's misfit and unfortunate characters. Somehow they all drift down there. The dregs-of-life wretch, the moral degenerate, the social outcast, to find oblivion in one of the dark caverns that front the waters, or seek to salvage themselves at a local mission.

Such characters as these play a vital and important part in "Madonna of the Streets," the Columbia drama now unfolded against the waterfront of San Francisco. They form the background for the tale of love and greed which is subsequently unfolded in this picture.

Evelyn Brent, the star, assumes the role of a worldly woman who descends to the lower depths of the waterfront world in order to gain a personal and selfish end, but remains to become the angel of that unfortunate section. Her role requires the star to reveal all known qualities which have made her one of the stellar actresses of the sound screen.

In her mission work, Miss Brent encounters some interesting characters. All of them represent life's outcasts—they have drifted to the harbor mission from all corners of the earth. Gathered in this mission they are representative of all that is colorful—as cosmopolitan a group as could ever gather.

A superlative cast surrounds Miss Brent in this production. Her leading man is Nelson Eddy, who scored tremendous personal successes in "La Belle Lady to Love," "The Trespasser" and "Holiday." Others in the cast include Josephine Dunn and Ivan Linow. John Robertson directs.

Comedy and other interesting features will be shown in addition to "Madonna of the Streets."

CINEMA WIZARD MAKES GREAT PICTURE OF DRAMATIC STORY

Without doubt the finest picture to be presented in Belleville in many months is "An American Tragedy" which opens at the Belle Theatre yesterday. Based on the famous novel by America's foremost novelist, Theodore Dreiser and following the book faithfully, the picture is packed with outstanding drama. It is the old, old story of a youth and a girl, told in a different way. The consequences, of course, are the same but the ending is different. The "hero," Clyde Griffith, portrayed by Phillips Holmes, is not much of a hero and the girl is unlucky that she meets his just end in the electric chair like a criminal. A car travelling south driven by Mrs. W. C. Gullett, came in collision with Mr. Ashbourne's car. As a result of the accident Mrs. Marcella Collver, sister-in-law of Mrs. Gullett car, suffered very serious injury. Mr. McDonald's car was also travelling toward Picton at the time, but escaped damage.

Garments of Dead Man Found in Water

New York, Sept. 28 — Mrs. Benjamin P. Colling's oft-repeated story of her husband's murder by two men, who boarded their cruising car on Long Island Sound was further substantiated today by the finding of two pairs of trousers and a coat in the waters of Coney Island Neck.

Deputy Sheriff Kehlenbeck, acting on orders of District Attorney Thomas C. T. Dine, found the garments yesterday as he was grappling in the Sound. They were found covered with seaweed and sand, indicating they had been in the water for some weeks. Colling, a Stamford, Conn., engineer, was

Judgment Against George Ashbourne and Mrs. McDonald

In Picton police court last week before Magistrate A. E. Ostrom, Picton, Crown Attorney Ashbourne and Mrs. McDonald were heard, convictions being made in both cases. Mrs. Wallace Ashbourne was fined $100 and costs and Mrs. McDonald $80 and costs, besides the suspension for two months of her operator's permit. The Criminal Code under which proceedings were taken against Ashbourne gives no authority to suspend motor or operator's licence.

These cases arose from an accident occurring on the Cherry Valley Road, just outside the town of Picton on the afternoon of June 13.

A car travelling south driven by Mrs. W. C. Gullett, came in collision with Mr. Ashbourne's car. As a result of the accident Mrs. Marcella Collver, sister-in-law of Mrs. Gullett car, suffered very serious injury. Mr. McDonald's car was also travelling toward Picton at the time, but escaped damage.

Garments of Dead Man Found in Water

New York, Sept. 28 — Mrs. Benjamin P. Colling's oft-repeated story of her husband's murder by two men, who boarded their cruising car on Long Island Sound was further substantiated today by the finding of two pairs of trousers and a coat in the waters of Coney Island Neck.

Deputy Sheriff Kehlenbeck, acting on orders of District Attorney Thomas C. T. Dine, found the garments yesterday as he was grappling in the Sound. They were found covered with seaweed and sand, indicating they had been in the water for some weeks. Colling, a Stamford, Conn., engineer, was

British Goods are Enjoying Preference

Ottawa — British goods will enjoy greater preference in Canada temporarily and the United States will be penalized, by virtue of new customs regulations issued to all collectors of national revenue yesterday. Collectors at all ports throughout Canada have been instructed by R. W. Breadner, commissioner of customs, to admit British goods that are dutiable upon payment of duty based upon the depreciated value of the pound, while American goods are subjected to an increase in the valuation of approximately ten per cent owing to the fact that the Canadian dollar is at a discount in New York.

In celebration of France's colonial glory soldiers from Algeria, Morocco, Senegal and Indo-China were reviewed in Paris by the president of the republic.

Right between the seasons comes a desire for a light little hat that has something of the new fall mood. This is exemplified in a little hat with a draped tam crown of supple black felt and chartreuse ballet ribbon posed at the side with little bows.

ESTEVAN QUIETS DOWN AFTER FATAL RIOTING

100 Mounties Guard Estevan Against Riots as Judge Opens Probe

Miners Beaten, Bruised Quit After Fatal Night

KNIVES USED

Conditions Charged as Bad in South Saskatchewan

Estevan, Sask., Sept. 30 (C.P.)—Violated authority of the invading mobs of coal mine strikers from idle fields to the east, sanctity of law and order in Estevan is guarded today by more than 100 broad-shouldered mounted police as Judge W. Wylie, of the district court, prepared to start an investigation into all aspects of the strike for the Saskatchewan and Dominion Governments.

Strikers, bruised and beaten after their clash with police in Estevan yesterday, two of their number dead and five seriously wounded, were quiet in the mining area near Bienfait and Taylorton, a few miles east of here. The police fired into an advancing crowd of the miners after tear bombs and baton attacks had failed to rout the 400 strikers. Fourteen rioters, including three women, were arrested.

The miners had attempted to parade Estevan streets in defiance of an order by Mayor D. M. Bannerman, prohibiting the assembly of any body of police, who were outnumbered six to one, included one seriously injured and nine hurt less seriously. Five bystanders were injured, one gravely.

Recently appointed, a commission to investigate all aspects of the strike, which started September 7th, began work this morning with a preliminary probe in the coal section today. W. J. Perdue, Crown Prosecutor of Estevan, will act as counsel for the commissioner.

Conditions Blamed

Charges that wages and conditions in the southern Saskatchewan mines are the cause of the strike and that miners had been victimized by operators were laid by James Simpson of Calgary, president of the Miners' Union, which called the walkout. An inquiry by United Mine Workers of America (Saskatchewan section) reported conditions near housing conditions and the water supply bad.

Dead following yesterday's pitched battle between police and miners are Nick Narwan and Julian Jyrykka, strikers. Both were killed by bullets from rifles of police, Narwan being shot through the heart and his companion through the abdomen. Jyrykka died as he was being carried into the waiting room of the Estevan Hospital.

The others slapped down police with knives, rocks and clubs. Officers were severely hurt during the melee which lasted 15 minutes, several Canadian Mounted Police Constable Sutherland seriously injured but his fellow defenders were able to keep the fight all to end for the most part, coming back to the scene after recovering from initial treatment.

Woman Spectator Shot

Miss L. Wilson, a visitor from England, was the most seriously hurt of the spectators. A rifle bullet pierced her left shoulder and her condition was reported serious. Clive Butterworth, Estevan, was shot through the left leg.

Toronto Despatch Says Draft From Here to Labor Unit

"The whole matter will be opened up at the meeting on Thursday night when labor matters are to be discussed," said Mayor Reid today when asked by a reporter about the meeting of a local draft to the labor unit to work on the Trans-Canada Highway.

A despatch from Toronto states:

"The first draft of 4,000 has been drawn for work on the trans-Canada highway construction. Hon. J. D. Monteith, chairman of the special advisory committee on unemployment announced this afternoon. This draft is drawn from the congested centres where unemployment is most acute and demanding immediate relief. Other municipalities will be notified as additional allotments are made in the near future.

Premier Henry declined to announce the quota figures, declaring it inadvisable at this time. Toronto, however, receives the greater portion of about 800, according to unofficial figures, while twenty municipalities such as Windsor, Hamilton, London, Belleville, Kingston etc. are included on a pro rata basis of unemployment.

"The men start north on October 5 and a quota will be sent in to the camps now located for the next ten the ten first days of the month, at the rate of about 400 daily."

Scarlet-Tinted Toe Nails and Ash Hair are New Rage

Winter Beach Bathing Suits Under and Under"

BLONDES IN FAVOR

New York, Sept. 30 — Scarlet-tinted toe-nails and ash blonde will be something for socially prosper people to worry about at the winter resort beaches this season, Kathleen Howard, fashion expert, predicted today.

Bathing suits, Miss Howard told the fashion group, an organization of stylists and fashion writers, are to be "under and under." The one-piece knitted suit, she has advised in cablegrams from Paris, is a favorite beach garment shown here.

The wind-blown hair bob cut square at the back is blonde, if possible, and the mode is available to all women who know the art of applying white henna to their natural gray or dark locks, Miss Howard pointed out.

Bronze women at Monte Carlo still are wearing pyjamas, mostly of lamé, she reported.

Hats continue small and are tilted more than ever on one side of the head. Most of them have a high trim in the back to give height to the wearer of the new square-shouldered costumes and the huge fur collars. The trim is usually a quill or two or a stiff veiling or ribbon effect.

PROFITEERING IN FOOD TO BE DEALT WITH

No Statement of General Election From Premier

HOUSE IN DOUBT

House Will Adjourn on Wednesday of Next Week

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 30 (CP)—Everybody was agog in the House of Commons this afternoon to know whether there would be a general election or not. But Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald gave no definite word.

The Prime Minister announced the government's intention to bring down a bill to deal with profiteering in food. The programme of business further announced provides for adjournment on Wednesday next, Oct. 7.

Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson, leader of the Opposition, had asked questions regarding the government's further programme and when it was expected to conclude the session next October.

"Will the House prorogue or adjourn next Wednesday," asked Mr. Henderson.

"We shall adjourn on Wednesday according to our expectations," the Prime Minister replied.

Members looked around wondering how to interpret the reply. The House roared when David Kirkwood, labor member for Dumbarton asked:

"Will the Prime Minister not relieve the House by saying if there is to be a general election?"

House "Relieved".

They went under the impression," Mr. MacDonald said, "that the war I have answered my right honorable friend's question has greatly relieved the House."

There was another laugh. But on the question of a general election that was all the Prime Minister had to say.

Both sides of the House however, quite cheered the news the food profiteering bill is to be put through. There was a bombardment from labor benches when Arthur Greenwood, minister details of the bill. Prime Minister MacDonald continued to deal with the reply that it would be introduced in the autumn session.

"Will it cover rents as well as food," asked Campbell Stephen, labor member for Camlachie, Glasgow.

"This bill covers food," the Prime Minister replied, "but we have rents under observation."

The Liberal Opposition Air Philip Cunliffe-Lister, President of the Board of Trade, asked that the prices of imported wheat have risen 20 per cent. since butter fire per cent and imported bacon forty-seven per cent by various proportions between August and September, 15 the day before suspension of the gold standard was announced. Flour quotations and bacon prices were unchanged during September, Mr. Chamberlain said, they were changes in butter, so far as he was aware, Sir Philip told the House.

Setting sail from Barcelona, Spain, on May 25th, in a 36-foot boat, Prof. Blanco Alferich and his wife and daughter, are believed lost in the Atlantic Ocean. Many Questions "Fired" at Meeting on Unemployment

Shafts Levelled at Council By Some of Labor Speakers

REMEDY SOUGHT

"ORGANIZE" was the slogan of the first unemployed men's meeting held in Belleville at the True Blues' lodge room last night.

Long before the advertised time the hall was filled to capacity when as least 300 of Belleville's unemployed met for the purpose of finding ways and means to relieve the present situation of unemployment in Belleville. Some were sitting on benches, some on the floor, and many were forced to stand throughout the whole proceedings. The room rang with applause when Mr. Charles E. Hanna moved forward to act as chairman.

Charles E. Hanna Chairman

Mr. Hanna stated that he had been asked by a delegation of the unemployed to call the meeting and suggested that they elect a chairman for the evening. Before the speaker could explain his aim the meeting unanimously acclaimed him presiding officer of the evening, amid applause. He said that under no conditions were "Reds" wanted in Belleville. This statement was received with many sounds of applause from those present which went to show the true spirit of the meeting.

"Labor must organize in order to accomplish their end," he said. "You have accomplished something when the City Council has called a meeting for the purpose of meeting the unemployed issue in Belleville on Thursday evening. Mr. Hanna went on to say that he was proud that his father had been a laboring man for it meant much to him as a citizen in this age. "What you need is organization," said he, throwing the meeting open for discussion. "Gentlemen, in organization there is strength, united you stand, divided you fall."

There was some little discussion on the subject of the city paying 6 cents per hour and some manufacturers only paying 25 and 30 cent per hour.

This point was clearly explained, when it was pointed out that the relief work the corporation could only work about six or seven months a year, while the factory laborer was able to work twelve months of the year. Mr. Hanna stated that perhaps the wages paid under the present hard times and conditions and asked the meeting not to criticize the city council too severely as they were trying to do the best they could.

Bar Alberta Coal

Mr. F. Lanner asked that a delegation be formed to meet the City Council on Thursday evening at the unemployment meeting. This motion met with the approval of all those present.

VILLAGE OF CLARKSBURG THREATENED

Collingwood Fire Brigade Called to Scene, Puts Out Fire

$50,000 LOSS

Three Stores, Masonic Hall and Printing Shop Destroyed

Owen Sound, Ont., Sept. 30 —Fire believed to be of an incendiary origin threatened the entire village of Clarksburg, thirty miles east of here, early this morning but the flames were checked by the Collingwood fire brigade, which was called to the scene. Damage estimated at $50,000 was caused by the blaze which destroyed three stores, the Masonic Hall and a printing office. Loss of the latter at the home of W. J. Chalkin's general store and the Masonic Hall is covered by insurance.

The Meaford fire brigade was also called out but by the time they reached the scene of the blaze the Collingwood firemen had the flames under control. However, no sooner had they reached the scene of the fire, than a call was received from the adjoining village of Thornbury, the Grange Hall being the building in which the fire had started. The Meaford brigade raced the hall, although about $300 damage was done.

The fire in Clarksburg was also on fire when the Clarksburg fire was first noticed.

BOYS ESCAPE

Father Downstairs Makes Frantic Effort at Rescue

Kingston, Ont., Sept. 30—Wandering back into the flaming room from the window where she had been taken by her husband, Mrs. Ichn McNichols who has been blind for years, and two small daughters was burned to death today at their home in Glendower, about thirty miles north of Kingston in Frontenac despite the frantic attempts of her husband to save her. His efforts were thwarted before the house.

Mr. McNicholas had been sleeping downstairs and his wife, two daughters Mary aged eight and Hazel aged five, and a baby were sleeping up stairs. During the night Mr. McNicholas was awakened by the intense heat and by the flames which had burst through the window.

Leads Wife to Window

Mr. McNicholas saw no time in getting to where his wife was asleep, and without waking her or to a window. On the window was screen, and while the husband was struggling to smash it out, his blind wife wandered back into the midst of the flames, apparently making an effort to reach where she thought the little girls were. In the meantime the boys had jumped from the window to safety. McNicholas made desperate efforts to get back into the room but he thought his wife had gone, but the flames were fast destroying every thing in sight, and he was driven from the house by the heat.

Son's Brave Attempt

Realizing that his mother and sisters were burning to death, Jonn aged 18 the eldest boy, tied a rope to his body and smashed through a downstairs window, but he could make little progress, as the entire top floor was a mass of flames, and he too, was forced to leave the building. Mr. McNicholas has badly burned about the face and hands, and was stricken by Dr. Heithwell, coroner of Sydenham. The remains of the mother and children, badly burned and charred, were found after the fire had burned the house to the ground. Coroner Dr. Heithwell of Sydenham, will hold an inquest.

Kingston, Ont., Sept. 30— Mrs. Ichn McNichol, 37, and two daughters, Margaret 8, and Mary 8 were burned to death in the family home in Glendower, four miles from Godfrey, and about 25 miles north of Kingston early this morning.

Mrs. McNichol, and the two little girls were sleeping on the second floor, while Mr. McNichol slept downstairs. The fire broke out upstairs, and when the fire broke Mr. McNichol was awakened by heat from some unknown cause, the boys were barely able to escape with their lives.

Mr. McNichol made efforts to save his wife and children but was quite badly burned in the futile attempt.

Inquest Opens

Investigation of the tragedy was being conducted today at Glendower by Dr. Paul Heilwell, coroner, and Provincial police. A jury was officially stated that apparently the fire had started near the wood shed or in the back kitchen.

Mrs. McNicholas was formerly Lena Eves of Kingston, the two children, who were burned to death with her, were the youngest of the family. John McNicholas, a graduate of Queen's University and is living in New York, as well as a daughter, Eileen.

There are four sons at home. The husband, John McNicholas, was very badly burned about the face and hand in frantic attempts to get upstairs and reach his wife and two small daughters, and is being treated by Dr. Heilwell.

Mayor Urges Citizens To Assist in Relief

Mayor Reid today addressed a letter to the citizens of Belleville requesting co-operation with the city council in unemployment relief and suggesting means to that end. His letter reads:

"To Citizens of Belleville—

"I would respectfully request citizens to join with the council in their efforts to assist in relieving unemployment in every possible way during the fall and winter. Possibly you will have lawns and gardens to clean up, furnaces to put in shape, chimneys to be cleaned, wood and placed and various other odd jobs which need attention. A day's work or even a few hours given to an unemployed person will benefit them.

"I feel assured that it is only necessary for you to call your attention to this matter to have you do all in your power to co-operate.

"Respectfully yours,

(Sgd.) "Geo. A. Reid,
"Mayor."

Two Slain, 22 Injured As Red-Inspired Miners Fight Estevan Police

Tear Gas Bombs, Batons Used, Before Bullets Fired

9 SERIOUSLY HURT

12 Policemen Injured—Reinforcements Awaited as New Outbreak Feared.

Estevan, Sask., Sept. 30—War-fare broke out in the coal town of Estevan Tuesday leaving in its wake a grim toll of death and destruction as police battled for three quarters of an hour with a mob of striking miners. Late last night it had been determined that two strikers had been killed by rifle bullets, five strikers gravely injured, five bystanders injured (two seriously) during the fracas, and 12 policemen injured.

Nick Narvan, one of the dead, was shot through the heart as he mounted a fire truck which was used to play water on the rioters. Julian Jyrahko Bleniak, was shot in the abdomen as he was milling in front of the town hall with the rioters. He died as he was brought into the Estevan hospital waiting room.

Constable J. Sutherland, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was gravely injured during the riot. One other constable had his arm fractured by a rock, and others received scalp wounds from flying rocks and clubs in the melee. Most of the policemen were able to carry on after emergency treatment.

The riot was precipitated when the strikers, 600 in number, decided to hold a parade and demonstration in Estevan during the day, contrary edict. The total arrests made by police in the day's riot reached 11 men and three women.

The battle raged over an hour and a half. Terror reigned in the town last night, however, and police are waiting for reinforcements and preparing for another outbreak.

The miners, who went on strike when their employers refused to grant their demands for more pay, nearly four weeks ago, enlisted the town from the coal fields of Bienfait, Nine miles away, automobiles and trucks, armed with knives, clubs and stones. The leading car in the parade carried a red flag.

Seriously injured are: Miss L. King, a bystander who came here recently from Nelson, England; Tony Mazion, of Estevan, a special on at the clash; John Furberg, striker; Rocky Person, Sask.; Louis Sevay, striker, Crescent collieries; Alfred Jancsuk, striker, Bienfait; Tony Stankewich, striker, Bienfait; and Mike Kaluzny, striker, Crescent collieries.

Chief of Police McCutcheon, of Estevan, received a gash in the head during the hand to hand hostilities and Inspector Butterworth, Estevan music teacher, was shot as he stood on the outskirts of the battle. He received a minor flesh wound.

Mayor Bannatyne, who ordered out police when the miners first threatened to hold a demonstration in the town, said the strikers were led by Communists. The mayor was a witness of the street fighting. Allegations that the strike was inspired by Red leaders were first made by mine owners, who refused to negotiate with representatives of the men, claiming them to be Communists.

An effort is being made, it was understood, to rid the Estevan district of the organizers of the strike in the coal fields there, thus paving the way for a conference between mine operators and the strikers.

Regina, Sept. 30—Two miners are dead, another dying and four others seriously wounded in a clash between coal miners and police at Estevan where a strike has been in effect since Sept. 7. About 13 persons were injured.

Twelve policemen are injured in the battle that left faces fearful scars inflicted by strikers. Two are dead.

One bystander is dangerously injured by a rifle bullet wound in the groin. A woman was also injured by a bullet. The dead are Mike Nargan and Julian Jyrahko, miners.

GERMANY NOT ABANDONING GOLD STANDARD

Berlin Ridicules Rumour Heard On London Exchange

BRUENING'S VIEW

Says Germany's Currency Must Be Held Firm

Berlin, Sept. 30 (CAP)—Rumors that Germany had suspended the gold standard, which caused a seven point drop in German bonds on the London Stock Exchange, were ridiculed here today.

Speaking to members of the German Association of Savings Banks Chancellor Heinrich Bruening Monday said, that Germany could not risk another period of inflation and that the government is determined to keep the mark stable, its currency.

"When one standard of the world's currencies begins to fluctuate," he said, "it is unfortunate for governments to steer a steady course. We have embarked on a policy of deflation and we must stick to it. Germany's currency must be held firm."

Hans Luther, President of the Reichsbank, who also spoke, said it would be folly to suggest that Germany emulate the action of Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries in suspending the gold standard.

AMUSEMENTS

The Four (Count'em) Marx Brothers are up to no end of fun in their latest picture, "Monkey Business", the great laugh the world needs, coming at the Belle, Tomorrow, for three days, matinee daily.

John Mack Brown, Gavin Gordon and Eleanor Boardman in a dramatic scene from "Arrowsmith" the pioneer drama which begins at the Capitol Thursday.

"DONNA OF THE STREET"

Intriguing story with the fascinating Evelyn Brent in a dramatic role opened at the Capitol Wednesday night. It is "Madonna of the Streets", the Columbia film adapted from Frederick Orin Bartlett's novel by W. B. Maxwell.

Its story is novel, not one of the hackneyed plots to which Miss Brent has been companion to Howard Cpe for many has refused to portray him. Crane intends to be star his wealth when he dies, but his nephew will be left to his niece Peter Morton. Before he can change the document, he is killed in an auto accident. Knowledge of the will is overheard by Mr. Fisher determined to get money from the man to whom it was unintentionally bequeathed. She fits Peter Morton, a youthful philanthropist, running the "Star of Hope Mission" on the Barbary Coast. To better attain her end, he accepts the position of assistant to him at the Mission. When Ted enters into the game—things begin to happen—very different from the course of events anticipated by the originally designing girl Collins.

Evelyn Brent gives a dynamic and forceful performance as Mary. It is effective at all times. In addition to enhancing the role with her vivid personality, she injects it with convincing realism. Equally effective in the role of Pete Morton is Robert Ames, who recently made his debut in "The Trespasser" and "Holiday."

Other interesting portrayals are rendered by Lumsden Hare, Josephine Dunn and E. Brady. John Robertson has directed with intelligence. Here is a film that will appeal—it is an intelligent production.

"Madonna of the Streets" plays for the last time tonight.

Leon Errol with his appeal to laughter that Thursday's fit of allgayety will be a present Pork.

MARX BROTHERS HERE TO-MORROW IN NEW FUN CAPERS

Do you remember when hobble skirts, muffs and peg-top jeans were the rage. When peg-leg trousers were "quite the thing" and individual shaving mugs had not been relegated to Limbolond? When it was not possible to drive more than two miles from a garage without the peal of castanets at the back of the chauffeur and when Rudolph Valentino 2nd. was still cutting quite a figure in royal circles? If you do remember these halcyon days and would like a peek back into the romantic past you will want to see "Today and Yesterday," the special added—junior feature that is to be presented at the Belle Theatre tomorrow, Friday and Saturday, matinee daily.

This extraordinary "short subject" it really should not be called short for it runs over half an hour is somewhat long, at that. Some of the scenes date back to 1911 while others are as modern as tomorrow. Intimate scenes of original "stills" and there are not many great crowned heads of the world today who are missing from the array of fashions of today and yesterday all go to make up one of the finest "releases" to be shown in local theatre.

In 1911 the world was at peace, "flaming youth" and "Jazz" had not even been heard of, it was possible to have a big schooner of beer and a man-sized dinner thrown in for a nickle, radio (such as we have today) was just a vision. Would it not be interesting to drift back to those times for just a short time and see all that we have modernized, and, incidentally, gained? Here is the opportunity, and we said, opportunity knocks but once.

"Modern Business"

The feature, "Monkey Business," of course, will attract thousands. The four Marx Brothers, the funniest quartette that isn't adorning an insane asylum, are presenting another hilarious fun-fest. Who has forgotten the wise-cracking of Professor Groucho, the exquisite harpsing of Harpo, the classic violin playing of Chico or the antics of Zeppo. In these gloomy days of unemployment everybody who can bring a smile to a distressed world deserves to be decorated with a gold medal. Page the United States and hunt for enough gold to manufacture four awards.

"GREAT MEADOW"

The Great Meadow which opens Thursday at the Capitol Theatre as a talking picture version of the Elizabeth Madox Roberts' best-seller,—has been called the finest historical novel ever written in the last decade.

Charles Brabin, whose last film was the successful "Call of the Flesh", was entrusted with the responsibility of re-creating the vivid tale of the intrepid Virginians who followed Daniel Boone over the Wilderness Road into Kentucky in 1775.

From all reports, the unforgettable pioneer characters of the much-discussed novel are to be given life again. Berk Jarvis, leader of the band, is interpreted by John Mack Brown, fresh from his success in "Billy the Kid."

Eleanor Boardman as Bride Diony, the bride, is played by the charming Eleanor Boardman of "Redemption." "She Goes to War" and other film hits. The pioneer mother, Elvira Jarvis, has her recreation in the hands of Lucille La Verne, the internationally famous widow Cagle of "Sun Up."

Gavin Gordon, Miss Garbo's leading man in "Romance," plays Evan Muir, who marries Diony when Berk fails to return from a hunting expedition. Other featured players include Anita Louise, Dulcin Williams, Russell Simpson, Sarah Padden and Helen Jerome Eddy.

The highlights of the story are: the marriage of Berk and Diony in Virginia; the start of the pioneers for Kentucky; the Indian fight on the way; the final struggle over the peak of the forbidden pass; the arrival at Fort Harrod; the birth of Diony's son; the Indian attack on Fort Harrod; the trip of Berk to Detroit; the Indian killer of his mother; the receipt of news that Berk has been killed; the marriage of Evan Muir and Diony; the return of Berk.

CLOSING DAY FOR "ARROWSMITH TRAGEDY"

Five years was not too long to wait for such an epic motion picture as is "Arrowsmith," Sinclair Lewis' Pulitzer prize novel. Director Brabin has done it, and the screen world has waited for the perfection of the talking picture medium, the art of the theatre combined with the cinema's medium in which this tremendously moving drama should be presented; waited for the right, director to transfer its pulsing drama to the screen; waited for the right players to enact it; stream, human characters.

And it did not wait in vain—as was proved last night at the Belle Theatre, where "An American Tragedy," directed by Josef Von Sternberg, wizard of the cinema, acted by a superb cast headed by Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee, flashed a new and greater drama on the screen.

Phillips Holmes, in the role of Clyde Griffiths, has the outstanding role of his career. Sylvia Sidney, recently a young actress, in the role of Roberta Alden, rockets into the front rank of screen stars with this one role. And Frances Dee, as Sondra Finchley, springs a new surprise.

The intense story moves with relentless force on the screen. "An American Tragedy," a great book, a great play, has become a great movie story.

"An American Tragedy" will be repeated again tonight, for the last time to be followed tomorrow by the Four Marx Brothers in "Monkey Business."

Stolen Skunks Are Very Easy to Trace

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.—A courageous burglar stole nine imported skunks from his home, R. N. Bowman reported to police. Bowman said the animals were $250.

"I don't know why anybody would want to import them, with the odors they have bad enough," commented Captain Howard Speaks of the sheriff's office. "Anyway, the trail ought to be easy to follow."

TARZAN OF THE APES, No. 44 (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Like two charging bulls they came together, and like two wolves they sought each other's throat. Jane, her lithe young figure flattened against a tree trunk, hands pressed tight against her bosom, and eyes wide with mingled horror, fascination, fear, and admiration, watched the ape-and ape-man battle for possession of her.

The great muscles of Tarzan's back and shoulders knotted beneath the tension of her efforts. His huge biceps and forearm, held at bay those mighty tusks. The long knife drank deep a dozen times in Terkoz's life blood. Then the great carcass rolled lifeless upon the ground.

The veil of centuries of civilization and culture was swept from Jane! It was a primeval woman who sprang forward with outstretched arms toward the primeval man who fought for her and won her.

And Tarzan, his enemy in his arms and annihilated her upturned, panting lips with kisses.

Suddenly her face suffused with scarlet blushes. She thrust Tarzan of the Apes from her and buried her face in her hands. He came to her side again and took hold of her. Once again and took hold of her. Once again she was a tigress, striking his great breast with her tiny hands. Tarzan could not understand it.

A moment before Tarzan had intended to hasten Jane back to her people. That moment was lost. He was not a warm, living woman pressed close to his. Again he sought her—again she repressed him. Torn with mingled emotions the woman in his arms and carried her into the jungle.

MAKING THE WAY EASY

The way for the student of ability should not be made too difficult. Today with increasing cost of education many a young man and woman who might make a notable contribution to the solution of world problems never gets the chance, not because of the impossibility of securing education but because of the cost of education.

Today some of the professions are practically limited to the sons of the fairly well-to-do. Medicine for instance is one of the courses which take many thousands of dollars to fit the student for lifework. Yet there are no doubt hundreds and thousands of young men and women who if they only had money or had it loaned them would be able to adorn the professions. Any new medicine is not the only profession of this class but it is an example of the way things ought not to be. As medicine is a profession it is worth only the individual but the community and the nation are interested — that is the doctor is more than an individual — the state should lend a hand in making things more easy for the young who would like to serve in this profession.

How to help, is the question. Principal MacLaurin has suggested one way in an address to the Rotary Club of Belleville, the advance of loans to young men and women who need the money to develop their possibilities.

Some day sooner or later a solution of this situation must be found. No one claims that the student should, because not rich have the way made a bed of roses for the struggle is part of the education, yet the student might be allowed to devote himself more closely to the chosen course and the intended profession if he did not have to rub one baubee against another.

The world has lost many a fine professional man for lack of opportunity, foiled because of lack of means to pay the price of education.

Principal MacLaurin struck one of the most illuminating notes that can be heard — that the class of young people to whom money is advanced always pay it back. What a fine commentary on the value of education and of loyalty to those who have helped!

POPULARIZATION OF SCIENCE

Whatever one says about evolution, whether accepting it or not, everyone must admit that it more than any other theory of life has popularized science. Today evolution it is which draws the crowds to the meetings of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

Though in the popularization of science, the men and women who are only amateurs may have rather ordinary views of things, yet it is well to interest so wide a following in the philosophy of things, whether mechanical philosophy, psychology, mechanical science, or natural science. It means that education, it means that people are not satisfied with the mere stones — money itself, or possessions in and for themselves alone or power for the mere exercise of authority.

Interest in science will become more and more widespread because there is the logical thought that there should not be progress. The times are fitting, for science has just tapped the mysteries of life and that means solving them. That is the delightful wil o' the wisp which is spurring men and women into research and at the same time developing the minds of the great mass of the people.

The doctrine of evolution is one of those attractive problems of life, not quite proven in all life, even denied by some scientists, but it has enough appeal to attract humanity.

The world of men owes a great debt to the British Association for the Advancement of Science for popularizing science.

FARADAY

As we turn on the electric lights in the evening, switch on the power on the electric washer, watch the operation of the electric refrigerator, make a tour of the power houses on the Trent River or regard the new switchboard at the Hydro sub-station on Reid Street, the fact that back of all these evidences of progress that once there lived a man named Michael Faraday, called "the patron saint of the world" today has been named by Prof. Tyndall the greatest experimental discoverer the world has ever known, though he was the mildest and most modest of men. He compares hi mto the Welsh-horn among the Alps "high, beautiful, and aloof". Faraday was a devout man, was frugal in his habits, simple in his tastes, simple in his tastes, a lover of music and poetry, a friend of all children, and devoted in his family delations. In him genius of the highest rank was allied with the most lovable qualities.

Faraday started life as an errand boy, being the son of a poor blacksmith. His education was on the three R's and what else he picked up from books.

Among the inventions to his credit are condensation of gases into liquids by pressure, decomposition of hydrol carbons rotary polarisation, and researches in con-electro-chemical decomposition, magnetic section with diamagnetism.

At last there dawns a day when strength drifts out,
When the energy and impulse wane,
When high desire is gone and creeping doubt
Brings futile fears and shadows in its train.
Then rises in man's soul to meet that hour
A force surpassing any he has known,
A calm security, a certain power
Not to be turned aside or overthrown.

This is its part: to nerve his outstretched hand
Until it grasps, unfalteringly, the cup
Life offers him; defying, to withstand
The menace of the portion he must sup.
Supreme despite defeat, man then must be Himself a challenge to Divinity!

THE WAR IN IOWA

'Tis there — Cedar County, Iowa — th' embattled veterinarians stand and fire the shots heard 'round the farm. They are fired from syringes into cows which, under the State law, must take the tuberculosis test. But the resistance to enforcement of this law by many farmers, notably Mr. Lester of Tipton, has brought out the National Guard with guns and ammunition, says the New York Times.

Iowa is generally so peaceful that these military tidings from its loamy plain startle the nation. American farmers have a habit of resisting unpopular laws, and often they have given sharp evidence of their disbelief in "new-fangled foolishness," like the long-horn tuberculosis test. But seldom has it been necessary for a Governor to provide troops to enforce it. The Kentucky night-riders, trying to cut down tobacco acreage, brought down martial law upon them. Horses and especially the theft of them have produced gunfire in the West. But a war over cows is something new.

WATERBURY CARES FOR ITS OWN

One of the cheering features of the time is the ingenuity which various communities have displayed in working out plans to provide for their unemployed. When a city perfects a workable scheme, it is justly proud, and eager that its own experience should at least benefit to others still grappling with the problem.

Relief in Waterbury, Connecticut, is administered by a mutual aid department fund and the New York Times describes its operation as follows:

It is financed not by the city treasury but directly by gifts. Those who have jobs contribute money to provide work for those who haven't. A man earning $20 a week pays 20 cents; one earning $60 gives 90 cents; on a $100 salary, $3. Last Winter $15,000 a week was raised, paying full or part-time wages to an average of 1,800 people weekly. The pay is 33 1-3 cents an hour, men working nine hours a day and women seven and one-half, for a five-day week. The men are chiefly employed in city repair and improvements. A nine-hole municipal golf course has been practically completed. Parks and playgrounds have been improved. Dead timber has been cut, chopped into fuel and distributed to the needy. The clothing-room employs some fifty women. The Fire Department undertook to collect donations of worn clothing, which is sorted, cleaned, mended and pressed to be ready for distribution. Clothing too worn for adults is salvaged to make jackets and trousers for youngsters. A community cobbler repairs old shoes. So far the plan has brought friendly aid to a total of about 10,000 — not far from one-tenth of the total population of Waterbury.

REPLY TO "CITIZEN"

September 26, 1
Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

The reply to Mr. Ratepaxis letter by Citizen, in the Septem 24th issue of your paper, is absurd to merit discussion.

And his question as to whet the clerks who work behind co ters in the local stores for the p period of eleven hours a day, co be considered, was the silliest qu tion of all. Certainly not! Co pared with the "working" popu tion of the rest of the people Belleville the clerks and co counter salesmen are a very re ible quantity, and that is w daylight saving was defeated l the polls. Why then go to the e pense of having the people vo at all when the bill can be lobbi through just for the benefit of t lessey few who are compelled, r who by choice, make their liv by hanging around a store?

Bridge, did they have a rope around in the dark by the light switch some nice, chilly, da September morning, at four o'cl in the morning (D.S.T.) to be the job at six-thirty with pick an shovel and slug and hammer aw 10 hours a day in order to get bad cheese and shoes for the kiddi? That's work! More work for t what they will do in six month even if they do have to put t sleepy eleven hours a day in and when we get through with dis work we don't feel like jumping into the nearest roadster and hitting off on an evening's dance; we feel like going to bed, even if it is too light to sleep. And, when they get along years, somewhere the age I am now, I'll look at things in a differ ent light too.

As to the suggestion that I run for alderman this year I believe it is a good idea. Certainly we need new candidates—a lot of them. And I personally intend to offer myself for election. I believe that at last the local labor are being organized to the point where it becomes necessary for them to have a spokesman in the City Council. And I intend to run on that platform. Frankly I'll be brazen, but the whole fact of the matter is I am looking for a chance to speak my little piece from the platform of the City Hall, nomination night. It should be interesting!

UNEMPLOYED WOMEN

A resolution brought before the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada called attention to the plight of unemployed women. The governments of the country were asked to provide relief for such citizens.

The other day attention was called in this column to the position of thousands of women throughout Canada who have been caught in the storm of economic stress, and now find themselves without work. Some aid is being offered through the unemployment offices, but as a matter of fact unemployed women hardly enter into the calculations of governments now engaged in relief measures.

How many women are out of work in Canada is, of course, unknown. But there must be a great number. Fortunately, most of these are women who provided for by being members of families which have men still at work. But others have no such support, and their case is more desperate than many a man's, for the simple reason that their condition remains unknown to the general public and extremely little effort is made to ascertain and meet their needs.

What the governments should do about these women, of course, is a difficult question. The trades congress says "provide relief," which is vague. What seems to be necessary is some systematic method to find out the true conditions and then attempt to meet them, either by the provision of special jobs.—Ottawa Citizen.

Size, population, industrial development and public works are all sources of municipal pride. Substantial material growth is something in which he who runs away from it is not wholly unworthy of a community. Yet for all their importance these are not vital things. LITTLE BENNY
By LEE PAPE

I was laying on the living room floor thinking about doing my lessons and pop said, like about a little studious action on your part, young man.

Oh Kay, I said.

Being what all the fellows have been saying lately, and pop said, it would afford me grate plezsure and infinite relief if you would drop that unworthy expression from your young vocabulary and substitute the humble but respectful yes sir of our forefathers. Would you oblige me by making an effort, he said.

Oh Kay, I said. I mean sure I will, pop, I said, and pop said, I realize what you mean, but just you be more intristed in the final form with wich you garb that meaning. I will try a little experment wich animals trainers have used with grate success in the past, the sistem of reward and punishment. I hereby present you with a dime, he said.

Oh Kay, I said and pop said, Not so fast, you havent got it yet. I am keeping it in trust for you, and every time you say oh ka I will mentally but fermly deduct 2 cents from it. Are you reddy? he sed.

Oh kay, I mean, I said and pop said, Never mind why you mean, you may have 8 cents coming to you, now try to do better.

Oh kay, sw Keck, I said, and pop said, That leaves 6 Im making money hand over fist. For Pest sake keep your wits about you, he said.

Oh Kay, I mean heck, G wizzickers, I said, and pop said, 3 from 4 leaves 1, and three from one leaves minus 2, in this case you owe me 2 cents, and I said, No sir, G wizz pop whata you think, nothing doing, Ive lost enough alreddy.

In this connection Peterboro is to be congratulated on possessing such a choir of feminine voices as the Ukrainian Singers. In a recent trans-Canada broadcast they captivated the radio try with the charm of their lilting voices. ADVERTISING CANADA

A million dollars a year judiciously expended upon advertising Canada should return the annual many times over. The opportunities that await the industrial here for instance, are only vaguely known in many parts of the Old World. We should think the British industrialist would be glad to be told something about the opportunities for using Canada as a base for the production of commodities for the Oriental market. Everything is here at his command—water power, all the raw materials he requires and proximity to his market.

To be of any use of course an advertising campaign on behalf of expanding Canadian industries by the employment of outside capital would have to be of a very definite and attractive nature to impress Old World individualists who are more or less set in their ways. But that is no reason why it should not succeed and pay handsomely.—Victoria Times.

Differences Galore in Church Circles

Denver, Colo., Sept. 30 — The House of Bishops and House of Deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Church were agreed today that there is a widespread difference of opinion as to the wisdom and desirability of retaining the 18th Amendment in its present form.

They were agreed that there is a widespread difference of opinion as to the wisdom and desirability of retaining the church's marriage and divorce canon in its present form.

On the prohibition question, they decided to do nothing because of the highly controversial issues involved. On the matrimonial question they hoped to effect a compromise.

There has been no advancement in the last 100 years to prevent crime.—Clarence Darrow.

NO STRINGENCY EXPECTED

New York, Sept. 30—Gold exports, totalling $300,000 today were the largest since June of 1928. Yet the outflow of metal should have little effect upon the money market for a time at least. It is estimated that this country could lose several hundreds of millions in gold before experiencing any real stringency in money.

SUDDEN DEATH MRS. H. BROWN

West Lake Resident Passed Away on Sunday

Picton, Sept. 30 — Rally Day was observed in Picton United Church and other related Churches three out the county. Special programs were sent in by the Church Religious Educational Council were used and proved very interesting with invited and local hymns. Increased attendance marked this day when the Sunday schools seek to increase the membership and interest in their work.

Sudden Death

The death occurred very suddenly at West Lake on Sunday, of Mrs. Herbert Brown. Suffering a heart attack she passed away after an illness of a few hours' duration. She was formerly Miss Kalmbacher and was in her 53rd year, and was born and lived all her life in the highly picturesque district of West Lake community. She will be remembered by many mourn her passing. The funeral took place at West Lake on Tuesday afternoon with interment in the Disciple Church burying ground.

Quite a number from Picton and Prince Edward County attended the reunion of the 21st Battalion in Belleville on the 24th inst. and addresses were heard at the reception tendered them.

FASHION HINT

"How to make my old short skirts conform to the new length was a problem I set until I hit on this plan. I dipped the hems; and as the part that had been hidden under was darker than the rest, I redyed the entire dress, after having bleached the whole following directions in the Diamond Dyes package.

"I used Diamond Dyes for the dyeing, of course. I have dyed many things with these wonderful colors. They have saved me many dollars and have always failed to give perfect results—smooth, even colors —fast to wear and washing. Friends think my things are new when I redye them, from their Diamond Dyes. They do give the most gorgeous colors!"

Mrs. G. O., Levis, Quebec.

CO-ORDINATING AGENCY

London, Sept. 30.—(Canadian Press Cable)—The need of some co-ordinating agency to link up the work of the many different overseas migration societies into one concerted whole was stressed in the report of a special committee on educational training for overseas life, admitted to the education section of the British Association for the advancement of science today.

Hospital Building Requires Close Study

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 30 (CP) —rention here.

Hospital construction should receive the same attention and care as a sculptural work of art in a public office or the apartment building, T. H. Bacon, Canadian consulting engineer specializing in New York, today told the gathered convention section of the American Hospital Association in con-

Remarking that the hospital has not hesitated in adopting skyscraper lines in many instances, Mr. Bacon said the advantages of a tall building was not only a saving of land, but a saving in cost of construction and maintenance. A smaller ground area means less foundation, and less wall area, both expensive items.

Horchimer Ave. Branch of Girls W. A. Progresses

The girls of the senior W.A. unit of the Saginaugua group of the G.O.I.T. of St. John's Mission, Horchimer Avenue, held the first of a series of social evenings at the home of Miss Beatrice Jones and judging from the number of girls present, the members are to be congratulated on their well-merited success as community workers.

It has been interesting to watch their progress since being organized by Miss (Rev.) Lyons two years ago. This year the senior girls of the W.A. were installed in the G.O.I.T. and chose for their group name, the beautiful Indian name of our pretty winding river Saginaugua. They held their first camp in August through the generous kindness of Col. and Mrs. Ponton who made the outing really possible by giving them a home, (Cottage) on Lake Ontario.

To the girls it seemed some one must have placed fairy hands on Aladin's lamp making their wishes all come true and a most profitable two weeks was enjoyed at this ideal camp. It would be hard to describe the beauties of the sunrise and the sunset over the bays and out as far as the eye could see with pretty "Scotch Bonnets" and "Simmons" dotted to break the skyline.

The morning dip followed by physical exercises and flag raising made bright, happy faces for the breakfast call. The very clever girls were under the supervision of Miss E. Cleland, Toronto, camp mother; Miss Beatrice Jones, camp nurse, and Miss J. Mercer as camp cook. The girls are very grateful to Col. and Mrs. Ponton who made the camp holiday possible.

The girls are workers and have earned over one hundred and twenty dollars for the new parish house and the G.O.I.T. group is working now to buy chairs for the same.

Poet's Corner

To a Cynic

Be patient, lest this wisdom you assume
In sprays abortive wear a translient bloom
Until you can explain the riddle seen
In every day, why don dark wisdom's mien?
Or set a verdict like a judge who knows
A witness waits but vows that court must close?
Be patient; man will find through toil and dream
His certain place in the eternal scheme.
And there is equal chance, in any case,
That he will find it noble and not base.
—Arthur Wallace Peach, in the New York Times.

1. Yes. In this sentence you use the word Mother instead of a proper name. Your mother's sister, for instance, would say, "I went to the city with Mary." But in your sentence, you use Mother instead of Mary. Mary would be capitalized, of course, and so, in its place, would Mother be capitalized. This by the way, is a good test for other similar words too—"I went to the city with Uncle."

But, when you use before the noun a modifying word—my, your, our, their, for instance—then the noun is a common noun and hence would not be capitalized. "I went to the city with my mother". "They went to the city with their uncle."

2. May is the present tense of the verb, and means that you are asking permission: May I go with you? Might is the preterite of the verb may: "He might have been well received, if he had had gracious manners."

3. The letter-paper that you use is appropriate for a man to use for his semi business semi social correspondence. It does not indicate strictly social letters.

4. Your handwriting is very good, I think, and gloriously easy to read.

Poet's Corner

The blue birds sought a nesting place
Safe from the foes of the feathered race,
From tree to tree the pair they flew
But ah! the sparrows followed too.
Till one bright morn they found a spot
Where cats and sparrows trouble not;
This spot? The mail box snug and safe
Became their cozy nesting place:
And patiently for a week or two
Dried grass and straw on tireless wing;
Then the blue eggs were safely laid
Within the box that man had made—
And in due time five nestlings lay
All weak and bare within the fray.
But as the time passed, a mass of down
Developed from these nestlings new,
And the' the parent birds gave no sign
To plaintive cries when'er we went
To mail the box the mail to bring,
And flew about on swooping wing,
Unharmed the little nestling lay
Until the day they flew away:
And now a sadness fills my breast
Whene'er I view the empty nest,
For with them in their early flight
Has sped a year of summer bright.
—H. B. A., in Picton Times.

Correct Manners

A Query on Grammar

Dear Mrs Beckman:

1. When speaking of your mother in a sentence like: "I went to the city with Mother," is the word "mother" to be capitalized?

2. I always hesitate in the use of "may" and "might." What is the difference in their meaning?

3. Is this paper correct or should I have double sheets?

Promote Local Hydro Employee

After serving some three years in the local metre department of the Hydro Commission, as Belleville, Clayton H. Hicks, of this city, has promoted to the position of control operator at Chats' Falls, power house.

Mr. Hicks started to work with the Hydro Electric Power Commission some nine years ago and has made such marked progress that Mr. Wm. Smythe, superintendent of the metre department of the Hydro office on Pinnacle Street, has recommended Mr. Hicks for the promotion.

The plant in which Mr. Hicks is going to is at Chats' Falls, a few miles from Arnprior, and is the second largest power plant in Canada. The capacity of this huge hydro-electric power plant will be 200,000 horsepower when running at full capacity.

Clayt, as he is known to his many friends, is keenly interested in electronics and has been a valued and studious employee of the company in their outstanding activities with them. His many friends, although sorry to lose him, wish him every success in his new home and surroundings. Mr. Hicks is the son of Mrs. Charles Ridley, of 39 Sinclair Avenue, and the late Mr. Hicks, for the greater part of his life, receiving his education at Queen Mary Park and the Belleville Collegiate.

Conserving Food for Winter Time

Delicious peaches, fine pears, tomatoes, grapes, plums, and a wealth of Canadian harvest foods are being garnered into cupboards now by Winter Canadians. Seldom has the fruit crop been so good and plentiful, nor has the interest of the housewives of the country been so great. Day after day, they are storing away fruit jars after jars and as apple time arrives, every housemaker is looking forward to "putting down" a quantity of jelly, marmalade and cider.

Many cooks cling to the former methods of boiling down, and apples for a long time to concentrate, but now in this the first year of thrift, the addition of a little liquid pectin will not only cut the fuel costs but increase the yield of jelly as the short boil method gives half as many jars again as the old method of one half hour cooking for the fruit. Jelly made in the modern manner is always of a fresher flavor, and lighter in color than that cooked for a long time.

To conserve the greatest food value from apple jelly, remove blossom and stem ends and cut 3 pounds of apples, or crab apples, in small pieces, do not peel or core. Add 4 cups of water, cover and simmer 10 minutes. Crush with masher, cover and simmer 5 minutes longer. Drip through jelly bag. Measure 5 cups (3 1-2 fluid ounce bottles) juice, add 7 1-2 cups (3 1-4 lbs.) sugar, stir and bring to a boil. At once add 1-2 cup of liquid pectin, stirring constantly, and bring again to a full rolling boil and boil 1-2 minute. Remove from fire, let stand 1 minute, skim, pour quickly, and paraffin.

This jelly is red, sparkling, and has the tang of the raw fruit. The addition of the one half cup of pectin increased the yield of jelly so that instead of producing only 6 eight ounce jars of jelly from 3 lbs. of apples, about 9 eight ounce jars of delicious jelly are obtained. And there is no gamble with the short boil method, a failure after the half hour of work is finished.

"Generally satisfactory", is the comment on wheat production in the Prairie Provinces, according to reports coming in from the Agricultural Department of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Winnipeg. Wheat cutting in the West was virtually completed by the middle of September and rather more than half of it was threshed at that time.

But Finger Print Convicted One of Them

The Post Office Safe Robbery at Cut-Knife, Sask., in 1931 was the first in Canada in which finger prints on the safe and the robbers, rushing out, leaped into the car which sped away. The proprietor, taking a revolver from his desk, had time to rush to the curb and empty it after the Bessing car, puncturing a tire as the car disappeared in the rain. Three miles ahead of the town the crooks abandoned the car, boarded a radial and apparently got clean away.

Not quite, however! Keen-eyed detectives found finger prints on the left front door of the car which, when developed, were found to be those of a well-known bad man, convicted of many crimes. His picture was circulated and within two days he was caught, tried and convicted. His finger print was dangerous for him.

Danger in Your Prints—on Foods

Some prints bring encounters with the police. Your prints will not do this but they do bring you into contact with disease germs. Everything you touch —money, a door-handle, a street car strap—may be touched by many other hands. These hands may have been exposed to disease germs—if they had checked a cold, or sneezed they certainly would have been. Such germs would be on the things you touched.

Through your prints the germs are placed on food you eat and so reach your mouth. They may multiply to many millions very quickly—then they penetrate your whole system, and you are liable to contract constitute lists 27 diseases which may be spread by the hands in this way.

THE GAY BANDIT OF THE BORDER

by TOM GILL

"You and Price will always believe the arm of El Coyote is all-powerful."

"My friend, I think El Coyote, if he wanted to, could kill you, or Morales or Ted here, within the week, and get away with it."

"Then why the devil doesn't he?"

"Because it wouldn't serve his ends. It would only be a nasty killing. Suppose he killed Jito and Morales too. That wouldn't end the system that's been built up. Sooner or later someone would take their place. The Coyote isn't playing for that. He's playing for the whole blessed country to be with him when he moves. And once the country is with him there will be some new history written on the border."

As for you, major mio, I absolutely believe that there isn't a move you make he doesn't know, and I don't think all these healthy soldiers boys of yours will get him yet. So don't tell me too much about your plans for I've still a sneaking sympathy for the way he plays whatever cards Destiny gives him. He's fighting against the forces of two nations. But I'll be glad to come over to your conference at any time, if only to watch old Morales."

Cautiously the major looked about him and from his belt took Ted and Bob knew some secret was about to be delivered.

"This is not to go any farther," warned the little major, and again he looked about him and lowered his voice, "El Coyote may turn out to be a woman!"

Bob Andrew took his head in that silent laugh of his. "A Deadeye of the border, eh?"

The idea seemed to delight him. "Won't you catch hell in Washington if it is a woman! If you hunt her down you'll be a brute, and if she escapes you'll get your wrists been made a fool of by a weak, defenseless female. I'll vote you, I'd resign. But whoever told you that, major?"

"I can't tell you. I only say it may turn out that way. You know yourself, my son, how fantastic are the bandit."

"I have a suspicion that Lopez, the trailer, saw him that night along the Verdi trail. Men say his eyes were frozen with fear and not unreason to look at. Bob shook his head. "No, major, I shouldn't like any trap for a lady bandit. I think when you find her carrying a gun it will be a man. Probably about the size of Ted, here."

"If he is that size, it must be Jilo." He saw on the border he carries all that beef."

Again Bob smiled. "Well, it might not be a bad idea to look into Jilo's activities, though I strongly doubt if it will teach us much."

They left soon after and in the car as they paced toward Verdi, Bob was in high spirits. The idea of the major's "lady bandit," as he called her, delighted him.

"I've half a mind to spread the rumor in Verdi that it's the major's wife, adopting this role to give her husband exercise. But why should the man even for a moment suspect such nonsense? It must be the military mind at work."

Outside the gate Bob at Bob's reckless chatter stopped, and Ted stepped out to lay down the bars.

As Bob drew up before the house a servant ran forward.

"Senor," he shouted in Spanish, while still afar, "you have heard?"

"Heard what?"

"Last night El Coyote came to the upper cattle camp and stole twenty steers. Twenty of the senor's best cattle, that senor, of all!"

For a time Don Bob looked at the man, then his lips curved in a little smile. "Now aren't that bad luck, Ted?" he pondered, reaching for a cigarette. "And after all the nice things I've said about him, too."

CHAPTER XIX.

Within an hour Don Bob had left for the north ranch, sending Ted to Verdi for any news that might have reached there, and it was not until late the following afternoon that Bob returned.

Ted just back from a round of the nearby ranches, had already had his dinner when he heard the jingle of spurs on the porch outside. A moment later the rancher joined him.

"Too tired to eat," Bob sank into the nearest chair, "but give me a dozen cups of coffee. What did you find out?"

Ted shook his head. "Nothing. Nothing in Verdi nor in the camps. And you?"

"I've ridden all over that upper country for signs. Finally I lost trace of the steers among the sandhills. It's blowing hard there, just like blasts from a furnace. It would wipe out the tracks of a dinosaur. Lord, that coffee's welcome!"

"Why, do you think El Coyote did this?"

The rancher smiled. "I don't. My boys can't tell me much. They only know that half a dozen Mexican horsemen rode down on the herd, cut out twenty of the best animals and drove them south toward the line. Only two of the boys saw the bandits, and they very prudently stayed in the brush until the job was done. Then the galloped back with the news. The big white horse that El Coyote rides wasn't seen. He was in charge of that."

His dragé two cups of black coffee, then, in thought, he sat there silently on the end of a cigar. He seemed to have made some decision, for abruptly he rose and left the room for two questions about this thing, and lived in the house. He went over to Mendoza's. You'd better come along, Ted; there is part of your education."

"I've heard that name."

"Of course you have. Mendoza's is the greatest gambling hell this vice and unvarnished evil in Verdi—and the borderland, for that matter. It is the one place where the law can't or other you will find anyone you are looking for. If you're not there he or she is sure to show up at Mendoza's."

"It's a kind of roadhouse, isn't it?"

"Oh, much more than that. It's a cabaret, dance hall, gambling hell, and inn all rolled into one and the best of its kind. Mendoza himself, the old rascal, has the best wine and the worst morals in Mexico. He has preserved utility dancers of times, but his passing will be a loss to the border. For Mendoza, be it remembered, is a true artist in this intricate game of life."

"Is that where the girl they call Ann Reed lives?"

Bob's eyes were raised quickly. "What do you know of Ann Reed?"

"Only that she is a singer over there and that she is one of the finest looking women I've seen on the border. I remember somebody at the major's saying she had the voice of an angel with a lost past."

"Not a gallant saying. Some kindly woman must have thought of that. Yes, it's over there that Ann Reed lives and makes more or less time forget that they're just funny, little fighting animals with brief, unimportant lives to live. You may hear her sing tonight. Then abruptly he asked, "Who said she had a lost soul?"

Ted laughed at the other's sudden intensity. "I've forgotten. What difference does it make?"

"None." But he added as they went to the car, "It's an unintelligent thing to say, isn't it?"

And Ted found himself wondering that Bob should resent the saying.

"To her fingertips. Yet she speaks Spanish as well as I."

"What brought her here?"

"Who can ever answer that question? Life plays one of its little jokes and we find ourselves out here on the border. You and I, for example."

And beyond that Ted was still in ignorance as to just who Ann Reed might be when a little later they parked the car outside the tall, brilliantly lighted structure that had attained fame throughout the South West as the Palace of Mendoza. Somewhere within a band of marimbas was playing Spanish airs, and beyond a half-opened door stretched a long bar, running the length of the building. The sound of popping corks and crackling ice told them that this portion of Mendoza's at least was not unpatronized.

Bob leading, they entered the great dance-floored patio and walked down a long lane of tables ringed in cigarette smoke. Surrounding the patio crowded tables were scattered in the half-light about the cleared space that Mendoza held for the dancers. A babel of voices English and Spanish, rose to greet Don Bob. Waiters hurried among the tables, and everywhere Ted was conscious of the hair and shoulders of women, and of the appraising scrutiny of men. As Ted passed several of the women raised their eyes, stopping for a moment to follow his broad shoulders. Suddenly one dance-hall girl whispered to another, "There's a chance for you," then turned wearily back to her companion.

Already both men had passed through the low adobe arch into the patio itself, where, under the ever-changing lights cast from above, two dancers were weaving a slow, sensuous tango for the pleasure of Mendoza's favored clients. A waiter was bowing before them.

"A table for two, Senor Don Bob?"

They sat just outside the circle of light, and for a moment Ted just smoked in silence.

The man I want isn't here," he said at last. He rose. "Sit here and watch. There's a table for two for you." then turned wearily back to his companion.

WAY IS SHOWN OF RECOVERY

...mic Or...ER, N.J., Sept. 29—Julius Barnes, chairman of the United States Chamber of Commerce, proposes a government-guaranteed $500,000,000 international endowment fund to restore confidence, stimulate world trade and create the means for "paralyzing" payments.

He has presented his program before President Hoover. Capital is abundant and waits only the definite action leader which will facilitate the business recovery, Barnes said, as a "national welfare measure."

He opened the United Front Conference of the International co-operative and world trade.

"Prayer to support a sound program of finance to allow the short moratorium, Europe's trial, provided by Hoover, is not enough to lay off our debts, leaving a fraction of savings to rebuild their own credit.

"Prayer for effective results from the world disarmament conference.

"Give repealed industry like the railroads a fair chance to recover their earnings and credits.

"Exercise economy in national expenditures.

"Continue to adjust the protective tariffs, step by step, to correct only the difference in wage scales and living standards between foreign labor competitors.

"Continue to ... donations from the national treasury as charity dolles, to maintain employment in institutions which would private industry can reshoulder its full quota."

In its international aspects, Barnes' program included these essentials:

"France and Germany must earnestly and sincerely seek an accord by which the world shall have a political truce.

"Great Britain is assured of a friendly relationship with the United States in these days of trial and perplexity. Likewise, the world's national economy will rebuild her financial pattern."

The time call, said Barnes, for a re-examination of the relationships between Europe and America. Either American will move toward Communism, he said, else the government must be maintained inviolate as a disinterested umpire of the play, holding the scales evenly between the individual citizens and no more."

By Telegraph, Mr. MacDonald said: Parliament will have completed the task of dealing with the bill by the National Government when it took office. ... Immediately thereafter, economy cut retrenchment all along the line of government expenditure, and drastic ... necessary budget. Sir Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, will ... be enacted in the next seven days.

If the house is merely adjourned Mr. MacDonald's plan will be to let the country settle down and give the people time to see the effects of the work it has done.

Gets Two Months For Beating Cows

London, Ont., Sept. 30—For the next two months John Borthwick, a West Nissouri farmer, will contemplate the wrong of cruelty to dumb animals as a result of a sentence imposed on him Tuesday by Magistrate C. Hawkshaw in county police court.

Borthwick was arrested two weeks ago by High Constable A. J. Wharton after members of his family complained that they could no longer stand the cruelty with which the man laboured his cattle.

Using a hickory club, he knocked down off one cow and paralyzed another.

Borthwick pleaded guilty, and in court yesterday said he had been bothered by the cows getting through his fences during the summer months.

His wife, in tears, appealed for leniency, and his neighbors petitioned the court, saying Borthwick had always been ready to drop his own work to go to aid others in need. They thought he had learned a lesson.

Tb Crown Attorney A. M. Judd in the case ordered the sentence to the lash, and Magistrate Hawkshaw scathingly denounced the prisoner.

BACKING CAR HITS CHILD

Laundry Wagon is Also Struck as Car Goes Over Walk

Backing out from the curbstone on the southwest curb of the sidewalk at the corner of Church and Bridge streets at 4.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Williams, a car driver, Mrs. William Kelly, Queen Street, was at the wheel, knocked down a little girl, Marguerite St. John, 3 John Street, and also striking the laundry wagon of Wong Bing Low, Front Street, knocking the end out of the wagon and scattering some of the clothes on the sidewalk. The little girl was not seriously injured, she having a few minor cuts on her face and her left leg being slightly bruised. Mrs. Perry also reported the accident to the police and Sergt. Booth was sent for investigation.

The little girl and another school companion was proceeding down Victoria Avenue, while Mrs. Perry was backing in a southwesterly direction and when the little girl came out onto the sidewalk. The child was probably saved from serious injury than if she had not, she fell on the soft ground on the boulevard. Mrs. Perry instantly stopped her car and ran to the child's assistance. After the child was examined by Dr. Flynn, she was taken to her home, which was near the scene of the accident.

GABBY STREET BELIEVES HIS TEAM IS READY

Says The 'A's Will Not be Outsmarted in Series

HOPES FOR BEST

If Bottomley and Haffey Hit, Everything Will be Jake

(By Alan Gould, Associated Press Sports Editor)

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 30—It is an old baseball axiom that no strategy is quite so effective as a walking out of the park. Babe Ruth demonstrated this well known fact in the celebrated victory of "brute force" over the smarter mind of John McGraw a number of years ago.

The theory and practice of the home run is still good strategy. It is relied upon by the world champion Athletics just as much as they depend upon the sagacity of their 58 year old pilot, Connie Mack, and his able lieutenants, Eddie Collins and William (Ed) Gleason, in the struggle that starts tomorrow with the St. Louis Cardinals.

"The best strategy we can employ," Gabby Street says, "is to go out there and fight the A's off that's feet from the drop of the hat. I don't know whether we can outsmart 'em—Oh, I feel confident we can outplay 'em this time."

The spirit of the National League champions is one of their strong points, in Street's opinion, but he knows this will not suffice without the proper strategy in handling his pitchers or without reverberations from the big bats of Jim Bottomley and Chick Hafey.

Cards Outsmarted

In the 1930 battle of wits and base hits, the Athletics had much the better of it. They upset the Cards and Burleigh Grimes in the very first game, when Joe Boley pulled the "squeeze play" with the speedy Haas on third base. They accomplished Burleigh's second downfall with a potent wallop from Jimmy Foxx's bat into the bleachers.

No manager in baseball has a smarter pair of advisers than Collins and Gleason. They have been through the wars. They are quick thinkers in an emergency where one seemingly insignificant move may determine the whole tide of battle. Nothing on the field escaped them, even if it slips the notice of Mack himself. They outnumber at least the Cardinal combination of Street and Frisch, whether or not they cast a deciding influence.

Pitching, the Cards say, is at least 50 percent of the 1930 battle. Here too, the A's have an advantage with Grove and Earnshaw apparently in the best of health, where as Jesse Haines, veteran Cardinal mainstay, is suffering from a nature with a lame shoulder.

If the Cardinals should gamble with their powerful youngster Paul Derringer, right whip Lefty Grove is the opposing hitter, the rebound to their spirits might prove decisive. There again, it's a case where base hits may destroy the best laid plan of pitching tactics. Grove was no pushe to the Yanks in his days with them.

May Cross Cards

Mack's ability to up the experts and opposition, by Hartley Howard Klonke in 1929 against the Cubs. He accomplished as much against the orthodox finance on Grove and Earnshaw in 1930.

He has a seasoned twirler this time in Walt Hoyt, as well as the rejuvenated Rube Walberg, for an emergency role. He has a strong young right hander in Roy Mahaffey, although he cannot use Haines and does not put much on the aging Grimes, will be forced to rely on Derringer, Bill Hallahan and either Flint Rhem or Slyvester Johnson. Both Gabby knows are pitchers. He has shown rare judgment in handling his staff and will concede nothing to Mack, when it comes to getting the maximum in results.

NORWOOD FAIR WELL ATTENDED

Over 7000 Paid Admissions were Recorded Exhibits Large

Over 7000 were in attendance at Norwood fall fair on Tuesday, this being a record for all time for this excellent fall fair. The directorate of the fair are sitting on top of the world and probably are in a better financial condition than any fair in a similar size in the Province of Ontario. The weather was ideal for the outing, the trees taking on their autumn foliage, while the countryside was never in better condition. The exhibits were at their best, while the horse racing could not be improved upon. The midway was larger than seen at any fall fair to date but because of business depression the "take" was not large.

Well Conducted

The Norwood fair is well conducted in every detail. A large ring is used for the showing of all horses and the showing does not in any way interfere with the program in other parts of the ground. The horse is gradually losing his ascendancy and yesterday was seen a ladies' driving automobile class which created far more interest than a woman driving a dainty horse circuit around the show ring. The exhibits were large, the best in the history of the society. Fred Hubbs, who was judging the cattle, himself a large breeder at Bloomfield, stated that the cattle exhibit would have done credit to a fair twice as large. Practically all the breeders who have herds in the district were there. In one class alone ten Holstein calf males were led into the ring and it was a hard task for the judge.

The horse exhibit was by far the largest seen at any fair, with the heavy draught and general purpose horse in demand. Another feature was the special prize for the best groomed horse on the grounds and twenty tried for the award. The slick, shining coats of the animals, the grooms well attired made a pleasing sight. The sheep and swine were also plentiful while the fancy work and vegetable showing was far above the average, with a sharp finddler contest was down for decision but no contestants presented themselves and the contest was called off.

Excellent Racing

One would surmise that a grand circuit meeting was in progress on the racing strip if a casual peek was taken. There were eleven horses entered in the three races with many not starting because the company was a little "swift" for them. Test beat horses in training in this section competed but there was no outside and the races were conducted early, the patrons being given an afternoon of real sport. One accident occurred which marred the proceedings to a certain extent when Charlie Morrison of Toronto was thrown heavily from the bike in the first heat of the free for all. Four horses went into the turn on high speed and the wheels of Dead Wenger's bike caught the wheels of Alayne's bike, tipping the latter bike over. Morrison struck his head on the ground and was dragged a considerable distance. He was unable to finish the race.

First honors were required in Class E, Lou Knickerbox owned dy H. Diment of this city being beat an eyelash in the last heat for all the honors, Eddie Jones finishing behind. Le Grattan just getting up in the last stride to win the heat and race. Bud Wenger was too good for the free-for-alters, being the goal trotter. Peter Greatworth, took a bunch of Belleville horses into camp in Class C. The summary follows:

Hurling Selections

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 30—The probable pitchers for the opening game of the World series tomorrow —Robert Moses Grove, ace of the Philadelphia A's, 29 years old, 6 feet 2 1-2 inches tall, weight 175 pounds and a left hander. Grove has twice participated in 41 games this season, won 31 and lost 4. He pos-sesses the speed with a sharp breaking curve, plus years of experience. Has also been successful in clinding two world series.

Tomorrow Derringer, daring his first year with Cardinals, a 27 years old, born in Springfield, Ky. Derringer was in the league service from 1926 to 18, and lost 8. He is a right hander and has a fine assortment of speed change of pace, with an excellent curve ball and good speed. He is a rangy youngster, 6 feet 1 1-2 inches tall and weighing 215 pounds.

Clock Winder's Death Upsets Time

Washington, Sept. 30.—Time is out of joint at the Department of the Interior.

A. F. Springer, for years guardian, keeper and winder of the department's clocks, died about a week ago. Now the clocks with six exceptions from two minutes to two hours off.

Secretary Wilbur's own clock, an ornate gold-plated affair, was declared by his office assistant today as being a little slow.

The department has more clocks in it than any other building in Washington. It took one man's entire time to keep them wound and in running order. Another clock guardian will be appointed soon.

WAR REPARATIONS

Winnipeg, Sept. 30—Reparations to Manitoba residents for losses suffered during the Great War will be considered by the special reparations commission, formed by the Dominion government, next Wednesday. The commission will arrive here today and will leave Wednesday evening for more westerly points where similar session will be held.

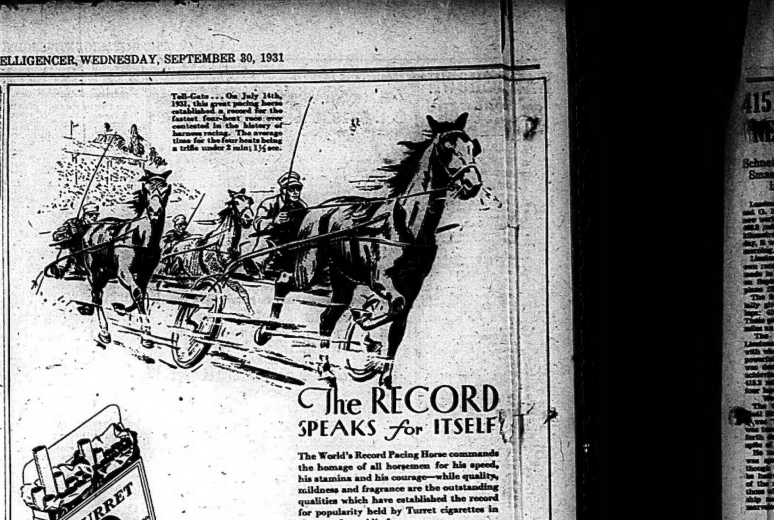
ASK ME ANOTHER

"Where would he be today without the auto?" asked an old-timer. Down the road about 200 miles.

Today's golf match at the Belleville Golf Club, should create some real sport interest. The annual ladies vs. men's match is being played this afternoon. The rules are that the men can ask but one club during the progress of the match while the ladies may use a full bag of clubs. No handicap will be given. This match always creates considerable interest among the players at the Belleville Golf Club. But the main object is the fun that the ladies have when their male opponents "get in the rough."



The Firemen won their protest against the Ack of C. in regards to the player Johnson, of Guirs. The game was awarded to the "fire-fighters." This creates a tie for first and second place in the league. The K. of C. are tied for first place with the Oddfellows while the Firemen and the Kiwanis are tied for third place. The first game of the play-off starts at 7 p.m. this afternoon, when the Firemen and the Kiwanis battle for third positions. The winner of this game meets the losers of the game that will be played this afternoon at the K. of C. and the Oddfellows. The winner of the second game thereafter will be in first place and will meet the winner of the game between the second and third place teams. At any rate they have all managed to get in the league play-off, so the best thing for the fans to do, is see the games and then decide which is the best team (?).

The annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte girls' softball league is scheduled for the first Monday in November. Dame Rumor has started talk around town that this meeting will be the warmest that has ever graced the city council Chi Oh!

Contrary to current rumors, that some of the players of both the Cardinals and the Athletics are laid up, etc., it is safe bet-ting that Connie Mack and Connie Mack will have their regular teams facing the barrier tomorrow when the first baseball classic opens. Many are guessing that Lefty Grove alone will start on the mound, while Gabby Street has announced that Derringer will get the assignment of trying to stop the slugging "A's" in the first game. St. Louis, Nationals, vs. the Philadelphia Americans, is the game, take your choice.

Recording Lu, a lister reed in the Kingston Whig-Standard said, week, that Frank Frisch was not letting any trade under their jurisdiction. Are hot-foot after "Heat" Gibson and "Curly" Ogden, of Oshawa. That might be a Frisch from King-ston's standpoint....but...what of Oshawa and Belleville? There was talk of the Motor City cutting back into the Central League next season, but if the Oshawa boys take this step let and back up the Nationals and the Oshawa clubs, well, we ask you, who will the Packs play against? Of course we can't blame Gibson a bit if something has been done locally, to try and establish him in the Packs during the coming winter. One can't live on snowfalls.

But on the other hand we hear that Kingston approached Gibson before he was transferred to the east season with the Nationals. Evidently Jerrigan is playing his first year with Cardinals, a 27 years old, born in Springfield, Ky. Derringer was in the league service from 1926 to 18, and lost 8. He is a right hander and has a fine assortment of speed change of pace, with an excellent curve ball and good speed. He is a rangy youngster, 6 feet 1 1-2 inches tall and weighing 215 pounds.

THE LAW OF AVERAGES FAVORS THE CARDINALS

But the strength of teams favors the Athletics to win their third consecutive world series. Connie Mack, the peer of all baseball leaders has developed a wonder team—one that is reputed to be stronger than his famous aggregation of 1913-14, which he broke up because it won too many games. To date, the Philadelphia Athletics have won five world series and lost two for a record only equalled by the Boston Red Sox who have won it each of the five times they played. If the A's win this year they will have established just another record. (They've been hanging up new records all season). The Cardinals have only appeared in three world series losing two and winning one in 1926. On paper the A's should win hands down. But baseball is a game about which no one can make safe predictions. Grove, the A's ace is quite as strong. On the Cards side of the fence sits Wild Bill Hallahan, the strikeout artist, who will give the A's a taste of fast-ball pitching than they have had to face all season. In all it looks like a big series, and although Mack's team is favored to win now, they will probably be at even money by game time.

MANY QUESTIONS

Mr. S.-Artis suggested that if Canadians wanted Canadian coal they would give the railroads their own medicine. He stated that Alberta coal could be purchased at $4.75 per ton. Mr. Artis stated that he had brought up the question with the City Council at the last meeting, but that he received no consideration at all. He was of the opinion that the C.N.R. could make considerable money if they would come behind the Alberta coal issue as the Government of Canada would help the cause of Canadian coal financially. Mr. Artis suggested that the meeting bring to bear upon representatives of the laws influence to show them that it was to the interest of the whole the C.N.R., but Canadians at large. He asked that the local merchants refrain from buying United States merchandise as long as they discriminated Canadian money. He showed that Canada spent $300,000,000 more in American goods, than the consumers in the United States spent for Canadian manufactured goods. In closing Mr. Artis stated that by using Alberta coal Canadians would employ at least $3,000 railroad men in Canada.

The chairman assured the meeting that the merchants and retailers of Belleville were good users of the railroads instead of trucks in the future. The speech was received with hearty applause.

Farmers in North?

Mr. Wm. Haymer stated that he did not think it fair that farmers' sons should get employment in the labor battalions, which were being sent up north. He pointed out that the local factories had been the backbone of this town for years during the winter months, which often left many men out of work.

Mr. Parks, on behalf of the carpenters, said that they had just accepted a cut of 10 cents per hour on the addition to the school, and they had also just accepted as craftsmen on the school work. He stated that the school board had delayed in their construct-a-tion, thru which losing two and winning out in 1926. On paper the A's should win hands down. But baseball is a game about which no one can make safe predictions. Grove, the A's ace is quite as strong. On the Cards side of the fence sits Wild Bill Hallahan, the strikeout artist, who will give the A's a taste of fast-ball pitching than they have had to face all season. In all it looks like a big series, and although Mack's team is favored to win now, they will probably be at even money by game time.

voice from the rear of the room asked: "What is the city council doing about the unemployment condition in this city at present?" At once there was a cry, "Put in a new council." The chairman rose and advised all present to attend all council meetings when possible. Mr. Parks, of the Trades and Labor Council, stated that he had invited the laborers to their meetings but the largest turnout to date was about four laborers. He told the meeting that the Trades and Labor meetings were held on the first Wednesday of every month and they welcomed all. The chairman stated, that the men did not have the money to join the Trades and Labor Council at this time but he urged them to join when they got work. "We feel financially."

All, Looker Spoke

Alderman Looker, then took the floor and said that he was personally surprised to see so many present. Mr. Looker stated that the council had been very much on the low in Belleville was because labor had not organized in the past. When answering a question, he said that the wages paid were regulated in the past what a contractor company should pay" in the matter of wages. Alderman Looker went on to say that the property owners had told all that goes on in the committee room of the city council. "Why?" asked Mr. Looker. "Why?" Mr. Looker did not answer.

Alderman Looker stated that he tried to look after the interests of the workingmen and that the Front Street pavement question was brought up. He stated that he did not think it fair that farmers' sons should get employment in the labor battalions, which were being sent up north. He pointed out that the local factories had been the backbone of this town for years during the winter months, which often left many men out of work.

Mr. Parks, on behalf of the carpenters, said that they had just accepted a cut of 10 cents per hour on the addition to the school, and they had also just accepted as craftsmen on the school work. He stated that the school board had delayed in their construct-a-tion, thru which losing two and winning out instead of rail. He also thought that there had not been enough local men employed in the construction on the addition to the school during this summer. The chairman congratulated the carpenters on accepting a cut of wages at this time.

Mr. "Ye" Larmer wanted to know why all could not get a job from the Government Employment Office. The speaker suggested that a deputation be sent in this regard to the meeting on Thursday evening. Mr. Laymer thought that "if we spent our money in Belleville that perhaps all might get work."

Idleness and Council

At this point of the meeting a question from the city council monthly meetings.

Before he could answer Mr. Worrell asked: "Where has the relief money gone?" There was no answer to Mr. Worrell's question.

If For Cent. Meant

Mr. Ali Harrow was next to take the floor and he welcomed the unemployed to the True Blue Hall and assured them that they would be welcome at all times. The True Blue had supplies the accommodation for the needy people and they were willing to help the unemployed. He stated that the weather was far from the expectations of the committee and was glad to see so many laborers present.

Mr. Hanna asked for a count of the single and married men present who were out of work. After a count it was estimated that about 85 per cent of the men present were married men. At this time some one piped up: "I'm single but have another bad work for the past six months." The chairman then arose and asked: "What are you going to do about it?" The cry arose "Organize." Mr. Hanna suggested that a committee be appointed and that a committee to meet the City Council on Thursday night. After consideration it was decided that the committee be enlarged, to Messrs Parks, Baldrey, Wheeler, Worrell and Charles Hanna. This motion was applauded by the meeting and although they shall be working hard in the matter of putting him on the committee he assured them that he would do all in his power to help the boys.

At this time someone suggested a day for the meeting, but at once the cry arose "We do not want charity but work is all we ask." The chairman then announced all come to the meeting on Thursday night, but only those genuine were to attend.

A vote of thanks was then extended to True Blues' Lodge for the use of their rooms. Then a vote of thanks to the literary rounds of applause from those present. The chairman then thanked the representatives for the kind words that had been spoken upon and assured them that he would help them to the best of his ability.

Mr. Hanna wished to thank those who had provided refreshments, Russell Wotton, Wonnacott, Ed. Thomas, J. H. Bellamy, Hall, Bill Cross, Bill McLean, National Billiard Parlors, Frankford, J. Kilner, Tip Tailors, J. S. McKeown, Dr. Dr. Dragging, Marsaken and Mc-Gill Motors.

With three hearty cheers for the True Blues Lodge the meeting broke up and all dispersed

STAMPEDE FOR GOLD STARTED

Seventy Dollar Ton Gold Quartz Found in Yukon

White Horse, Yukon Territory, Sept. 30.—Gold quartz, discovered on Hunker creek, about 1,200 feet above the stream, started a stampede yesterday of Alaskans and Canadian miners to Livingstone Creek, in the back-country of the big Salmon River, Southern Yukon.

Tom Koloff who has been scouting northern Yukon for the past four years made the discovery. The gold is reported to assay as high as $70 a ton.

Famous Names on Old Hotel Registers

Kingston, Sept. 30—Michael Bohan, who has sold the lease of the old British American Hotel, established 123 years ago, has presented several old registers of the booksley to the Kingston Public Library. These registers show that Lord Elgin and Lord Monck, former Governors-General of Canada, signed as guests. John Bright, the great English free trader, registered in 1867. Other names appearing with Bright's are those of Lord Stanley and Viscount Amberley, Hon. John A. Said Wife Did Not Pray Enough

Toronto, Sept. 30.—Said by the police to have threatened to throw his wife, Thelma, out of the window because she wasn't praying often enough to suit him, Frank Halley, 41, who conducts a revival mission on Queen street east, was arrested last night on a charge of intimidation by Detective Cliff Mosher of the East Dundas Street station.

Halley, police state, has had a number of arguments with his wife regarding the efficacy of persistent and direct prayer. He told the police that he believes in persistent praying and that he had no intention of harming his wife. Mrs. Halley swore out a warrant on Monday alleging that he had threatened to do her bodily harm.

Last night Halley was taken into custody in his living apartments over the mission.

$20,000,000 in Gold Shipped From U. S

New York, N.Y., Sept. 29 —Approximately $20,000,000 in gold, the largest shipment to leave the United States in a single day in more than two years, went on an ocean voyage today, bound for Switzerland and France.

Withdrawn yesterday from the New York Federal Reserve Bank, by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, it was locked in the great vaults of two of the fastest liners plying the Atlantic, the Europa, and the Aquitania. Speed is essential because of the loss of interest on the gold while in transit, British said.

A strong recommendation for mercy came with the jury's verdict and will be forwarded to the Department of Justice at Ottawa, according to an announcement made by the Chief Justice in passing sentence.

Canon Guy Rogers Is Not Downhearted Over Depression

New York, Sept. 30 — "Capitalism is a bit shaky, isn't it?" asked T. Guy Rogers, of Birmingham, chaplain to the King, yesterday aboard an interviewer.

Canon Rogers smiled broadly as he asked the question. "I am far from being downhearted" he declared. "It is the greatest of times to be alive, when old systems are changing, when things we considered stable are crumbling away. I am glad to see us lose confidence in the power of one nation to look after itself."

Canon Rogers said he saw a new birth for the world growing out of the present confusion.

White Pleased With Gold Abandonment

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 30 — Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance at Ottawa, during the war period and a close student of world economic conditions, is a decided optimist, in the matter of the abandonment of the gold standard by Britain. "The suspension of the gold standard by Britain," he said in a statement to the Canadian Press, "was a necessary measure in the circumstances in which she found herself and will probably prove a blessing in disguise to herself and the world, because more than anything else it will call a halt to the dropping price level for commodities, stimulate trade and industry and assist in bringing about a fairer distribution of the gold reserves of the world—the real distribution of which is so largely responsible for the fall in prices of commodities in all parts of the world."

SURCHARGE ADDED

Simla, India, Sept. 30—A temporary surcharge of 25 per cent on all existing taxes, except customs and export duties, was among the provisions of a budget introduced in the legislative assembly yesterday by Sir George Schuster, Minister of Finance.
